Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by C. P. Stevens against Christy Chisholm. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank McGowan, of San Francisco, Arthur Lindauer, of Vallejo, and Blaine McGowan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. The plaintiff, an attorney at law, was successful in an action for damages for malicious prosecution. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

In their brief, counsel for appellant contend that actions for alleged malicious prosecution of civil causes are not favored by law; that as matter of law, under undisputed testimony, the court should have found that defendant had probable cause for instituting the action against Mr. Stevens; that evidence of malice is entirely lacking; and that defendant is relieved of liability because she acted upon advice of counsel in bringing suit against said Stevens. As all of these contentions are discussed and proper conclusions reached in an opinion filed by the Hon. Malcolm C. Glenn, who presided at the trial in the superior court, we hereby adopt the said opinion, which is as follows:

"Plaintiff sues to recover damages for the alleged malicious prosecution by defendant of a certain action instituted by her against plaintiff and one L. B. Cooper, in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Solano.

"In the month of February, 1908, Flora Avilla (now Mrs. Flora Crockett) was the owner of a certain shoe store located at Benicia. At that time she entered into negotiations for the sale of the business to defendant herein. Said Cooper was her nephew-in-law and also was the stepson of plaintiff, C. P. Stevens. All the parties were friendly at that time. Defendant's main object in buying said business was to assist and aid said Cooper, whom she intended to, and subsequently after the purchase did, put in charge thereof. In carrying out the details of the transfer, the usual notice of intended sale and purchase was recorded; also, a written agreement was made and entered into between Flora Avilla, as the seller, and Christy Chisholm, as the purchaser, embodying the terms and conditions thereof, wherein it was provided that the purchase price should be 97½ per cent. of the inventoried value of the stock, the inventory to be thereafter taken. The purchase price was to be paid as follows: $300 being paid down as a deposit, $1,700 to be paid in cash, and the balance to be evidenced by a promissory note of Christy Chisholm, payable one day after date, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum. Flora Avilla was represented in the transaction by Messrs. Lippett & Lippett, attorneys at law, and Christy Chisholm by C. P. Stevens, who was then and is now an attorney at law. Subsequently an inventory was taken of the stock, which amounted to something over $4,300. Thereupon the deal was closed, to the apparent satisfaction of all parties concerned.

"While there seems to be a strong intimation that prior to the month of December, 1915, to be hereafter referred to, the friendly relations existing during the original transaction between Stevens, Cooper, and defendant had become somewhat strained, yet we find nothing bearing directly on the transaction until said last-mentioned date. At that time, Kay Frame, a relative of defendant, who had been placed in possession of the premises occupied as a shoe store, and formerly conducted by Cooper, discovered a promissory note for $2,275.24, purporting to have been signed by Christy Chisholm, together with several checks made by Cooper and payable to Stevens. The finding of the note under the circumstances as related by Frame, together with the canceled checks, was communicated to defendant. Defendant, having lost a considerable sum of money in the business as conducted by Cooper, felt none too friendly towards Cooper and Stevens, and, upon the relating of the facts to her by Frame concerning the finding of the note and the checks, she immediately suspected that in the transaction of February, 1908, she had been defrauded. Upon reporting the matter to her attorney, the latter advised her to see Mrs. Avilla. This she did. Defendant testified that she was told by Mrs. Avilla that the amount of the note, $2,275.24, and $300 was all she had received. That nothing was said about the payment of any bills. A letter was later written under Mrs. Avilla's direction stating that, if Lippett & Lippett stated that the purchase price was $2,200, then that amount must be correct. The latter firm was written to, but their answer threw no particular light on the subject. A letter was also written to Stevens and Cooper stating in effect that they were indebted to defendant in the sum of $925, but failed to disclose the facts or circumstances by reason of which the said amount was claimed to be due her. In reply to this letter, the plaintiff denied in positive terms that there was any sum whatever due or owing as claimed.

"Subsequently, an action was commenced by defendant against Stevens and Cooper for the recovery of the sum of $925, it being alleged in the complaint that defendants therein had conspired together to defraud and had defrauded her out of said sum of money and had appropriated the same to their own use. After issue joined, plaintiff dismissed said action.

"That the allegations in the complaint in the action of Chisholm v. Stevens, whereby said last-mentioned parties were charged to have conspired together to defraud and to have defrauded the said plaintiff therein of the sum of $925, were untrue, appears conclusively, nor was any attempt made either in that case or in this to substantiate such charges. Indeed, it is admitted in this case that the said action was dismissed by defendant as soon as she discovered the incorrectness of the allegations of her complaint. There being no foundation in fact for the charges thus made, what then were the circumstances claimed by defendant upon which her alleged cause of action was predicated? Defendant asserts that she had personally paid but little attention to the transaction, leaving the matter to her attorney Stevens, who had promised to look out for her; that her remembrance was that she had signed a note for $3,500, and furthermore both Cooper and Stevens had told her the purchase price was $3,500; that she never signed the note for $2,275.24 found by witness Frame and that her name was forged thereto; that this note was not the note contemplated in the agreement, and had been apparently secreted; that Mrs. Avilla had positively assured her that all she received as the purchase price was $300 in cash and the note referred to; she had written both Stevens and Cooper in regard to her claim, the former contenting himself with a caustic reply, and the latter failing to reply at all.

"In the original transaction between the parties, Stevens represented defendant in the matter of looking over the papers and attending to the legal aspects thereof. He did all that ordinarily would be expected of an attorney. That the legal phases of the transaction were properly attended to has not been questioned. But the defendant asserts that he promised to also look out for her interests in the matter, leaving the impression that Stevens was to keep in touch with the business thereafter to be managed by Cooper, and to protect defendant's interests therein. The testimony fails to substantiate anything further than that plaintiff was representing defendant as the purchaser in the transfer to her of the shoe business and looking out for her interests in that regard; furthermore, the allegations of the complaint in the suit brought by defendant have reference to fraud and conspiracy in the original transaction, and therefore, whatever may have occurred subsequently, in the conduct of the business by Cooper, can have no significance in this case, unless such subsequent conduct is shown to have some bearing on the question of fraud in connection with said original transaction. No such proof was offered.

"The fact has been established that the purchase price was 97½ per cent. of the inventoried value of the stock of goods, and the defendant knew that such was to be the purchase price; whether she subsequently learned that the stock had inventoried at a little over $4,300, or had been told by Cooper and Stevens that it was $3,500, seems to be of no particular importance, excepting as fixing the amount which defendant would have been entitled to if she had shown in her suit against Stevens and Cooper that Mrs. Avilla had only received the promissory note for $2,275.24 plus $300 in cash; for, if Mrs. Chisholm had then discovered that the real purchase price was $4,300, the amount claimed in said suit would have been augmented accordingly. If this case was based upon the claim that Stevens and Cooper had represented that the purchase price was more than it actually was, for the purpose of retaining the difference, an entirely different situation would be presented, and the reason for such a representation would be at once apparent; but the claim is that the purchase price was represented to be less than in fact it was. Under such circumstances, no reason is apparent, nor has any been suggested, why such representations should have been made, nor what advantage either Stevens or Cooper expected to realize by the making of such representations. In addition, the notes signed by defendant, together with the cash deposit paid by her, demonstrate that at the time the transaction was closed she knew the amount of the purchase price. It may be that in the preliminary negotiations some mention was made as to the purchase price being $3,500, but no proof was offered in regard to such being the fact.

"Defendant claims that the note for $2,275.24 is a forgery, the reasons assigned for such assertion being that she did not sign it, and that while it looks very similar to her signature the letter 'm' is not turned like hers, and the signature is in a lighter hand. Considering the evidence in the case as well as the signature to the note itself, the court unhesitatingly finds the signature to be that of defendant; nor is defendant's denial of the genuineness of the signature any stronger than the reasons assigned therefor. Her signature has many peculiar characteristics, and I fail to find any dissimilarity between the signature under discussion and other signatures admittedly signed by defendant either in the particulars suggested or in any other respect. Whether defendant claimed that this note was a forgery at the time her suit against plaintiff and Cooper was commenced has not been argued by counsel, but this note seems at least to have been used as a basis for the determination of the sum therein sued for, to wit, $925, and no other note for a like sum has been referred to.

"In regard to the conversation between Mrs. Avilla and defendant in which conversation defendant claims nothing was said in respect to the payment of any bills, I am of the opinion that the only conclusion which a reasonable person could have drawn from that conversation was that Mrs. Avilla had forgotten the details of the original transaction, and that her remembrance was not to be depended upon. This conclusion is but a natural one under the circumstances, for the transaction had been closed some six or seven years. Beyond this, however, we have the testimony of Mrs. Avilla, together with a letter subsequently written under her direction, showing that she did not pretend to remember some of the details of the transaction; again, her manner as well as her testimony while on the witness stand indicated plainly that the details of the transaction had passed from her mind, and only by refreshing her memory by an inspection of the various bank records and other papers was she able to recall the details thereof.

[1] "From the foregoing, as well as from the many other circumstances in the case which I have deemed unnecessary to refer to in detail, it appears that the plaintiff has affirmatively shown a want of probable cause on the part of defendant in the institution by the latter of the action hereinbefore referred to, and I fail to find any circumstance or circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable person in the belief that the charges of conspiracy and fraud were true, or that the defendants in that action were indebted to the plaintiff therein in any sum whatever by reason of the transaction involving the purchase of the said shoe store business.

[2] "In regard to the question of malice, I likewise hold that the same has been established by the facts in the case. There was no evidence whatever tending to show conspiracy or fraud on the part of plaintiff, nor were there any facts or circumstances upon which a reasonable person might suspicion fraud or conspiracy. The note which defendant alleges was a forgery was not in fact such; the transactions at the bank when defendant signed the various notes were known to her; defendant was aware of the terms of the contract entered into with Mrs. Avilla for she had signed and kept a copy of the agreement. She knew that the stock was to be inventoried and that the amount of the purchase price was to be a certain percentage of the inventoried value, and subsequently she signed notes which together with the cash deposit made at the date of the original agreement totaled the said percentage agreed upon as the purchase price.

[3] "Under these facts, the advice of counsel cannot be successfully set up as a defense to the action.

[4, 5] "Defendant objects to the allowance of any damages for costs incurred by plaintiff in said action hereinbefore referred to, on the ground that the complaint fails to state that the amount of such costs so incurred is a reasonable sum, citing in support thereof several cases. In the first case cited, Eastin v. Bank of Stockton, 66 Cal. 123, 4 Pac. 1106, 56 Am. St. Rep. 77, the allegations of the complaint in regard to attorneys' fees and costs were similar to the allegations in the case at bar, it being alleged that the plaintiff 'was obliged to employ counsel to defend the suit at a cost of $600. * * *'. No question was presented as to the insufficiency of this allegation, but the point decided was that the court failed to instruct the jury that only such allowance could be made as would be reasonable and proper. Marshall v. Betner, 17 Ala. 832, likewise fails to support the contention of defendant. On the other hand, it has been expressly held in that state that such an allegation is unnecessary. Strain v. Irwin, 195 Ala. 414, 70 South. 734. In the last-mentioned case the allegation in the complaint was as follows: 'Plaintiff avers that he incurred a liability of $25 as attorney's fee for services of attorney in representing him in said prosecution, and in procuring his discharge, and said sum is hereby claimed as special damages.' There was no averment in regard to the reasonableness of such charge or liability, and the point was made that the allegation was insufficient. The court said: 'In such a count the claim for attorneys fees as damages, being no part of the cause of action, and being intended only as a warning to the defendant of an issue to be met, does not render the count demurrable, although it is not alleged that such a fee was either reasonable in amount or necessary in fact. These are questions of evidence merely.' In the case of Drumm v. Cessnum, 61 Kan. 467, 59 Pac. 1078, cited by defendant, it is said: 'Plaintiff below testified as to the expense he had been put to in defending himself from the charge brought against him, stating that it was about $500, consisting of $300 attorney's fee, and $200 in traveling back and forth. We can see no objection to the admission of this testimony or the recovery of the amounts stated. Wheeler v. Hanson, 161 Mass. 370, 37 N. E. 382, 42 Am. St. Rep. 408. When it does not appear that the attorneys' fees and other expenses are obviously excessive, testimony of the amounts paid will constitute a prima facie case; and it will be assumed in such case that the attorneys' fees so paid were reasonable, unless the contrary appears.' In the case of Wheeler v. Hanson, supra, it is said: 'The expenses to which the plaintiff was put in procuring sureties and in employing counsel were the direct and necessary result of the defendant's act, and constituted a part of the damages to which the plaintiff was subjected in consequence thereof (citing a large number of cases). It has been held more than once in this state that when the plaintiff has, in consequence of the wrongful conduct of the defendant, been put to expense in the employment of counsel, the amount so paid is an element of damage in an action against the defendant arising out of such wrongful conduct' (citing many cases).

"The special damage to the plaintiff therefore is the amount which he has been compelled to expend or incur in his defense, but he can only recover such part thereof as constitutes a necessary and reasonable charge; the latter question being one to be determined from the evidence."

[6] There was no error in permitting the introduction in evidence of all the papers in the former suit. The question of reasonable attorney's fee was an issue, and it was competent for plaintiff here to show the amount of work done by the attorney in the former case.

[7] The court properly refused to permit Mrs. Chisholm to testify regarding the declarations of a witness in an action by a bank against her that $3,500 was the purchase price of the shoe store at Benicia. Such testimony would have been hearsay, and moreover she was in a position to know that, if made, the alleged statement was false.

[8] The court refused to admit in evidence a purported receipt bearing the name of Mrs. Avilla. This ruling was proper. There was nothing in the testimony to connect this receipt in any way with Mr. Stevens or his conduct of Mrs. Chisholm's business.

[9] It was also proper to sustain objections to the testimony of Miss McArthur by which she sought to repeat certain declarations regarding a note for $1,200 made by Mrs. Chisholm to Mr. Cooper. There was no explanation at the trial, nor is there any satisfactory one in appellant's brief, that such testimony could be relevant to the issues being then tried.

No other alleged errors require notice.
The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; WILBUR, J.

PEOPLE v. TYREN. (Cr. 2201.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1166½(6)—HARMLESS ERROR—LIMITING EXAMINATION OF TALESMEN.

Where defendant charged with murder, having exercised only 13 of his 20 peremptory challenges, could have removed from the box any or all of three talesmen whose examination on voir dire was limited by court, if he had doubt as to their desirability as jurors, he was not prejudiced by limitation of examination.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1170(4) — HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In prosecution for murder, any error in excluding testimony of defendant's former employer as to what illness he had formerly complained of held harmless; matter not being excluded absolutely, and witness later testifying in full on subject.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡452(1) — EVIDENCE — OPINION.

Former employer of defendant charged with murder, after testifying that defendant was nervous, trembly, and as if spitting from his mouth, was not qualified to give opinion that he had apoplectic fit.

4. HOMICIDE ⚡339 — HARMLESS ERROR — EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In prosecution for murder of defendant's children, any error in sustaining objections to questions put to witness to show that defendant was fond of children was harmless, where witness was later permitted to describe defendant's conduct and demeanor toward them, etc.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1144(12) — APPEAL — PRESUMPTION—REJECTION OF EVIDENCE.

Error in exclusion of evidence must be shown affirmatively, and action of court below in excluding evidence, such as two photographs, not incorporated in record, will be presumed to be correct unless record is made to show their character and admissibility.

6. WITNESSES ⚡277(4) — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF DEFENDANT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1323, it was not error to permit defendant charged with murder of his children to be cross-examined on subject of what he had written on back of summons served on him on behalf of his wife; he having testified that he had no memory of what had occurred that day.

7. HOMICIDE ⚡340(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—UNNECESSARY INSTRUCTION.

In prosecution for murder of defendant's children, instruction with reference to irresistible impulse, no such defense being interposed, held harmless to defendant.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡829(1) — TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

There was no error in refusing instructions requested by defendant, which, so far as correctly stating the law, were governed by those given by the court of its own motion, or at the request of the prosecution.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

James Tyren was convicted of murder in the first degree, and, from the judgment and order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Mark L. Burns, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SLOSS, J. The defendant was convicted of murder of the first degree and sentenced to death. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only defense sought to be made at the trial was that of insanity. No question is, or could be, made of the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the commission of the homicide by the defendant. It is conceded, as well, that the jury was warranted in finding against the plea of insanity. The appeal is rested upon the claim of error in the conduct of the trial. For a proper understanding of the points made, a brief outline of the facts may be given.

The defendant, Tyren, lived at Sacramento with his wife and two children, one a boy of about twelve years, who had been adopted in infancy by the Tyrens, the other a girl of seven years. The murder charged was that of the boy, Holland Tyren. The family had been living in a house on J street, in Sacramento. Early in May, 1918, differences arose between Tyren and his wife, and the latter left the family home, taking the children with her. She instituted an action for divorce, praying in her complaint for alimony, an award of community property, and the custody of the children. Summons in this action was served on the defendant on the 6th of May, 1918. On the following day, May 7th, the children, who were attending school, went to the home on J street during the noon recess, and there had their midday meal with the defendant. They attended the afternoon session of school, which closed about 3 o'clock. They did not return to their mother's new abode, and in the evening of the same day, alarmed by their absence, she caused search for them to be made. Two police officers, together with her attorney, went to the defendant's house on J street. They entered, made their way to a bathroom on the second floor, and there found the bathtub half filled with water strongly tinged with the color of blood. In an adjoining room, lying upon a bed, were the dead bodies of the two children, and kneeling by the side of the bed was the defendant with a gash, apparently self-inflicted, in his throat. Testimony of physicians tended to show that the boy, Holland, had been strangled to death, and that his body had been immersed in the water of the tub while he was being strangled, or shortly thereafter.

[1] The appellant's first contention is that the court erred in sustaining objections of the district attorney to various questions asked of talesmen on their examination on voir dire. Nearly all of these questions were improper, and if, in one or two instances, the ruling may have been somewhat strict, it must be held that the defendant was not prejudiced thereby. The defendant exercised only 13 of the 20 peremptory challenges allowed him by law. Objections were sustained in the examination of but three of the talesmen who ultimately found places on the jury. The defendant had it in his power to remove from the box any or all of the three, if he had any doubt regarding their desirability as jurors. The ensuing situation was therefore the result of his own acquiescence, and he cannot complain of it. This is the settled rule where a challenge for cause has been erroneously overruled. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 196, 48 Pac. 75; People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85, 88, 50 Pac. 390; People v. Schafer, 161 Cal. 573, 577, 119 Pac. 920. And the reasons on which it is based apply equally to a case like the present, where it is claimed that the court erred in limiting the examination of talesmen. See People v. Freeman, 92 Cal. 359, 365, 28 Pac. 261.

The appellant makes a number of assignments of error in the admission or rejection of evidence. Taken singly or collectively they have little substantial merit. The gravity of the case requires, however, that those which are argued be given brief notice.

[2, 3] One Gray was called by the defendant as a witness to support the plea of insanity. He testified that the defendant, Tyren, had been in his employ some ten years before the trial, and that he had at that time complained of ailments. He was then asked: "Q. Well now, you may state what he complained of." And to this question the court sustained an objection. The ruling, if erroneous, was harmless. In the first place, the matter sought to be elicited was not excluded absolutely. In making its ruling, the court directed counsel for the defendant to take up one complaint at a time, and thus afforded ample opportunity to go on with the inquiry. Furthermore, other questions were put, and, in answer to them, the witness did testify fully on the subject. The same witness, after testifying that on one occasion the defendant "was nervous, trembly, and kind of as if he was spitting a little from his mouth," added, "I thought he had an apoplectic fit." The court ordered the last statement stricken out. The ruling was obviously correct. The witness was not qualified to give an opinion of the nature of Tyren's ailment.

[4] The defendant undertook to show that he had always manifested a deep affection for his children, and was allowed to develop the point in considerable detail. The appellant urges that the court erred in sustaining objections to one or two questions put to the witness Ford on this line. The witness was, however, permitted to describe Tyren's conduct and demeanor toward his children, his testimony being to the effect that he appeared "very affectionate towards the children." The defendant had the benefit of everything of substantial importance that he desired to prove by this witness.

Objections to questions asked of defendant's witnesses Weaver and Barrett were properly sustained on the ground that the questions were leading and suggestive. Furthermore, in the case of the latter witness, the subject was fully covered by the answer to a question put after the ruling complained of.

[5] The court sustained an objection to defendant's offer in evidence of two photographs of himself, taken about a week after the homicide. It is claimed that they tended to support the appellant's claims regarding his mental condition. But this does not appear. The photographs are not incorporated in the record, and there is nothing before us to show that they had any relevancy whatever. Error must be shown affirmatively, and the action of the court below in rejecting evidence will be presumed to be correct, unless the record is made to show the character and the admissibility of such evidence. 4 C. J. 760; Barrell v. L. V. L. Co., 122 Cal. 129, 54 Pac. 594; In re Angle, 148 Cal. 102, 82 Pac. 668.

Any error that may have been committed in excluding testimony of the defendant regarding the effect upon his mind of the war and of the war pictures which he had seen displayed in theaters was fully cured by the action of the court in permitting him to testify fully on this subject at a later stage.

[6] The defendant took the stand as a witness in his own behalf. He testified at length regarding the relations between himself, his wife, and his children, and gave a full account of his actions upon the day of the homicide (May 7th) up to the return of the children to school in the afternoon. He had, so he declared, no memory or knowledge of anything that had occurred from the time the children left the house until he found himself in the hospital on the following day. On cross-examination he was asked to state whether he had written a certain indorsement on the summons which had been served upon him. The writing, which was subsequently admitted in evidence, was addressed to the defendant's wife. After declaring that the allegations of her complaint were false, it went on to say:

"Now that I have worked so hard for what we have got and you want to take the children and everything in it is too much for me and I never was in court and I hope I never will be only before my God and you will suffer just as much as I by the time you see this I hope me and my boy and my little sunshine will be no more trouble to from yours James Tyren." (The defendant was in the habit of referring to his little daughter as "Sunshine.")

It was not error to permit the defendant to be cross-examined on this subject. Where a defendant testifies in his own behalf, he may be cross-examined "as to all matters about which he was examined in chief." Pen. Code, § 1323. "The cross-examination may extend to the whole transaction, of which he gives a part" (People v. Teshara, 141 Cal. 633, 75 Pac. 338), and may be directed to the eliciting of any matter which may tend to overcome or qualify the effect of the testimony given by him on his direct examination (People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 475, 476, 35 Pac. 80; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 388, 389, 77 Pac. 169; People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 378, 149 Pac. 821). The defendant's testimony regarding his mental condition on May 7th was designed to show that, if he had in fact killed the boy, his act had been committed without consciousness or volition on his part. But the notation on the summons might well be interpreted as a declaration by him of a definite purpose and intent to kill both children. The identification and introduction of the paper were directly connected with the matter concerning which the defendant had testified in chief.

[7] Finally, the appellant complains of the action of the court in giving certain instructions and in refusing others. We see no error in any of the instructions given. The court charged the jury carefully and impartially regarding the rules of law governing the case. The subject of insanity was adequately and correctly covered. There is no merit in the claim that the court failed to make it clear that the question in this regard turned upon the state of the defendant's mind at the time of the alleged commission of the act charged. Taking the charge as a whole, the jury could not have been left in any uncertainty on this point. One of the instructions on the subject of insanity is more particularly criticized, the claim being made that the jury were directed to find the defendant guilty although they believed him to be insane. Without quoting the instruction in full, we may say that this contention is based upon a strained interpretation of the language. While the instruction may have been inartistically phrased, its purport plainly was that the defendant is to be found guilty only if the jury should conclude that he had not sustained the burden of proving insanity. The court gave an instruction with reference to irresistible impulse, and the point made is that no such defense was interposed in the case. But we cannot see that the giving of the instruction could have prejudiced the defendant in any way. The same observation may be made regarding the succeeding instruction, which dealt with partial insanity.

[8] With respect to the instructions requested by the defendant and refused, it will suffice to say that, so far as they correctly stated the law, they were covered by the instructions given by the court of its own motion or at the request of the prosecution.

On the whole case, we see no ground for interfering with the judgment. The judge below conducted the proceedings with marked fairness and patience, and every substantial right of the defendant was accorded him.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Ex parte GONO.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 13—STATUTES—USE OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE—CONSTITUTION.

Pen. Code, § 288a, denouncing offenses of "fellatio" and "cunnilingus," held violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, as not in English.

2. CRIMINAL LAW 13—CREATION OF OFFENSE—UNCERTAINTY.

Pen. Code, § 288a, denouncing offenses of fellatio and cunnilingus, is void for uncertainty and vagueness.

Wilbur, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Applications by Clarence Lockett and Don A. Gono for writs of habeas corpus. Prisoners discharged.

Edwin V. McKenzie, Harry A. McKenzie, A. S. Newburgh, and Oscar Hudson, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

John H. Riordan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Both petitioners are held, one under commitment after preliminary examination, and the other after such commitment and the filing of an information. Each is charged with an offense sought to be defined by section 288a of the Penal Code by the use of the word "fellatio." The sole question involved in each petition is whether or not the section is constitutional; therefore we shall examine and consider both petitions together.

It is contended on behalf of both petitioners that the statute is unconstitutional because it is not in the English language, and because it is so indefinite and uncertain and unintelligible that it fails to inform a person charged thereunder with reasonable precision what acts are intended to be denounced by it, and therefore denies "due process of law" to any one prosecuted for its supposed violation.

The constitutionality of the same statute was considered by this court in a proceeding entitled "In the matter of the Application of William R. Soady for a Writ of Habeas Corpus," a bare majority of the justices holding it to be constitutional. 56 Cal. Dec. 247. Subsequently the court of its own motion granted a rehearing, but, as the petitioner had meanwhile been tried and acquitted, the proceeding became of merely academic interest, and was therefore very properly dismissed. In that proceeding the author of this opinion was a dissenter from the views held originally by a majority of the court, and wrote an opinion in which he attempted to set forth his views. As no one concurred in the language of that opinion (although two of the justices reached the same conclusion), the writer of this opinion will take the liberty of adopting herein some of the same language without the formality of quotation marks.

The section in question is in the words and figures following:

"The acts technically known as fellatio and cunnilingus are hereby declared to be felonies and any person convicted of the commission of either thereof shall be punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than fifteen years."

As published in the Penal Code the statute contains no hint of its meaning except the two unusual words, with the first one of which we are here concerned; but as originally enacted it contained the preliminary recital that it was "an act to add a new section to the Penal Code, to be numbered 288a, relating to sex perversions and defining the same to be felonies."

This forms the only hint of the purpose of the Legislature in enacting the section; but unless the word "fellatio" itself is an English word, which clearly expresses an exact meaning, the hint furnished by the title is of little value.

That the Legislature, in the exercise of its power to define crimes and to provide for the punishment of offenses, should make laws tending to the suppression of sins against decency is most commendable, and that statutes should be drawn in language to offend the sensibilities of normal people to as small a degree as possible is a truth that none should gainsay; yet so important is the liberty of the individual that it may not be taken away even from the most debased wretch in the land, except upon conviction of a crime which has been so clearly defined that all might know in what act or omission the violation of the law should consist. For this reason the people, through their Constitution, have wisely decreed that all laws, all official writings, shall be preserved and published in the English language. It is also true that in construing statutes courts should readily regard the words from other languages as being Anglicized, and therefore as escaping the constitutional objection in all cases where they had come into common use or were easily understood by reference to lexicons commonly accessible, and that in the interests of decency courts should sanction the use of such words euphemistically employed to describe offenses against morality, thus avoiding the bald nastiness involved in the use of the vernacular, if the words in the statutes from other languages than our own bore clear, definite meanings easily ascertained. This court should do much to uphold the Legislature in its efforts to avoid shocking specifications in the definitions of crimes of indecency. But the faults of the statute before us arise from the circumstances that not only is the word "fellatio" one not found in the English language, but it is not a word having a definite, technical meaning either in law or in psychopathology.

The form of the word "fellatio" would indicate that it is a Latin word intended to denote the act of the "fellator," a word of ancient origin and use, derived from the verb "fellare," and applied originally to a child at its mother's breast, but having an acquired meaning as applied to a certain sort of degenerate person. Martial (Marcus Valerius Martialis), who wrote of the debased Romans of the latter part of the first and the early years of the second century (he who insisted that although his verses were sometimes obscene his life was not bad), used the word "fellator" in more than one of his epigrams. For example, in the fifty-ninth epigram of the twelfth book entitled "De Importunis Basiatoribus," in which the poet describes the annoyances to which importunate persons subject a man returning to Rome after a long absence, occurs the line, "Fellatorque, recensque cunnilingus." The seventy-fourth epigram of the fourteenth book is entitled "Corvus," and denies a popular libel upon that bird. The first line is as follows: "Corve saluator, quare fellator haberis?" meaning, "O crow, salutor, why are you called fellator?" The epithet "saluator" refers to the legend to the effect that a crow once addressed to Julius Caesar the words "Salve, Imperator!" In the thirtieth epigram of Book XI the word occurs in the form "fellatori." The last two lines of the sixty-sixth epigram in Book XI, in which the poet expresses surprise that the object of his lines has not accumulated money, are as follows:

"Et fellator es, et lanista: miror
"Quare non habeas, Vacerra, nummos."

In Book I, epigram 95, is the feminine form of the word in the title "Ad Æglen Fellatricem," and the word "fellatorum" in the ninety-fifth of Book XI.

The earliest use of the word "fellatio" which has been called to our attention is in a Latin note to Valpy's edition of Martial published in 1823, where it appears in the ablative "fellatione." It does not occur in any of the English dictionaries in common use. In Harper's Latin Dictionary is found the word "fellator" applied originally to a child at its mother's breast and having an acquired meaning with reference to a degenerate person. In Lippincott the word "fellator" is defined as "a Latin term for the pathic agent in irrumation." The word "irrumation," as therein defined, seems limited to the person upon whom a certain disgusting act is performed rather than the one practicing it. "Fellatio" is used and defined in Stedman's Medical Dictionary and in Dorland's American Illustrated Dictionary (published in 1917, two years after the adoption of section 288a of the Penal Code). In "Studies in the Psychology of Sex," by Havelock Ellis (Vol. VI, published in 1911), we find the word "fellatio" (pages 555, 557). In both paragraphs in which the word is employed the author seems to be describing an act committed by a woman upon a man. Whether he intended to limit the word to such relation of opposite sexes it is, of course, impossible for us to know. In the volume of the same work published in 1912 the word is again used not so much to describe the act as some of its consequences (Vol. V, p. 172). In the work known as "Psychopathia Sexualis," by Dr. K. v. Krafft-Ebing, Rebman's translation, edition of 1906, we find at page 504 the word "fellare" defined in Latin as the committing of an act upon a man by a woman.

Clearly "fellatio" is a Latin word, and, unless we can say that it has become Anglicized, the conclusion is unescapable that its use in the statute under review renders that section obnoxious to section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution of California. When the Matter of Soady was before the court Mr. Justice Lucien Shaw, in an opinion in which Mr. Justice Victor Shaw concurred, thus expressed the rule and its application to this statute:

"When a word from a foreign language has been used in English speech and writing so often that its meaning has become generally understood, it is said to have been Anglicized, and it is then a part of the English language, with the meaning it has acquired by such use. But the fact that a foreign word may be found in a medical dictionary, or in any other dictionary of technical words used by one of the learned professions, and that its meaning is there defined, does not establish it as a part of the English language. Such dictionaries define many words which are not in ordinary use, and of which none except men of the profession, and not all of them, know the meaning. Law dictionaries contain a large number of words and phrases from the Latin and French languages and give their meaning. Laws might easily be framed couched entirely in these words. It would not be considered that such a law was valid under our Constitution."

That the word "fellatio" has not become Anglicized is so clearly apparent that further comment seems unnecessary.

But it has been suggested that this court is bound to decide that the word is English in view of the presumption that an act of the Legislature is constitutional, and that where the existence or nonexistence of a fact or facts is involved in a law the determination of the Legislature may not be disturbed unless error clearly appears. One answer to this argument is that the Legislature has not found nor declared that the word is English, nor that it has been adopted by common use into the language. The section merely declares that there is an act "technically known as fellatio." To whom so known is not specified. To what technique, art, profession, cult, or practice the term belongs is not stated. The mere use of the word does not involve any presumption that the Legislature took evidence from which a conclusion was drawn that it was a legitimate English word. On the contrary, the statement of the law-makers that the act denounced is "technically" known as "fellatio" would seem to indicate that its meaning was familiar only to the members of the calling or profession using the word. Again, there is no attempt to define the word by the Legislature, and this court is charged with the duty of deciding whether or not it conveys any idea by the English language. If the rule for which contention is made were to attach to all language used in statutes, then would the court's duty to construe statutes stand helpless before an impassable wall of presumption. When the Legislature uses language in a statute we must interpret it as language. No peculiar sanctity attaches to it because it is language used in a legislative enactment. Ambiguity is not presumed to be intelligibility merely because it attaches to a statute, nor is hopeless obscurity illuminated by the fact that two houses have passed, and a busy governor has signed, a bill. In short, we may not declare "fellatio" Anglicized by presumption.

It has also been suggested that, because section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution succeeded a part of the old Constitution which required laws to be published in English and in Spanish, the mere function of the later provision was to dispense with the publication of statutes in Spanish. This contention is not tenable. With reference to the meaning of section 24 of article 4 of California's Constitution, it seems to me that, no matter what its origin and irrespective of the fact that it took the place of a former regulation for the publication of laws in two languages, it unmistakably requires that laws shall be published "in no other" than the English language. I care not what may be its origin. I am bound by its unambiguous terms. It means that English—understandable English—is to be used in the declaration of laws by the Legislature, and that failure to employ that language vitiates a statute. The Constitutions of other states that have never required publication of laws in a foreign language contain, or have contained, provisions similar to ours. In Illinois the language is just as emphatic as that used in our Constitution, which prescribes publication "in no other than the English language." Const. of Illinois 1848, § 18, Schedule; Const. of Illinois 1870, § 18, Schedule. The Constitution of Kansas of 1857 contained the following provision (section 3, art. 15): "The laws * * * and the written, judicial, and legislative proceedings of the state, shall be conducted, promulgated, and preserved in the English language." This has been omitted from later Constitutions. In Michigan there have been two constitutional provisions similar to ours: "The laws, public records, and the written judicial and legislative proceedings of the state, shall be conducted, promulgated and preserved in the English language." Const. of Michigan 1850, § 6, art. 18; Const. of Michigan 1908, § 6, art. 16. The mere fact that our constitutional provision on this subject historically follows a former requirement for publication of laws in Spanish does not alter in the slightest degree its plain meaning.

Nor is it surprising that no authority has been called to our attention whereby any law has been declared unconstitutional because not expressed in the English language. The absence of such authority would seem to indicate that the constitutional direction to legislate for English-speaking constituencies in the English language had been generally obeyed. Authority may be found, however, for the rejection of pleadings not drawn in English when the statutes prescribe that language, and surely the constitutional requirement that English and no other language may be used in our laws should receive a construction at least as strict as that applied to such statutes. In State v. Town of Jericho, 40 Vt. 121, 94 Am. Dec. 387, it was held that a demurrer should have been sustained to an indictment in which signs instead of words were used to describe degrees and minutes. In New Jersey it was held that a statute requiring a physician to deliver his account "in plain English words" was violated by the use of contractions, initials, and symbols in a medical man's bill of particulars. Hedges v. Boyle, 7 N. J. Law, 68. In People v. Ah Sum, 92 Cal. 648, 28 Pac. 680, the court examined an information by which it was sought to charge the defendant with perjury committed at his trial for selling lottery tickets. In the information the lottery ticket regarding which it was alleged Ah Sum had falsely testified was set out in the Chinese language. The court held that this vitiated the pleading, not only because of the violation of section 950 of the Penal Code, but also for the reason that the use of the Chinese language in an essential part of the information was contrary to section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution. If a pleading fails because a vital part of the charge is expressed in a foreign language, what saves an enactment similarly tainted? The very same section of the Constitution requires both to be in English.

In line with the authorities last cited and also supporting the contention of petitioners that the statute is not understandable is a very recent decision. In the case of People v. Carrell, 31 Cal. App. 793, 161 Pac. 995, which this court refused to transfer from the District Court of Appeal after decision, that court was considering the sufficiency of an information charging a defendant in the language of section 238a of the Penal Code. While the question before the court in that case was purely one of pleading, not involving the constitutionality of the statute, nevertheless the discussion in the opinion by Mr. Presiding Justice Chipman is of great value in considering the matter now before this court. His language was, in part as follows:

"Unexplained, the word 'fellatio' would, to a man of common understanding (indeed, we think also to one of uncommon understanding), be as cabalistic as if written in Egyptian or Mexican hieroglyphics or in Japanese or Chinese characters. The attorney for the defendants says in his brief: 'The defendant entered into the trial of this case, and so did his attorney, without any knowledge of what the word "fellatio" would be defined to mean as used in the statute, or what the elements constituting the offense might be, but rather supposed' the court would instruct in accordance with a definition the attorney found in Andrew's Latin-English Lexicon. In this sense the definition might not meet the act proven, but would seem to apply to the woman rather than the man. This is mentioned to emphasize the soundness of the statutory rule that the offense must be so stated as to be intelligible to a person of common understanding. Under no other rule could a defendant safely go to trial. The circumstance is mentioned also for the reason that it is by no means certain what acts the Legislature intended to characterize as the crime of 'fellatio.' We do not find it spoken of in any work on criminal law, and its introduction into our statutes is of so recent a date that the courts have not been called upon to deal with it so far as we are aware until this case arose.

"The exigencies of the case do not seem to require that we should stain the pages of our reports with the definition as given, or to enlighten the profession or the public as to what the learned trial judge found it necessary to inform the jury the Legislature meant when it announced 'fellatio' as a felony."

[1] This language has been solemnly approved by the Supreme Court, because a petition for transfer of the cause to this court for decision has been denied. The case is still authority. It has never been reversed nor criticized. Thus this court has decided that a pleading in the language of the statute is insufficient because "it is by no means certain what acts the Legislature intended to characterize as the crime of 'fellatio.'" The mandate of the Constitution regarding the use of no other than the English language not only applies to statutes and to all "official writings" and "judicial proceedings" (which I believe would include pleadings), but such command is expressed in the same section and the same sentence. Evidently the framers of the Constitution intended that English-speaking people should understand, or should at least be in a position to learn, not only the meaning of indictments against individuals, but the significance and purport of general laws having application to everybody. We say to the man in custody, "You cannot understand the word embodying the charge against you; therefore the indictment fails." But to the people of the state and to every one of them, if we held this law to be constitutional, this court, in effect, would say: "You are bound to understand the same unintelligible word, although it is the very essence of the statute, without which section 288a of the Penal Code could mean absolutely nothing in any language." I cannot assume a position so antagonistic to reason.

[2] From an examination of the text-books and lexicons containing the word "fellatio" or kindred words, we find that these so-called "authorities" are by no means in accord nor consistent in their definitions. In Stedman's Medical Dictionary there is a contradiction in definitions which throws the whole matter into confusion so far as that work is concerned. In that book "fellator" is defined as "one who takes the buccal part in fellatorism." This is thoroughly in accord with the meaning evidently implied in Martial's writings. But "fellatio" is by Stedman given as a synonym for "fellatorism," which in turn is described as a synonym for "irrumation," and that word defined by reference to its underlying verb "irrumare" seems to apply to the passive and not to the active agent in a perverted practice. As defined in the ninth edition of Dorland, "fellatio" relates only to the conduct of the active agent. The definition is unmistakable. Indeed, it is so bluntly expressed that it may not with propriety be here quoted. But strangely enough "fellatorism" is defined as a practice relating to the person upon whom another performs a certain act. Krafft-Ebing, as we have seen, limits the practice to a woman as the active agent, and Havelock Ellis seems to follow the same definition, as does also Andrew, as Mr. Justice Chipman in his opinion in the case of People v. Carrell, supra, has stated. With the books in confusion so hopeless we cannot say that the word has a definite technical meaning. It seems to me that, without arrogating to ourselves the function of legislation, we cannot definitely declare what the statute means, and that, even if we could bring ourselves thus to go outside of our constitutional duty, we would be compelled to choose among conflicting definitions. Section 288a of the Penal Code is void for uncertainty as well as for the reason that it is not expressed in the English language.

It is not necessary to examine at length the other Latin word of the statute, because it is not used in the commitments of the petitioners now before this court. It may be said in passing that "cunnilingus" is found, but not clearly defined (doubtless for reasons of modesty), in Lewis and Short's revision of Harper's Latin Dictionary, the lexicographers contenting themselves by giving the meaning of one of the words from which it is derived. The word as employed by Martial does not denote an act as its use in the statute would imply, but an individual. For example, the epigram in Book IV of Martial, numbered 43, ends with the line, "Dixi te, Coracine, cunnilingum," meaning "I have called you, Coracine, 'a cunnilingus.'" This definition is accepted by Dorland, who uses the word "cunnilinguist" to denote the person guilty of a certain act of perversion, but gives "cunnilingus" as the Latin synonym. Krafft-Ebing seems to use "cunnilingus" as meaning an act, while apparently the same act is described by Ellis as "cunnilinctus." While this part of the statute is not under review in the present proceedings, I think it proper to indicate that in my opinion it is also void.

The statute under which the petitioners were prosecuted was in violation of both the letter and the reason of the constitutional provisions invoked by them.

The prisoners are discharged.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. I concur in the judgment. The crime denounced by the statute is not defined, but designated by words concededly not found in or constituting any part of the English language, in which, as provided by section 24, art. 4 of the Constitution, all laws of the state must be published and in no other. Not only is it obnoxious to this provision of the Constitution, but the words, no doubt intended by the Legislature to apply to some one of the many forms of sexual perversion, are, even when reference is had to Latin lexicons, of no deter-minate signification in determining the particular act which is penalized. This being true, the Legislature might with equal propriety have used Chinese characters, or, indeed, have coined new words for use in prescribing the act in place of those adopted, which, in the absence of definition, would have been just as intelligible to the citizen as the words used for the purpose of defining the offense.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur in the judgment. Further consideration has satisfied me that section 288a of the Penal Code is so vague and uncertain in its attempted statement of the acts declared to be felonies that it may not fairly be upheld as a valid statute. It must be conceded, I think, that it is essential to the validity of a statute creating a criminal offense that it show in language capable of being understood by a person of ordinary intelligence what it is that is prohibited. This, it has been said, can only be done by the use of terms or words of settled meaning, or words which indicate offenses well known to, and defined by, the common law. See, generally, 16 Corpus Juris, pp. 67 and 68.

Where an agency contract for the sale of leather provided for commissions, but the agency was not exclusive, the agents upon breach by their principals could not recover as damages profits to be realized as commissions on purely suppositive sales; such damages being speculative.

2. DAMAGES ⇨40(2)—SPECULATIVE DAMAGES.

Where an agency contract for the sale of leather goods provided for commissions on sales made to certain named dealers, whether made directly or by reason of the agency, commissions on actual sales made to such dealers, whether by the agents or not, might be recovered in an action for breach of the contract; such profits not being speculative.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by N. W. Friedman and another against the McKay Leather Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order granting a new trial they appeal. Affirmed.

T. T. C. Gregory and D. Hadsell, both of San Francisco, and Thos. A. Allen, for appellants.

Frank McGowan, of San Francisco, Arthur Lindauer, of Vallejo, and Blaine McGowan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Appellants claim that this is an action for breach of contract, but the respondent claims it is an action for an accounting. Respondent demanded a jury and appellants recovered judgment after verdict, the respondent's motion for a new trial was granted, and the appeal is from this order. The parties entered into a contract by which the respondent appointed the appellants "its representatives" for the "handling" of leather, agreeing to pay a commission "on all orders placed through" appellants "or received direct from" 16 "factories, finding houses," and "commission houses on the Pacific Coast" specifically named in the contract. Respondent also agreed to pay commissions on all "orders booked" by respondent for shoe factories, etc., on the Pacific Coast or in the Orient. Respondent also agreed to consult with appellants "at regular intervals regarding preparation of leather, selections, prices and the booking of orders as regards quantities"; to mail appellants copies of invoices; to pay commissions monthly; to furnish samples from time to time as requested; to keep appellants posted regarding any change in prices. The contract was for a term of four years, with an option on the part of respondent to renew the agreement for "a further term of five years." There was no agreement by the appellants to devote their time, or any part of it, to the selling of the leather goods of the respondent. The complaint alleges that orders had been received by respondent direct from the shoe houses, etc., named in the agreement and, that it had failed to render an accounting to appellants therefor, and had failed to mail invoices therefor, or to pay commissions thereon, after demand; that on June 26, 1914, respondent notified appellants that it would not pay past or future commissions "on direct orders as provided in the agreement or at all"; that appellants had been ready, able, and willing to perform the contract, and, "unless prevented by the repudiation" thereof by respondent, would have secured a large number of orders during the term of the contract, to wit, to February 26, 1918; "that by reason of the facts hereinbefore set forth" appellants have been damaged in the sum of $10,000, and prayed judgment for said amount. The answer specifically denies each alleged violation of the agreement and denies that the appellants had been at all damaged. The following letter of June 26, 1914, from respondent to appellants, is counted on as evidence of the breach of contract:

"We found you to be a failure as a salesman and detrimental to our business. * * * You went out in competition to us and sold another tanner's leather to our trade. * * * We don't want you to represent us and we certainly will not pay you for what we ourselves sell. * * * Are we to send you a check and you not make any effort to do anything for it? You want to come back on us for commission on trade we had before we ever knew you," etc.

On July 6, 1914, appellants wrote respondent that an agent of one of the dealers mentioned in the commission agreement would call, and also asked for prices on certain leather. The letter was returned with the indorsement: "We refer you to our letter of June 26, 1914. McKay Leather Co." The court, in effect, instructed the jury that, if respondent repudiated the contract without just or legal cause, the appellants could treat such repudiation as putting an end to the contract, and that, if such repudiation resulted in damage to appellants, "in considering the amount of such damage they could allow as damages the profits that would have been realized during the full term of the contract by carrying it out," and for the purpose of ascertaining the same could consider "the profits which the plaintiffs had made under the contract before the breach." The court refused respondent's request that the jury be instructed that the recovery must be limited to commissions earned under the contract.

As the appellants did not agree to give all or any definite portion of their time to respondent's business, it was wholly optional with them whether or not they would endeavor to secure orders for respondent. Appellants' commissions were to be based upon sales actually made. The sales made were not only dependent upon the effort put forth by the plaintiff, but also upon the number of other agents of defendant in the field competing with the plaintiffs, and as well upon the condition of the market. The case differs materially from an exclusive agency. In the case of an exclusive agency the loss suffered by the wrongfully discharged agent has been "measured by the sales actually made in the territory in which the agent had exclusive authority to sell" (Schiffman v. Peerless Motor Car Co., 13 Cal. App. 600, 110 Pac. 460), or by the loss of profits (Bredemeier v. Pacific Supply Co., 64 Or. 576, 131 Pac. 312). In Corpus Juris, vol. 2, p. 790, the rule is thus stated:

"The measure of damages to which the exclusive agent is entitled where the principal, in violation of his contract, sells his goods in the agent's territory, is the actual loss suffered by the latter, and that ordinarily is the commission which would have accrued to him, if he had made the sale in person. Speculative damages are not recoverable. Thus, where the compensation of the agent is a commission on sales by him, damages on the basis of the suppositive sales are not recoverable, unless it is shown that the sales would in fact have been made by the agent."

In the case of Parke v. Frank, 75 Cal. 364, 17 Pac. 427, this court, in determining the measure of damages in a case of a breach of an agency contract, said:

"The plaintiffs (the agents) very properly made no effort to establish the profits they might have made, during any definite period, had defendant complied with his contract. From the nature of the case such damages must have been purely speculative."

To the same effect, see Beck v. West, 87 Ala. 213, 6 South. 70, and Washburn v. Hubbard, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 11.

In the case of McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 60, 85 Pac. 929, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171, the question of future profits as an element of damage for breach of contract is discussed. The contract was for driving a tunnel. It was held that the profits to be made in driving the remaining portion of the tunnel were properly allowed, based upon the profits made up to the time of the breach. After stating the general rule that prospective profits are too speculative and remote to justify an award, it is said:

"Such is the undoubted rule, but it is to be noted that this is not an objection to the inclusion of profits as a proper element of damages, but is a declaration merely that when they are too speculative and remote to be capable of anything like reasonable ascertainment, when they are collateral merely and do not arise directly or by natural consequence out of the tort complained of, they cease to become a proper element. * * * No one may contest the soundness of this principle, but the converse of it is equally true, that where prospective profits are not too speculative and remote, where they do arise directly and as a natural consequence out of the injury, they are always allowed as an element of damage."

[1, 2] In the instant case as to the damage suffered by the plaintiffs by reason of the refusal to further recognize them as agents, the profits to be realized as commissions on purely suppositive sales were under the circumstances too speculative to justify a recovery; but the contract provided a commission on sales made to certain named dealers, whether made directly or by reason of the plaintiffs' agency, and we think that the commissions on such sales are sufficiently certain to justify a recovery thereof. While not strictly an exclusive agency, it is in some respects even more definite and certain. The respondent claims, however, that there was nothing in the contract to prevent other agents appointed by it from soliciting the trade of these named dealers, and that sales made by such other agents of defendant ought not to be considered in estimating profits. It may be that some of the orders given by such dealers would have been secured by other agents, but, as was said in the case of McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., supra:

"As these were matters which could not be determined except by a completion of the contract, which defendant's conduct had prohibited, the court was justified in accepting the evidence, which under the circumstances was the best and most convincing that could be offered."

Since the trial, the term of the agency has fully expired, and the damages actually suffered can now be more certainly ascertained by the proof of sales actually made to the designated dealers.

Order affirmed.

SMITH v. UNITED CRUDE OIL CO.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1919.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT —146—LEASE—
"INCUMBRANCE."

Where the lessees agreed to keep premises free of incumbrances and liens, nothing being said as to subletting, a sublease could not be considered an "incumbrance" within the meaning of the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Incumbrance.]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT —134(3)—USE OF PREMISES FOR PURPOSES NOT CONTEMPLATED.

Civ. Code, § 1930, providing that, when a thing is let for a particular purpose, the hirer must not use it for any other purpose, and, if he does, he is liable to the latter for damages resulting, or the latter may treat the contract as rescinded, as far as the remedy is concerned, applied to a subsequent unwarranted use of premises by a lessee under lease executed prior to the amendment of such statute.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT —80(2)—VIOLATION OF COVENANT BY SUBTENANT.

A lessee is liable in damages to the lessor for improper use of the premises by a sublessee, under Civ. Code, § 1930.

4. MINES AND MINERALS —79(7)—OIL LEASE—RENTS—SUBLETTING.

Where owner leased land to oil company for development of oil, lessee having right to possession of so much of surface as was necessary, and oil company sublet part thereof to one who used it for a purpose not contemplated, owner was not entitled to recover from lessee rents collected from subtenant; his remedy being for damages, under Civ. Code, § 1930.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by Mark B. Smith against the United Crude Oil Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Geo. E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, and Frank Short, of Fresno, for appellant.

W. W. Kaye, of Bakersfield, Anderson & Anderson, and Kaye & Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff and defendant are the successors of the lessor and lessee, respectively, in a 20-year lease executed November 27, 1900, of 20 acres of land for the development of oil, reserving a royalty therefrom. On May 6, 1910, defendant sublet for five years two pieces of land, 150 by 250 feet each, in the northwest and northeast corners, respectively, of said 20 acres, to the Associated Supply Company, for the erection of the necessary buildings and the carrying on of an oil well supply business thereon, reserving a rental of $100 per month. Plaintiff brought this action, alleging that his predecessors were the owners of "the north half of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 2, township 11 north, range 24 west, S. B. & M. in Kern county, California," and that "said owners as lessors executed to A. C. Leibdedofer and E. H. Loveland, as lessees, that certain indenture of lease bearing date on said day, wherein and whereby said lessors leased, let, and demised to the said lessees the said land for the term of 20 years from and after said day, for the purposes in said lease set forth, and thereupon said lessees entered into and upon said land and took possession thereof under said lease," and set forth a copy of said lease, and made the same a part of his complaint. Plaintiff alleged the subletting to the Associated Supply Company "for a purpose not contemplated" by the provisions of the lease, claiming that the execution of the sublease created an incumbrance upon the land, in violation of a covenant of the lease, and, because of said incumbrance, demanded a decree forfeiting said lease, an accounting for royalties, and "for all funds * * * received from the Associated Supply Company, * * * for the use of any surface rights of said premises," and for "judgment for all sums found due him by said accounting." The defendant did not deny the collection of the $100 per month rental, but in answer to the claim of forfeiture alleged facts showing that plaintiff was estopped from claiming a forfeiture, by reason of his own delay in bringing the proceedings after knowledge of the contract between the defendant and the Associated Supply Company, during which time defendant had spent more than $15,000 in further development of the property, plaintiff having during that period received the rental reserved by him. At the trial plaintiff abandoned his claim for an accounting for royalty, and merely proved the existence of the sublease. The court rendered judgment for plaintiff for the full amount of the rents ($5,843.20) collected by the defendant from the Associated Supply Company, and refused to declare a forfeiture of defendant's lease on the ground of estoppel by reason of plaintiff's acquiescence in the contract of the Associated Supply Company. Defendant appeals.

[1-3] Let us first consider plaintiff's claim that by the sublease in question the defendant violated the provision of the lease against creating incumbrances upon the land. The lease provided that all the expenditures in connection with the boring for oil, erection of derricks, pumps, pipes, engines, tanks, and material should be provided by the lessees at their own expense, and that they should also furnish all labor employed in the development of the premises and the production of oil, "and the lessees hereby agree that they will at all times keep said premises free and clear of all incumbrances and liens, particularly mechanics', materialmen and laborers' liens caused by reason of any debt or obligation contracted or handed down by lessees under the terms of this agreement. Lessees agree to pay all taxes that may be levied upon the personal property and upon their portion of the oil stored on said premises." There was no agreement in the lease against subletting. The lessee, therefore, had a right to sublease portions of said land for the purposes specified in its lease, namely, the development of oil. Chandler v. Hart, 161 Cal. 405, 419, 119 Pac. 516, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094. Such a sublease, therefore, could not be considered an incumbrance within the meaning of the lease. Plaintiff's contention in this respect, then, narrows down to the proposition that the sublease is for purposes not contemplated by or within the provisions of the lease. Upon this subject section 1930 of the Civil Code provides:

"When a thing is let for a particular purpose the hirer must not use it for any other purpose; and, if he does, he is liable to the letter for all the damages resulting from such use, or the letter may treat the contract as thereby rescinded."

The fact that, in the instant case, the use for a purpose not contemplated by the lease is by a subtenant does not change the situation. In effect, the lessee, through its subtenant, is using a portion of the land for purposes not contemplated by the lease. Section 1930 of the Civil Code prescribes the remedy in such cases. It is pointed out by the respondent that this section was amended in 1905, subsequent to the lease of November 27, 1900, between the predecessors of the parties herein. The amendment, however, occurred before the use of the premises by the subtenant, and the remedy, therefore, is that prescribed by the law in effect at the time of the violation of the lease. The complaint does not aver any damage, nor was proof offered of any damage by reason of said mentioned use. Respondent, however, now claims that his action is not for a violation of the covenant against incumbrances, but rather one for "money had and received," and seeks to sustain the judgment upon the theory that appellant has collected rents to which it is not entitled and for which it is liable to respondent. This argument, in turn, is based upon the contention that by the "oil lease" respondent gained no right in the surface of the land (citing Brookshire Oil Co. v. Casmalia, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 211, 103 Pac. 927), and that its lease to the Associated Supply Company was without right or authority, and that thereby it became liable for the use and occupation of said surface, and that the rental received therefor was a proper measure of its responsibility for such wrongful use and occupation. Without pausing to consider the novel proposition that an action for the forfeiture of a lease and an accounting for rentals can be considered an action on the common count for money had and received, we will consider the merits of respondent's position. The lease in question makes no reservation whatever of the surface, as was the case in the lease considered in Brookshire Oil Co. v. Casmalia, etc., Co., supra, and no such reservation of the surface as that contained in the lease considered in Chandler v. Hart, supra (161 Cal. pp. 406, 410, 119 Pac. 516, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094). Respondent's predecessors by said lease did "grant, lease, let and demise unto the said lessees (appellant's assignors), and said lessees hereby take and accept of and from said lessors, the exclusive right to mine, dig, excavate, bore and drill for, and otherwise to collect, develop and obtain * * * petroleum * * * etc., * * * also to sever and remove said substances" from said 20 acres, describing them, "also the right to enter in and upon the premises * * * to construct roads, etc., needed to carry on the said business and the said running operations. To have and to hold the premises described for twenty years for the purpose and use aforesaid, * * * to take immediate possession by placing an employé on said land and to commence the work of developing said land for oil by placing a derrick thereon by December 20th, etc. To continue drilling wells at the rate of two each year until ten wells are sunk, and as many more as the lessees desire, but no well to be drilled within seventy-five feet of other land owned by the lessors." In the event of the failure of the lessees to drill within the time limit as aforesaid for such work, "the right to drill the same, or any other wells, shall cease and be forfeited, together with all the lands covered by this lease (italics ours) that are not within seventy-five feet of a well drilled or being drilled. * * * Said lessees agree to pay to said lessors as rent or royalty for the premises leased one-fourth part," etc. It was also agreed that the lessees might, within 12 months buy "the whole of the above-described lands." The lessees had a right to sink wells upon any and every part of said land not within 75 feet of the lessor's land, and to the possession of so much of the surface thereof as was necessary for such purpose. This right extended to the two parcels sublet by the appellant. The case, therefore, in this view, again resolves itself into the proposition that the appellant, by its subtenant, has been using said premises for a purpose not contemplated by the lease. Respondent, in his complaint, takes the position that the parcels sublet were included in the premises let, for he alleges that the 20 acres had been leased to the appellant, that the leased premises had been incumbered by the sublease, in violation of the covenants in the lease, and for that reason demanded a forfeiture of the lease.

[4] We are therefore satisfied that plaintiff is not entitled to recover the amount of rents collected by the appellant from its subtenant, on the theory that such sublease was a violation of the covenant against incumbrance, and, for that reason, that the judgment should be reversed. Nor was the respondent entitled to recover such rents upon the theory that his complaint was, in effect, an action for money had and received. His remedy was for damages under the provisions of section 1930 of the Civil Code.

Certiorari to Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Bjelka Paulsen, deceased. Certiorari by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, a corporation, against the Superior Court of San Diego County, and the Honorable S. M. Marsh, Judge of said court, to review an order of such court appointing Ingina Ostergard special administratrix of the estate of Bjelka Paulsen, deceased. Affirmed.

Patterson Sprigg, of San Diego, and Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Bischoff & Thompson, of Escondido, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. A writ of certiorari was issued by the District Court of Appeal for the second Appellate District to review an order of the superior court of San Diego county appointing Ingina Ostergard special administratrix of the estate of Bjelka Paulsen, deceased. A return was made, and the reviewing court gave judgment annulling the order of appointment upon the ground that the superior court had acted without any competent evidence of the jurisdictional fact of the death of the alleged decedent. A prior order appointing said Ingina Ostergard special administratrix of the estate had theretofore been annulled on certiorari by the same appellate court. Est. of Paulsen, 170 Pac. 855. No petition for transfer of the earlier proceeding was presented, but the later one has been ordered to this court for hearing and determination.

The petitioner for the present writ, as for the former one, is United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, a corporation. Its relation to the order of appointment made by the superior court is set forth in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal on the first writ. In each of the two proceedings before it, that court held such petitioner to be a party "beneficially interested." Code Civ. Proc. § 1069. We pass this point, which is preliminary and of relatively minor importance, with the mere statement that we regard the correctness of the conclusion reached thereon as open to grave doubt. The case may more properly, we think, be decided on the merits of the attack directed against the jurisdiction of the superior court.

[1-4] The writ of certiorari is not available to attack mere error; it lies only where an inferior court or tribunal has acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction. Pac. Tel., etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 694, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822. Where authority to act depends upon the existence of a given fact, the inferior court or tribunal can act only upon evidence tending to establish such fact. The review under the writ extends, "not only to the whole of the record of the court below, but even to the evidence itself, where necessary to determine the jurisdictional fact." Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 112, 43 Pac. 580. It may readily be conceded that the superior court is without authority to appoint an administrator of the estate of a living person, and that, on an application for letters, the death of the alleged decedent is a jurisdictional fact.

On the hearing in the superior court, the petitioner, Ingina Ostergard, was sworn as a witness. She testified, on direct examination, that she was a resident of this state; that Bjelka Paulsen was her sister, had been residing in Denmark, and had died about the 20th of November, 1914. The witness had first learned of her said sister's death through a cablegram from her (the decedent's) daughter. Upon cross-examination Miss Ostergard testified that she had been in this country for ten years; that when she left Denmark, where her abode had been, her sister, Bjelka Paulsen, was still alive; that she had not seen her sister since that time. Her information was that derived through the cablegram above mentioned, and through letters received from another sister and from the children of Bjelka Paulsen, written from the place where Bjelka Paulsen had died. She had also received a photograph of the monument on the grave of her said sister. The cablegram announcing the death of Mrs. Paulsen was offered in evidence.

The petitioner's claim is that this evidence constituted hearsay merely, and that it furnished no basis upon which the court below could find the fact of death. Proof of death, it is said, should have been made by the testimony of some one who had seen the dead body of Mrs. Paulsen, or, at least, had personal knowledge of facts from which it might reasonably be inferred that she had died. No such witness being available within the jurisdiction, a commission should have been issued to take the testimony abroad.

[5] It is quite apparent that under this view of the law, if it be the correct one, there might be considerable difficulty in obtaining letters of administration of the estate of a person whose death had occurred far beyond the boundaries of the state. In any event, a prompt grant of letters, however necessary for the preservation of the estate or the protection of the interests of the heirs, would most often be impossible in such a case. Upon testimony like that here offered (assuming its truthfulness), the ordinary mind, unhampered by an acquaintance with technical rules of evidence, would, we think, have little hesitation in forming the belief that Mrs. Paulsen was, in fact, dead. We should regret to be obliged to hold that a court of law is without authority to receive such testimony, or to act upon it. The law does not, we think, impose such necessity upon us. Under section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure, evidence may be given of "(11) Common reputation existing previous to the controversy, * * * in cases of pedigree. * * *" And section 1852 of the same Code declares that—

"The declaration, act, or omission of a member of a family who is a decedent, or out of the jurisdiction, is also admissible as evidence of common reputation, in cases where, on questions of pedigree, such reputation is admissible."

These provisions enunciate, in statutory form, a long-established and familiar exception to the general rule excluding hearsay. 1 Greenl. Ev. (16th Ed.) § 114b et seq. See Estate of Heaton, 135 Cal. 385, 67 Pac. 321. When the applicant for letters testified that she had heard from the various members of the family residing in Denmark (i. e., "out of the jurisdiction") that Mrs. Paulsen had died and been buried there, and that a monument, a photograph of which was sent to the applicant, had been erected over the grave, she furnished evidence which, under the express provisions of our statute, the court was authorized to receive and consider as tending to show that the fact that Mrs. Paulsen was dead was a matter of common reputation in her family. Testimony of like character has frequently been held to be admissible in proof of death. In Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 197, a case in which it was incumbent upon the plaintiff in ejectment to show the death of his ancestor, the court said:

"We are of opinion that hearsay information of the death, derived from the immediate family of the deceased, is sufficient prima facie to establish the fact, and was properly admitted."

See, also, Secrist v. Green, 3 Wall. 744, 18 L. Ed. 153; Morrill v. Foster, 33 N. H. 379; American Life Ins. Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507; Mason v. Fuller, 45 Vt. 29; Eaton v. Tallmadge, 24 Wis. 217; Van Sickle v. Gibson, 40 Mich. 170.

[6] It is said, however, that this is not a case of pedigree. "The term 'pedigree' embraces not only descent and relationship, but also the facts of birth, marriage, and death, and the times when these events happened." 1 Greenl. Ev. (16th Ed.) § 114f. Whether evidence of reputation or declarations may be given wherever proof of the facts of birth, marriage, or death may be relevant, or only in litigation in which the matter of descent is directly in issue, is a point upon which the authorities are in conflict. The English rule, followed in some American jurisdictions, is that evidence of the kind under discussion is admissible only in the latter class of cases. The majority of American jurisdictions have, however, adopted the broader rule of permitting the evidence in all cases where the fact is relevant. 1 Greenl. Ev. (16th Ed.) § 114g; Wig. Ev. § 1503. If a choice between the opposing views were required here, we should incline to the doctrine last stated. As was said by Bigelow, C. J., in North Brookfield v. Warren, 16 Gray (Mass.) 171, 174:

"If this evidence is admissible to prove such facts at all, it is equally so in all cases whenever they become legitimate subjects of judicial inquiry and investigation."

The petitioner points with confidence to People v. Mayne, 118 Cal. 516, 50 Pac. 654, 62 Am. St. Rep. 256, where this court used expressions indicating an acceptance of the narrower rule. But what was there said was not necessary to the decision, which seems to have gone, finally, upon the ground that the declaration offered to show the date of the birth of a child (i. e., an entry in a Bible) should have been rejected because the declarant (the mother) was herself present as a witness at the trial. In two other cases, one decided after People v. Mayne, the court held that evidence of the kind there rejected had been properly received. People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915; People v. Slater, 119 Cal. 623, 51 Pac. 957.

[7] We need, not, however, undertake to define here the exact class of cases which may be said to involve questions of pedigree, within the meaning of the rule under discussion. People v. Mayne was a prosecution for acts alleged to have been committed upon a girl under a given age. There is no similarity between such a case and an application to a probate court for letters of administration. In order to establish her preferred right, as a relative, to appointment, the applicant alleged, and might have been called upon to prove, not only the fact of death, but her own relationship to the decedent and her interest in the estate. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1365, 1413. The right of succession was thus necessarily presented for determination. Furthermore, the grant of letters is but a step in a proceeding having for its purpose the administration and distribution of the estate of a decedent. Such a proceeding directly involves questions of descent and inheritance, and, as incidental thereto, the facts of the death and time of death of the alleged decedent. Under any reasonable interpretation, such a proceeding should be held to be a case of pedigree.

We conclude, therefore, that the court below was warranted in accepting the testimony of Miss Ostergard as competent evidence tending to prove the death of Mrs. Paulsen.

The order is affirmed.

36 Cal. App. 342
LOUIS M. HICKMAN v. JOHNSON.
(Civ. 1780.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 21, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 25, 1918.)

1. FRAUD ⚡47—ACTION FOR FRAUD—PLEADING.

A cross-complaint, based on fraudulent representations of plaintiff, must show that defendant was damaged by plaintiff's conduct.

2. FRAUD ⚡47—DAMAGES—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

In action on note representing balance of purchase price of lands and to foreclose mortgage given to secure payment, defendant's cross-complaint, based upon fraudulent representations of plaintiff as to ownership of an irrigation ditch, held insufficient to show that defendant was damaged by representations.

3. DAMAGES ⚡62(1)—INCURRING EXPENSE—KNOWLEDGE OF FRAUD.

Where vendee of land, sued on contract, cross-complained for fraudulent representations as to title to irrigation ditch, and after knowledge of the fraud planted a crop, loss caused by want of irrigation is not an element of damage.

4. FRAUD ⚡42—PROMISE TO DO SOMETHING IN THE FUTURE—PLEADING.

To state a cause of action for fraud based upon a promise to do something in the future, it must be alleged that the promise was made with the intent to deceive or mislead; it being insufficient to allege that promise was false and fraudulent.

5. FRAUD ⚡34—ACTION—CONDITION PRECEDENT—TENDER OF AMOUNT DUE.

Defendants' counterclaim, based upon fraudulent representations of plaintiff vendor with reference to irrigation ditch, was insufficient, where it did not show that defendant had tendered the difference between the damages suffered because of representations and amount due under the contract; defendant having elected to stand upon the contract which is executory and not executed.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚡122—REPUDIATION OF CONTRACT IN PART.

If purchaser, instead of disavowing the contract when he discovered the fraud, chooses to appropriate whatever advantages he may receive through the terms of the contract, he cannot repudiate the terms that are of advantage to the other party.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by Louis M. Hickman, a corporation, against William J. Johnson. From a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of a mortgage and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for appellant.

L. J. Maddux, of Modesto, and H. C. McPike and James F. Peck, both of Oakland, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This appeal is from the judgment decreeing the foreclosure of a mortgage and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The only complaint against the action of the court is based upon the order sustaining the demurrer to the amended cross-complaint and dismissing it from the files.

The action was brought upon several promissory notes for the sum of $24,075 and interest and for the foreclosure of a mortgage to secure the payment of the same. The notes provided that in case of a failure to pay the interest, as it became due, the payee might elect to consider the whole amount due and bring an action accordingly. There is no controversy as to the failure of the defendant to make the required payments of interest. Indeed, the only payment made by him was the sum of about $6,000 on the selling price of $30,175, made at the time of the execution of the conveyance and of said promissory notes. The defense, however, upon which defendant relied and still relies is based upon the claim of fraudulent representations made by the plaintiff. Involved therein are two elements or examples of fraudulent conduct. The first relates to a misrepresentation as to the ownership of a certain ditch, known as the "Dallas Ditch"; the second, to the failure of plaintiff to construct another ditch from the said Dallas ditch to the land conveyed by plaintiff to defendant.

The material representation as to the Dallas ditch which the defendant claims to have been fraudulent is as follows:

"That as an inducement to enter into the said contract of purchase, that is to say, as an inducement to pay the said purchase price, execute the said notes and mortgage, and accept the said land, the said plaintiff, through its agents, officers, or representatives, represented to this defendant that it was able and entitled to grant to him the right to use the said Dallas ditch referred to in said agreement, and that said Dallas ditch was of sufficient size to irrigate all of the land entitled to be irrigated therefrom, and more particularly the premises conveyed to this defendant, and that it carried at least 27 second feet of water."

As seen, this is not an express allegation that plaintiff represented that it owned the said Dallas ditch. But we may accept it as a sufficient averment of that fact. This ownership is negated in appropriate language, as is also the capacity of said Dallas ditch to supply the needed water.

Again it is alleged:

"That at said time it was represented to this defendant, in said agreement of April 26th, that the said plaintiff would make an extension of what is known as the 'Dallas Ditch,' and that said extension would be brought west and flumed across the Ceres canal on the west line of said land at a point north, and that said ditch and flume would be complete and ready for the conveyance of water therein by October 1, 1910. That all of said representations were false and fraudulent and were known by the plaintiff and its agents to be false and fraudulent, and were made with the specific purpose of inducing this defendant to enter into the said transaction and agreement, and did so induce him."

[1] We may assume for the purposes of the case that said representations were material, and that defendant had a right to and did rely upon them. But it is apparent that an additional element must be shown in order to constitute a cause of action in behalf of defendant, and that is that he was damaged by said conduct of the plaintiff. If it appears from said cross-complaint that there is no sufficient allegation of facts to show that defendant was injured without his own fault by the conduct of plaintiff—reprehensible as it might be—then the action of the court in sustaining the demurrer to said amended cross-complaint was entirely justified. It is claimed by respondent that such is the case, and this consideration may invite inquiry.

[2] We may first direct our attention to the injury, if any, caused by the plaintiff's representations as to the ownership of said Dallas ditch. It is apparent that there is no express allegation as to any appreciable damage done to the defendant by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to convey the ownership of said ditch. There is no averment as to what said ditch cost, or of its value, or what expense would be incurred in obtaining a substitute for it, nor how much the market value of the land would be affected by the question as to whether the said ditch was appurtenant thereto.

Indeed, in reference to both specifications of fraud, it may be said that the allegations of damage are quite defective. We may notice them briefly.

The first is:

"That said land without water is not worth to exceed $20 per acre, and is only valuable in an amount greater because of the capacity or power of obtaining water, and if the said plaintiff fails to furnish the adequate means for irrigating said premises, then said premises not irrigated are not worth to exceed $20 per acre."

But it is clear from the other allegations of the cross-complaint that plaintiff did not promise to furnish water to said lands, and it is quite apparent that the ownership of the Dallas ditch is entirely distinct from the ownership of sufficient water to irrigate said premises.

[3, 4] Again, special damage is claimed in consequence of the money expended in planting a crop, and of the fact that the crop failed and perished for lack of water, and "that said failure to obtain said water was caused wholly by the failure of the plaintiff to furnish the defendant with the necessary ditches to convey the said water to his said land as agreed by it and hereinabove set forth." The failure of said crop was placed at the sum of $5,200, and the cost of putting in the crop at the sum of $600, but it is apparent that this element of damage cannot be considered for the reason that, according to the allegations of the cross-complaint, the defendant, before planting said crop, had complete knowledge that plaintiff did not own the said Dallas ditch and could not therefore convey any interest in it to the defendant, and also that it had failed according to its agreement to complete an adequate connecting ditch, and, indeed, it further appears that the plaintiff had refused to make good its said representations. Therefore, if defendant, with knowledge of these facts and the failure of plaintiff to complete its agreement, planted a crop, incurring the cost thereof, and took a chance of having a crop without irrigation, it must be apparent that any loss thereby incurred must be chargeable to his own want of care, no matter how remiss might have been plaintiff in its conduct toward the defendant. Besides, it may be said, as to the allegation in reference to the connecting ditches, that it was a promise to do something in the future, and, in order to state a cause of action for fraud, it must be alleged that said promise was made with the intention of deceiving or misleading the defendant.

There is no such allegation. It is not sufficient to allege that such promise was false and fraudulent. Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 119 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140. Then follows this allegation:

"That it would cost this defendant the sum of at least $3,000 to acquire rights of way and construct an irrigation ditch sufficient for the carrying of the water from the distributing lateral or canal of the Turlock Irrigation District sufficient to irrigate the said premises, and and that unless such ditch is constructed in accordance with said agreement the defendant will be compelled to incur such expense."

We may assume that by this averment the cross-complainant intended to state the cost of a waterway that would answer the same purpose as the Dallas and the connecting ditch, if furnished, as represented and agreed, by plaintiff. Thus considered, it may be regarded as an allegation of damage suffered by reason of the dereliction of the plaintiff. It is, however, uncertain for the reason that it does not appear how much it would cost to construct a substitute for the Dallas ditch, concerning which the fraud is sufficiently pleaded.

"That by reason of the failure of the plaintiff to furnish said ditches and comply with said agreement, the consideration for said notes and mortgage has entirely and completely failed, and that without such water the said land is not worth a sum greater than that heretofore paid by this defendant, and that this defendant has been damaged by such breach of contract and failure to comply with the terms of said agreement, in addition to the sums herein elsewhere set forth, in the sum of $9,000."

But, as already seen, there was no promise or agreement on the part of plaintiff to furnish said water to said land, and therefore the difference in value between the land as irrigated and without water cannot be considered. Indeed, this general allegation is nullified, or at least modified, by the averment that it would cost the sum of $3,000 to acquire and construct ditches sufficient for the irrigation of said premises. In other words, it sufficiently appears that the failure of the plaintiff as to said ditches involved a loss in the value of the land to the extent of only $3,000. It is thus apparent that in the respects indicated, the cross-complaint is decidedly open to criticism, but probably it is not fatally so in view of the liberality with which pleadings should be regarded. We may even admit for the present purposes that it legally appears that appellant was damaged to the extent of $8,800 by the fraudulent representations of respondent.

[5] But if we grant a fraud was committed, as claimed by the defendant, there was due on said promissory notes to plaintiff the sum of $15,275, in excess of the counterclaim, together with interest, but it nowhere appears in said cross-complaint that this amount or any amount was tendered or that appellant is ready, willing, or able to pay said amount or any amount. In fact, he insists that he is not required to do so before he can maintain his action for damages; and that brings us to the question, admittedly important and vital, whether the doctrine declared and expounded in the case of Hines v. Brodie, 168 Cal. 507, 143 Pac. 729, is applicable to the cross-complaint of defendant filed herein.

[6] Therein are pointed out the two different remedies that are open to one who has been defrauded in a transaction. One of these is rescission, whereby, upon the discovery of the fraud, he repudiates the contract and offers to return what he has received and seeks a restoration to his original position, claiming, of course, whatever damage he may have suffered by reason of the unconscionable conduct of the other party. The pursuit of the other remedy involves an affirmation of the contract, and also a claim for damages on account of the fraud. There is no claim of rescission in the case before us. It is admitted that the defendant elected to stand upon the contract. In such case it is held in the Hines decision, supra, that he must assume the burdens as well as receive the benefits of the contract. In other words, if, instead of disavowing the contract when he discovers the fraud, he chooses to appropriate whatever advantages he may receive through the terms of said agreement, he cannot in the same breath repudiate the terms that are of advantage to the other party. He can neither affirm nor disaffirm in part. In the said decision, it is declared:

"Here the vendee is obliged to accept the burden of the contract with its benefits, according to its terms, with the right to a recovery for the fraud based upon the fact that the benefits which he receives are not those which, under the representations of the vendor, he was entitled to receive."

It is therein stated that the true principle is well declared in the following quotation from Whitney v. Allaire, 1 N. Y. 305:

"It is true that if a party affirms a contract with knowledge of the fraud, he affirms it wholly, and this whether it is executory, or partially executed. But in neither case does he affirm it as a contract made in good faith. He consents to be bound by the provisions of the agreement, but does not thereby release or waive his claim for damages arising from a fraud collateral to the agreement."

It is true that the Hines Case was somewhat different from this in its facts, but the principle announced and emphasized in the decision, is that where the defrauded party affirms the contract, but seeks damages for the collateral fraud, he must, antecedently to his recovery, perform his matured obligations and avow his readiness and ability to perform whatever by the terms of the contract may be required of him in the future. The purchaser therein was not in default, as no installment of the price was due at the time suit was brought, and, of course, the question of performance or default did not arise. But the consideration of ability and willingness to perform the covenants which were to mature in the future did arise, and it was this that the Supreme Court had in view; and it was held to be insufficient to allege that the plaintiff "at the time of said offer to pay, ever since and now is ready, able, and willing to pay said purchase price upon the conditions in said contract until discovery of said fraud." It was this latter phrase, which we have italicized, that the Supreme Court regarded as vitiating the tender. If the party relies upon the contract and seeks its protection he must be ready and willing to meet its demands, not only up to the time of the discovery of the fraud, but at all times during which he claims its benefits.

It is the claim of appellant that a difference must be recognized between an executory and an executed contract. Manifestly, a different situation is created in these two instances. If the contract is executed there is, of course, nothing to be done or performed under its terms. There exists no necessity nor propriety for a tender or offer of performance, and nothing is required of the defrauded party prior to his maintenance of an action for damages for the fraud. But the contract before us is not executed; it is partly executed and partly executory, as was the contract in the Hines Case. Therein the purchaser had paid a part of the purchase price of the land, and had entered into the possession of it. To that extent it was executed. The balance of the price he had not paid, however, nor had he received the conveyance, and therein the contract was executory.

So here, the purchaser paid a part of the purchase price and entered into possession, but he also received a deed. Nevertheless, he owed and still owes the balance of the purchase price, and to that extent the contract is executory. It is true that he gave his promissory notes for the balance, but that constitutes simply written evidence of the indebtedness. He must make the payment of those notes in order to execute the contract. Nor does it matter that he gave a mortgage to secure their payment. That does not relieve him from the obligation to pay the indebtedness, nor would his relation to the contract be different in the case of a mortgage from that of a vendor's lien. In either event there is security for the performance and the duty to perform his promise is just the same.

Nor is there anything inequitable in this requirement. The defendant can avoid it by rescinding after discovery of the fraud. But if he chooses to take advantage of the complete execution of the contract on the part of the vendor, there is nothing unjust in compelling him also to execute before he is permitted to avail himself of the other remedy. Applying this principle to the present case, we may notice that as early as October 1, 1910, appellant discovered the fraud. Nevertheless, he made no effort to rescind, but entered into possession of the property, and thereafter made no further payment either of interest or principal of the indebtedness. The suit was commenced on the notes in April, 1912. The answer and cross-complaint of the defendant was filed in May of the same year. The cause did not come on for trial until January, 1914, when appellant was permitted to file an amended cross-complaint. By stipulation the decision was reserved until the Supreme Court had finally determined the Hines Case. The decree was not rendered, then, until March 31, 1915. Therefore for nearly four years we must presume the defendant remained in possession and enjoyed the property without the payment of any interest or rent, and he may still be in possession. Under such circumstances, it is not unfair to insist that he shall supplement his constructive affirmation by actual performance of the contract.

It is not a question of whether the same result might not be reached by allowing the defendant credit for the fraud, but whether he shall be permitted to blow hot and cold at the same time, and insist upon the contract as far as advantageous to himself, but speculate upon his chances of recovery for the fraud as a substitute for the performance of his own covenants under the contract.

But, at any rate, in the case here it is plain that appellant has suffered damages in a sum no greater than $8,800, and he should, at least, have tendered the difference between that and the amount due under the contract.

We think the decision was just, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

Ex parte HITTSON. (Cr. 637.)

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ~~60~~—DISBARMENT—PRACTICE IN JUSTICE COURT—STATUTES.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 277, 842, general judgment disbarring attorney, pursuant to section 289 et seq., held to deprive him only of the privileges granted by his license, and not to prevent disbarred attorney from appearing as attorney in justice court.

In the matter of the application of W. J. Hittson for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner ordered discharged.

Gesner Williams and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Frank C. Collier, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Habeas corpus. Petitioner seeks to be discharged from the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county by whom he is held under a writ of commitment issued by the superior court. The proceeding in which the writ of commitment was issued was one for contempt. On October 2, 1918, by judgment of the superior court, this petitioner was disbarred from practicing as an attorney in all the courts of the state. On October 21, 1918, an affidavit was presented to the superior court wherein the affiant set forth the substance of the disbarment proceeding and deposed further that petitioner, during the month of October, had as attorney commenced five suits in the justice's court of Los Angeles township, and had during the same month conducted two examinations of judgment debtors in the same court. With that affidavit as a foundation, the court proceeded to a hearing, and adjudged petitioner guilty of a contempt because it appeared that since the entry of judgment of disbarment petitioner had "been practicing in the justice courts." We wish particularly to point out that the accusing affidavit upon which the contempt proceedings were founded contained no statement charging that the petitioner had in any wise held himself out as an attorney at law or done any act, except to file suits in the justice's court, and there appear for the two examinations mentioned.

But one question is presented by counsel appearing in this proceeding; that being as to whether a judgment of disbarment, general in its terms, may operate to prevent the accused from appearing as attorney in a justice's court. Section 842 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

"Parties in justices' courts may appear and act in person or by attorney; and any person, except the constable by whom the summons or jury process was served, may act as attorney."

It is, of course, at once conceded that had the petitioner here not pretended to act generally as an attorney at law, but only to appear in the justice's court under the permission given by the section just referred to, and had he been without license as an attorney, no ground would have been afforded for disbarment proceedings. Counsel for respondent, however, suggests that the judgment followed Code of Civil Procedure, § 299, and by its terms precluded petitioner (theretofore a licensed attorney) from practicing as attorney in all the courts of the state. The question is as to whether by the proceeding of disbarment provided in section 289 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, it is intended that the court by its decree shall be authorized to do more than take away all of the privileges conferred upon the holder of a license to practice law. As we read the sections, they mean nothing more. Referring back to section 277, Code of Civil Procedure, we find that an applicant for admission to practice upon examination, or upon certificate from another state, when admission is allowed, is admitted as attorney and counselor "in all the courts of this state." Section 299, which has already been referred to, provides that the judgment of disbarment shall be that the accused "be precluded from practicing as such attorney or counselor in all the courts of this state," using the precise language which is found in section 277, ante, referring to the admission of applicants. Where the phrase is used in the latter connection, it naturally means that the applicant is admitted to practice in all the courts wherein a license is first required. Such certificate in no wise restricts or enlarges the right of a person to appear as attorney for another in a justice's court. If such is the case, we can find no room for plausible argument sustaining the contention that when judgment of disbarment is entered it does more than take away the rights granted by the order of admission to practice. Without doubt the Legislature would have the right to provide that any person who had been disbarred from the practice of law should be ineligible to appear in a justice's court to represent another, and we venture the suggestion that such legislation is both appropriate and desirable; and we do not intimate that a justice's court may not possess inherent power to refuse to allow a person to appear as attorney for a litigant where such person is known to be dishonest or of disreputable character. Counsel for respondent has cited a New Mexico decision which seems to sustain his view. State v. Marron, 22 N. M. 632, 167 Pac. 9. In so far as it does serve that purpose, we do not concur in its reason or logic. There is a dissenting opinion in the same case. On the other hand, we find in the case of Dan- forth v. Egan, 23 S. D. 43, 119 N. W. 1021, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418, expressions indicating a contrary view to that expressed by the two judges of the New Mexico court. We have taken this case as it is presented upon the one proposition argued by counsel and illustrated by the facts stated in the affidavit which formed the basis for the contempt proceeding. The case so made, in our opinion, must be resolved in favor of the petitioner.

It is ordered that petitioner be discharged from the custody of the sheriff.

GRAVELLY FORD CANAL CO. v. POPE & TALBOT LAND CO. (Civ. 1802; Sac. 2741.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 21, 1918. On Rehearing in Supreme Court, in Bank, May 20, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐13—PRIVATE USE.

The power of eminent domain cannot be used by a private person to promote private enterprises, no matter how necessary or advantageous it may be to their success, or however beneficial to the public, under Const. art. 1, § 14.

2. STATUTES ⇐181(1) — CONSTRUCTION — INTENT.

In interpreting a statute, the courts must, so far as possible, arrive at the legislative intent from the language itself.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐29 — IRRIGATION — "PUBLIC USE."

St. 1911, p. 1407, entitled, "An act regarding irrigation and declaring the same to be a public use," does not confer the right of eminent domain upon a corporation which desires to condemn property for an irrigation canal to be devoted to the irrigation of its lands and none other.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public Use.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by the Gravelly Ford Canal Company against the Pope & Talbot Land Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. W. Dorsey and W. E. Cashman, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to condemn a right of way for a canal. A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled and de-defendant answered; a jury was waived, the cause was tried by the court, and plaintiff had judgment, from which defendant appeals on the judgment roll alone.

It is alleged in the complaint that plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of this state and was incorporated "for the purpose of distributing, supplying, and delivering water for irrigation purposes, and for domestic use, to the stockholders of said corporation, and to the owners of its capital stock, and to that end to construct canals for the appropriation, diversion, and conveyance of water," etc.; that pursuant to said purposes and on May 23, 1912, said corporation "posted a notice of appropriation of 1,500 cubic feet of water of the San Joaquin river flowing per second by means of a ditch taking out of the north bank of the said San Joaquin river," etc., particularly describing the ditch to be 100 feet wide at the bottom and 125 feet wide at the top and $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet in depth, over and across certain lands and among others three sections of land owned by defendant; that for said purpose "it is necessary that the said plaintiff acquire a right of way 200 feet wide along the line of said canal as above set forth;" that defendant's said land is "about midway between the termini of the said canal, and it is impossible to construct the same for the purposes for which it was intended without passing by, through, over, and upon the said lands"; "that the purpose of the said canal is to irrigate 17,000 acres of land, more or less, situate under the said canal and to the west thereof, and in the townships above referred to."

As showing the reasons and necessity for granting the relief prayed for it is alleged:

"That the climate of the San Joaquin Valley in which the said land is situated is by nature arid, and the rainfall in said valley is extremely light and insufficient with which to raise and mature profitable crops without artificial irrigation; and said land is by nature arid and will produce little or no crops without artificial irrigation, and without irrigation it is of little value, but the said land is extremely fertile and productive, and can be tilled, plowed, cultivated, and planted to alfalfa, trees and vines, cereals and other crops, and can then become inhabited and become the dwelling place of a large number of people, and the value of the said land and the assessed value thereof would be greatly increased by the irrigation thereof, and the assessed valuation of the said land for the purposes of taxation would likewise be increased by the irrigation of the said land, and by reason of the irrigation thereof valuable improvements would be placed upon the said land, and, if the said land can be properly irrigated and proper works constructed for the irrigation thereof, the value thereof and the assessed value thereof will be greatly increased, and further valuable improvements can and will be placed upon said lands and valuable crops of alfalfa, trees, vines, cereals, and other crops can be planted and grown thereon, and the irrigation of said land is a public use and a public necessity, and is the public use for which plaintiff seeks to acquire the right of way described herein, and is the public use in behalf of which it is sought to construct, maintain, and operate the canal aforesaid. * * * That the use for which the said right of way is sought to be acquired is a public use within the meaning of an act entitled, 'An act regarding irrigation and declaring the same to be a public use,' approved May 1, 1911 (Statutes of 1911, p. 1407), and the said right of way is necessary to the said public use, and the said plaintiff is in charge of the public use for which the said property is sought to be acquired."

The prayer is that said right of way be condemned "for the public use aforesaid, and acquired by the said plaintiff in accordance with the provisions of title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure."

The court made the following findings of fact:

"(1) That each and every, all and singular the allegations of plaintiff's complaint are and each thereof is true. (2) That all of the capital stock of the said plaintiff is owned by Miller & Lux, Incorporated (a corporation), and all of the land situated under the flow of the said canal and intended to be irrigated therefrom is owned by the said Miller & Lux, Incorporated, and the plaintiff was created to irrigate the lands of said Miller & Lux, Incorporated, and none other. (3) That the water diverted by the said plaintiff is diverted from the San Joaquin river by means of a canal taking out at a point referred to in the complaint, and said plaintiff has never applied for or received from any official of the United States government any special permission or permit or authority to construct the said canal or to divert the water of the San Joaquin river into the same."

As conclusions of law, the court found "that plaintiff is entitled to acquire and condemn the property described in the complaint," subject to certain conditions not necessary to be stated, and entered judgment accordingly.

It is conceded that the condemnation sought is for the purpose of enabling Miller & Lux, a corporation, the owner of all the stock of plaintiff company, to irrigate its lands, "and none other." The question is simply this: Does the statute confer the right of eminent domain upon a person who desires to condemn property for irrigation and to be devoted to his private use only?

[1] From the first case down to the last found in the reported decisions of the Supreme Court and Appellate Courts of this state, it has uniformly been held that the power of eminent domain cannot be used by a private person to promote private enterprises, no matter how necessary or advantageous it may be to their success or however beneficial to the public. In Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 229, 251, the court said:

"The phrase employed in our Constitution is: 'Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.' The words 'public use' here mean a use which concerns the whole community, as distinguished from a particular individual or a particular number of individuals. * * * It may be a use in which but a small portion of the public will be directly benefited, as a street in a town, a bridge, or a railroad, necessarily local in its benefits and advantages, though it must be of such a character as that the general public may, if they choose, avail themselves of it."

"But," said the Supreme Court in Nickey v. Stearns Ranchos Co., 126 Cal. 150, 152, 58 Pac. 459, "in this state private property may not be taken or damaged for private use at all. It may be taken only for public use after just compensation made or paid. Const. art. 1, § 14." The court said in Amador Queen Mining Co. v. De Witt, 73 Cal. 482, 485, 15 Pac. 74, 75:

"The plaintiff cannot have a right of way through defendant's mine condemned for its use in working its own mine. The mine of defendant is his private property, and it is clear that the plaintiff asks for the condemnation in order that it may appropriate a way through that property for its private use. This cannot be done."

Cases to like effect might be multiplied. We do not understand respondent to deny that the foregoing is the rule in this state. San Joaquin & K. R. Canal & Irr. Co. v. Stevinson, 164 Cal. 221, 128 Pac. 924, is cited by respondent to the point that, prior to the enactment of the statute of 1911, "one condemning for irrigation purposes was required to supply water to all who were capable of enjoying it." Respondent's contention is, as stated in its brief:

"That it is in the power of the Legislature to declare irrigation to be a 'public use,' whether the irrigation be by the public generally or by an individual for his own private use, and in answer to appellant's second contention respondent will contend that the statute of May 1, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1407; General Laws, p. 717), has made such a declaration and authorized condemnation for irrigation purposes, whether the public participate directly in the irrigation or not."

Appellant attacks the judgment on several grounds: First, if the act confers the power claimed for it, it is unconstitutional; second, that the act does not authorize condemnation for the use of an individual, but only for the use of the public; third, that plaintiff did not receive any permit from the United States government before making the appropriation of the water which is to be carried through the canal along the right of way condemned by plaintiff in this case. Inasmuch as the judgment in this case, as well as respondent's contention, rests wholly upon the act of 1911, and inasmuch as this is the first case arising under this statute which has been brought to the attention of a reviewing court, it is deemed proper to set forth the entire act. It is as follows:

"An act regarding irrigation and declaring the same to be a public use. Approved May 1, 1911. The people of the state of California, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

"Section 1. Irrigation in the state of California is hereby declared to be a public necessity and a public use, and the power of eminent domain may be exercised on behalf of such public use in accordance with the provisions of title VII, part III of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California; provided, that any person, firm or corporation, exercising the power of eminent domain and in control of water appropriated for sale, rental or distribution, shall not, by this act, be relieved from the duty of furnishing water to irrigate the lands over which any right of way is obtained by condemnation for irrigation purposes as required by an act entitled, 'An act to regulate and control the sale, rental and distribution of appropriated water in this state, other than in any city, city and county, or town therein and to secure the rights of way for the conveyance of such water to the places of use,' approved March 12, 1885, or any other law now in force in this state.

"Sec. 2. This act shall not repeal or modify an act entitled, 'An act to regulate and control the sale, rental and distribution of appropriated water in this state, other than in any city, city and county, or town therein, and to secure the rights of way for the conveyance of such water to the place of use,' approved March 12, 1885, and other acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, nor shall the same be construed to alter or change the law of the state of California as to the duty of any person, firm or corporation in charge of a public use to furnish water.

"Sec. 3. This act shall be in force from and after its passage."

The statute referred to in the act (Stats. 1885, p. 95) declares in section 1 that—

"The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for irrigation, sale, rental, or distribution, is a public use, and the right to collect rates or compensation for use of such water is a franchise, and except when so furnished to any city, city and county, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, shall be regulated and controlled in the counties of this state by the several boards of supervisors thereof, in the manner prescribed in this act."

Subsequent sections provide the procedure by which the supervisors are given the power to fix the "rates at which any person, company, association, or corporation, having or to have appropriated water for sale, rental or distribution, in each of said counties, may and shall sell, rent, or distribute the same." Section 11 provides that—

"Whenever any person, company, association, or corporation, shall have acquired the right to appropriated water, or shall have acquired the right to appropriate such water in this state, such person * * * may proceed to condemn the lands and premises necessary to such right of way, under the provisions of title seven, of part third, of the Code of Civil Procedure * * * and all the provisions of said Code, so far as the same can be made applicable, relating to the condemnation and taking of property for public uses, shall be applicable to the provisions of this act."

"While the courts have not been in agreement on the precise meaning of the term 'public use,' it has been held, without a single dissenting voice, that it does not lie in the power of a state to authorize the taking of the property of an individual without his consent for the private use of another, even on the payment of full compensation." 10 Ruling Case Law, p. 27.

If, therefore, property can be taken only for a public use, either by an individual or corporation, it becomes important to understand what is meant by the term "public use" and upon what condition water may be taken for a public use.

The courts are not at one as to what constitutes public use for which property may be taken. "One line of decisions holds that 'public use' means 'use by the public,' that is, public employment, and consequently that, to make a use public, a duty must devolve on the person or corporation holding property appropriated by right of eminent domain to furnish the public with the use intended, and the public must be entitled, as of right, to use or enjoy the property taken. The opposing view is that 'public use' means 'public advantage,' and that anything which tends to enlarge the resources, increase the industrial energies, and promote the productive power of any considerable number of the inhabitants of a section of the state, or which leads to the growth of towns and the creation of new resources for the employment of capital and labor, contributes to the general welfare and prosperity of the whole community and, giving the Constitution a broad and comprehensive interpretation, constitutes a public use." 10 Ruling Case Law, pp. 24, 26.

There has grown up the further extreme view, grounded on statutory authority, which authorizes "takings by a private individual to enable him to cultivate his land or to carry on his business to better advantage, in a community so situated that public sentiment approves of such takings, either because they are sanctioned by ancient custom, or because the natural prosperity of the state would be seriously retarded if eminent domain could not be employed for such purposes." Id.

[2, 3] In interpreting the statute of 1911, we must, so far as possible, arrive at the legislative intent from the language itself. Considered in its most favorable light, the statute means just what would be meant had section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure been amended by adding "irrigation" to the many "public uses" therein enumerated, in behalf of which the right of eminent domain may be exercised. Why the object was not accomplished by a Code amendment instead of by a separate statute is not apparent, for numerous objects have been added to section 1238 since 1911. But, whatever the reason, the power of eminent domain may be exercised only as provided in title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and may only be exercised in behalf of irrigation as a public use, for the statute so declared. Unless there is something in the act to indicate otherwise, we must presume that the Legislature used the terms "public use" in the act of 1911 in the sense it had used them in section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and as interpreted to mean as used in the Constitution. There can be no question as to the position of our Supreme Court upon this question. It has consistently held that "public use" means "use by the public," and that to make a use public a duty must devolve on the person or corporation holding property appropriated by right of eminent domain to furnish the public with the use intended, and the public must be entitled, as of right, to use or enjoy the property taken. Thayer v. California Development Co., 164 Cal. 117, 126, 128 Pac. 21, where the terms "public use" are defined and many cases cited. Gilmer v. Lime Point, supra.

In declaring in the act of 1911 that irrigation is a public use and that "the power of eminent domain may be exercised on behalf of such public use in accordance with the provisions of title 7, part 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California," the Legislature did no more than it has done in making similar declaration as to the large number of other things by the 18 subdivisions of said section 1238. By this section, subdivision 3, canals for conducting or distributing water for various purposes, among them, distributing water for the use of towns, counties, and "the inhabitants thereof," are declared to be public uses and it was held in San Joaquin, etc., Irr. Co. v. Stevenson, supra, "not only that property may be condemned for the canals and conduits mentioned, but that * * * water may be condemned and taken for public use by any person or corporation proposing to apply it 'to the use of the inhabitants of any county.'" Unless the act of 1911 introduces a new rule, there would seem to be ample authority under section 1238 both for taking water for irrigation and for rights of way for ditches or canals to conduct such water. Respondent finds an argument in this fact in favor of its construction of the act of 1911, for the reason, as is contended, that—

"This being the settled law at the time the statute was enacted, we must presume that the Legislature knew the law as it existed, and sought to make some change therein by statutory innovation. We are to understand, then, that the Legislature intended to change the rule," citing Reed v. Goldneck, 112 Mo. App. 310, 86 S. W. 1104.

We cannot agree with respondent that "a study of the statute will show that the Legislature intended to make a change in the existing law." If we may give any effect to the proviso to section 1 and to section 2, it seems to us such effect tends to refute respondent's construction of the statute, for section 2 expressly declares that the act is not to "be construed to alter or change the law of the state of California as to the duty of any person, firm or corporation in charge of a public use to furnish water." But apart from the proviso and section 2, we think the meaning of the provisions of section 1 immediately preceding the proviso is very plain, and is susceptible of but one construction, and that is, that irrigation is declared to be a public use in the sense that those terms have heretofore been employed, and that the power of eminent domain may be exercised on behalf of such public use in accordance with the Code provisions relating to the subject of eminent domain. The statute nowhere intimates that irrigation as a public use possesses or is given any quality different from any other public use, or that property may be taken for irrigation for the private use of the taker. We do not think, because the Legislature chose to make the declaration by a general statute rather than by an amendment to section 1238, that we are authorized for that reason alone to attribute an intention to the Legislature to give an entirely new meaning to the terms public use. It is not unusual for the Legislature to pass independent acts where the object could be and more properly should be accomplished by Code amendments. Irrigation is not of such state-wide necessity and importance as to make it probable that the Legislature contemplated in its behalf so radical a change in the general policy of the law of eminent domain. There are large portions of the state along the coast where the humidity is so great as to make irrigation wholly unnecessary; there are other extensive portions of the state where excellent crops are produced by the natural rainfall, as it is well known; still other regions are arid and irrigation is necessary to the production of crops. It seems to us that if the Legislature had intended in declaring irrigation to be a public use, that eminent domain may be exercised in its behalf, "whether," as respondent contends, "the irrigation be by the public generally or by an individual for his own private use," such an intention would have been clearly stated. In the absence of any such clearly shown intention, we prefer to believe that the Legislature intended that the terms public use should be given the same meaning as has been given them as found in the Constitution and statutes for over 50 years.

It is obvious that the question hinges on the meaning of the terms "public use." To sustain respondent's contention and to find support for the judgment, we must hold that these terms mean "public advantage" and not "use by the public"; our courts of review must about face and join with those courts that have held the terms to mean anything which tends to enlarge the resources, increase the industrial energies, and promote the production power of any considerable number of inhabitants of a section of the state, or which tends to the growth of towns and the creation of new resources for the employment of capital and labor, or contributes to the general welfare. In the absence of unequivocal statutory direction, we are unwilling to sanction a construction of the terms "public use," found in the act of 1911, which would be so radical a departure from the construction uniformly given them where elsewhere found in the Constitution and laws of the state.

Appellant contends that if the act of 1911 is susceptible of the construction given it by respondent, the act is in violation of section 14, article 1, of the Constitution, which provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use," etc. The view we entertain of the act makes it unnecessary to consider the question of its constitutionality.

The judgment is reversed.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. In the petition for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District special complaint is made of that portion of the opinion which reads as follows:

"Irrigation is not of such state-wide necessity and importance as to make it probable that the Legislature contemplated in its behalf so radical a change in the general policy of the law of eminent domain. There are large portions of the state along the coast where the humidity is so great as to make irrigation wholly unnecessary; there are other extensive portions of the state where excellent crops are produced by the natural rainfall, as it is well known; still other regions are arid and irrigation is necessary to the production of crops."

This portion of the opinion is not in any way essential to the decision, and in denying the application for a hearing in this court we deem it proper to say that we express no opinion thereon.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

GRAVELLY FORD CANAL CO. v. POPE & TALBOT LAND CO. (Civ. 1801.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 9, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 6, 1918.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨157—PAROL LICENSE—DITCHES.

Where a person permits another to go upon his land, make valuable improvements, and expend money in the construction of irrigation ditches across it, he may be estopped to object to a further occupation of the land by the licensee.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨931(3)—PRESUMPTIONS IN SUPPORT OF JUDGMENT.

Where findings of fact and conclusions of law were waived, the appellate court must, upon material questions of fact as to which there is any substantial evidence in support of the judgment, assume that the court properly found such facts in favor of the judgment, but judgment will not be allowed to stand if the evidence was insufficient to support findings essential to sustain it.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨157—PAROL LICENSE—IRRIGATION CANAL.

Facts held to show that landowner consented to construction of irrigation canal over his land, and that the only matter to be determined was the compensation to be paid, and that an agreement as to what the compensation should be was not a condition precedent for the right to enter into possession of the strip occupied.

4. LICENSES ⇨43—LAND—DEFINITION.

A "license" is a personal, revocable, and unassignable privilege conferred, either by writing or by parol, to do one or more acts on land without possessing any interest therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, License.]

5. LICENSES ⇨46—LAND—CREATION—IMPLICATION.

A license may be implied from the acts of the parties, from their relations, and from custom, and where the owner of land, with full knowledge of the facts, tacitly permits another to repeatedly do acts upon the land, a license may be implied from failure to object.

6. LICENSES ⇨58(1)—LAND—REVOCATION.

A license by deed or parol under the well-settled rule of the common law is revocable at pleasure, unless under certain circumstances, among them that it is executed or expenditures have been made by licensee on strength of license, it would be inequitable to permit a revocation.

7. EQUITY ⇨67—LACHES.

Courts of equity will discourage laches and delay in the enforcement of rights, and the general rule is that nothing can call forth a court of equity into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence.

8. EQUITY ⇨71(4)—LACHES.

While mere lapse of time may not constitute laches, lying by and acquiescence are important factors in determining whether there has been such laches as to constitute a bar to relief in equity.

9. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨157—PAROL LICENSE—REVOCATION.

Where an owner knew for several years that another person planned to construct an irrigation canal across his land, and entered into negotiations as to compensation, and the other party expended large sums of money in constructing the canal up to and over the land, the landowner was estopped to object to a further use; his only remedy being at law for damages.

10. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨157—LICENSE—CONSTRUCTION OF CANAL.

In an action involving the right of an appropriator of water to maintain an irrigation ditch constructed over the land of another, the question being whether the latter had consented to its construction and was estopped to object thereto, it was immaterial that the taking of the water would interfere with the use of previous appropriators.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by the Gravelly Ford Canal Company, a corporation, against the Pope & Talbot Land Company, a corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied; Angellotti, C. J., and Sloss and Wilbur, JJ., dissenting.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. W. Dorsey and W. E. Cashman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal from the final judgment of the superior court of Madera county, in favor of defendant and against plaintiff, and granting a permanent injunction. The parties to the action are the same as in No. 1802, recently decided by this court (178 Pac. 150), wherein plaintiff sought to condemn a right of way over defendant's land under the act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1407). In that case the lower court sustained plaintiff's right to condemn. Upon review we were constrained to reverse the judgment. The purpose for which plaintiff was organized and the necessity for a right of way over defendant's land were fully set forth in that action and need not be here repeated. It is probable that the learned trial judge, who held plaintiff entitled to condemn a right of way under the act of 1911, granted the injunction prayed for by defendant in the present action on its cross-complaint for the reason that plaintiff should be restricted to its right to condemn. On the other hand, plaintiff, believing it had the right to proceed with the work of constructing its canal, did not rely alone upon its action to condemn, but went forward with its work on the assumption that defendant had consented thereto. Being interrupted in the work by defendant, plaintiff sought to enjoin defendant from interference therewith. Defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint seeking to enjoin plaintiff from proceeding with said work. At the hearing the court granted the injunction prayed for by defendant.

In its complaint, plaintiff alleged, among other facts, the following: That plaintiff is a mutual water company, organized for the purpose of supplying water to its stockholders; that it posted and recorded notice of appropriation of the waters of the San Joaquin river in May, 1912, and surveyed the line of its canal from the San Joaquin river to Fresno river; that a right of way 200 feet wide is necessary; that plaintiff immediately began the construction of the canal and expended over $48,000 in the construction thereof; that, as surveyed, it runs through three sections of defendant's land and describes its location through those sections. Paragraph 8 of the complaint is as follows:

"That during all of the times herein mentioned the said defendant well knew of the plans and surveys of the said plaintiff, and during the year 1912 the said plaintiff in the construction of the said canal entered into and upon the said lands of the said defendant and laid out and surveyed the said canal through the said lands, and in that year commenced the construction of said canal through the said lands, and from time to time has since continued work upon the said canal through the lands of the defendant aforesaid, and has partially constructed the said canal through the said lands for a distance of approximately three miles in length, and has expended on the portion of said canal passing through the defendant's land upwards of three thousand dollars, and the said plaintiff so entered into and upon the said lands and did the work with the knowledge, consent, and acquiescence of the said defendant, and the said defendant at all times knew that the said plaintiff was constructing the said canal on the said lands of defendant, and was spending the money aforesaid, and the said plaintiff is still in possession of said strip of land through the said lands of defendant aforesaid, and is now actually engaged in completing the construction of the said canal through the same."

It is also alleged that defendant's said land is situated midway between the termini of the canal and that the canal is designed to irrigate 17,000 acres of land. Paragraph 12 is as follows:

"That ever since the said plaintiff surveyed the said canal through the said land of defendant, and ever since the said plaintiff commenced the construction of the said canal through the said land of defendant, the said plaintiff and the said defendant Pope & Talbot Land Company have been engaged in negotiations looking to the fixing of the damages which would be caused to the said defendant and its said lands by the occupation of the said right of way in the construction and operation of said canal, and looking to the fixing of the amount to be paid the said defendant therefor, and at all times the said defendant permitted the said plaintiff to continue to construct the said canal through the said land relying upon the representations of the said defendant that the said matters would be amicably adjusted and agreed to, and at all times the said plaintiff in constructing the said canal through the said lands relied upon the consent of the said defendant that it might enter upon said land and construct the said canal, and relied upon the representations of the said defendant that said matters of damages and compensation would be amicably settled and adjusted between them, and also, on the faith of the license so granted by the said defendant to said plaintiff to enter upon the said land and construct said canal, the said plaintiff also constructed other portions of the said canal both north and south of the lands of the said defendant, and which without the said canal and right of way through the said land of defendants would be useless and of no value, and during all of said time the said defendant had full knowledge of all of the things aforesaid and never at any time until the month of December, 1916, in any way objected to the occupation of the said right of way or to the construction of the said canal through the said land."

Paragraph 14 is as follows:

"That the said plaintiff has at all times been and still is ready, able, and willing to pay the said defendant just compensation for the right of way sought to be acquired through its lands for the canal aforesaid, and all damages which will be caused to the said defendant and its said land by the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said canal under and upon the same, and said plaintiff hereby offers and agrees to pay the same, but the said defendant now refuses to fix or agree upon the amount of the said compensation or damages or either thereof, and notwithstanding the willingness of the said plaintiff to pay such compensation and damages the said defendant now does and ever since the month of December, 1916, has refused to recognize the right of the said plaintiff to continue in the occupation of the said right of way or to continue in the construction and completion of the said canal aforesaid through the lands of said defendant."

It is further alleged that, owing to the topography of the country, the canal is located at the only practicable place; that defendant is the owner of the land subject to plaintiff's right to occupy the canal across the same; that plaintiff is in actual possession of the land, and defendant is estopped from interfering therewith. The prayer is that defendant be enjoined from interfering with the continued occupation of the canal and for damages.

A demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and defendant answered in effect denying substantially all the allegations of the complaint. The answer also sets up certain affirmative defenses; that the entire natural flow of the San Joaquin river has been and must be continued to be used by prior appropriators and the use of water through said canal would result in depriving other and richer land of water; that Miller & Lux (incorporated) is the sole owner of the capital stock of plaintiff to whom alone defendant has power to distribute water; that there is no appropriable water at the intake of said canal; that plaintiff does not intend and has no power to put said canal to a public use.

Defendant alleges in its cross-complaint certain facts, stated as follows in defendant's brief:

"That the defendant is the owner of 20 sections of land in Madera county; that from time to time during November and December of 1916 and 1917, a large force of men with teams and machinery forcibly broke into parts of said land and took up and removed soil therefrom in the construction of the canal; that said entry and work was without any authority or right whatever from the defendant and contrary to its wishes and against and in contempt of its repeated protests; that the location of the line of said canal and construction thereof, so far as it has progressed, practically bisects the said 20 sections belonging to the defendant and prevents the natural surface water flowing from the higher to the lower portions thereof, and the levee constructed along the east bank will back up surface waters and thereby cover large areas of the defendant's ground, drown and destroy the natural grass and herbage and the crops of grain annually produced thereon, and will saturate and water-log the soil and bring to the surface the alkali in the low places and depressions thereof and prevent the growth of any vegetation; that said canal will be impassable for man, beast, or machinery, will require the construction and maintenance of numerous and expensive bridges, and will essentially interfere with the use and enjoyment of the defendant's land and prevent its beneficial use; that plaintiff claims an adverse interest in the defendant's land which is without any right; that plaintiff has not any estate, right, title, or interest whatever in the defendant's lands; that defendant prays, among other things, for a permanent injunction."

To this cross-complaint plaintiff answered, alleging that it entered into the lands with the knowledge and consent and acquiescence of the defendant; incorporated the allegations of its complaint; pleaded the defense of laches and delay; and alleged that it is ready, able, and willing to pay the value of the right of way; and prayed for the relief sought in the complaint.

[1] We think the complaint may be considered as relying upon estoppel, on which, as appellant claims, it is primarily based and that the estoppel arises out of a parol license. It has been held by some courts that where a person permits another to go upon his land, makes valuable improvements, expends money in the construction of ditches or canals, no estoppel arises because the licensee is charged with the knowledge of the licensor's ownership of the land and of the rule of law that the licensor may at any time object to a further occupation of the land by the licensee. Such, however, is not the law in this state.

As the true rule in such cases is matter of contention in the present case, we feel justified in quoting at some length from the decision in Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 518, 83 Pac. 808, 809 (113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704), which was the case of a parol license to construct a water ditch. Mr. Justice Henshaw, with his usual clearness, stated the views of the court:

"Appellant contends that a parol license to do an act upon the land of the licensor, while it justifies anything done by the licensee before revocation, is revocable at the option of the licensor, so that no further acts may be justified under it, and this, although the intention was to confer a continuing right, and money has been expended by the licensor upon the faith of the license; and that such a license cannot be changed into an equitable right on the ground of equitable estoppel. To the support of this proposition is offered authority of great weight and of the highest respectability. The argument in brief is that a license in its very nature is a revocable permission; that whoever accepts that permission does it with knowledge that the permission may be revoked at any time; that the rule cannot be changed, therefore, because the licensee has foolishly or improvidently expended money in the hope of a continuance of a license, upon the permanent continuance of which he has no right in law or in equity to rely; that to convert such a parol license into a grant or easement under the doctrine of estoppel is destructive of the statute of frauds, which was meant to lay down an inflexible rule; and, finally, that there is no room or play for the operation of the doctrine of estoppel, since the licensor has in no way deceived the licensee by revocation, has put no fraud upon him, and has merely asserted a right which has been absolutely reserved to him by the very terms of his permission. No one has stated this argument more clearly and cogently than Judge Cooley, who, holding to this construction of the law, has expressed it in his work on Torts. Cooley on Torts (2d Ed.) 364. But that the same eminent jurist recognized the injustice and the hardship which follow such a conclusion is plainly to be seen from his opinion in Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 41 Mich. 453 (2 N. W. 639), where, discussing this subject, he says: 'But the injustice of a revocation after the licensee, in reliance upon the license, has made large and expensive improvements, is so serious that it seems a reproach to the law that it should fail to provide some adequate protection against it. Some of the courts have been disposed to enforce the license as a parol contract which has been performed on one side.' Indeed, the learned jurist with equal accuracy might have stated that the majority of courts have so decided in accordance with the leading case of Rerick v. Kern, 14 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 267 (16 Am. Dec. 497). That case was carefully considered, and it was held that it would be to countenance a fraud upon the part of the licensor if he were allowed, after expenditure of money by the licensee upon the faith of the license, to cut short by revocation the natural term of its continuance and existence, and that, under the doctrine of estoppel, the licensor would not be allowed to do this. The decision was that the licensor would be held to have conveyed an easement commensurate in its extent and duration with the right to be enjoyed."

In the case of Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., 154 Cal. 785, 99 Pac. 179, the court said:

"The principal contention upon appeal is that this court should recede from the view which it adopted and expressed in Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516 (113 Am. St. Rep. 301 [7 Ann. Cas. 704], 83 Pac. 808), and should adopt the contrary view, that a parol license, regardless of its nature, is always revocable at the will of the licensor. This question was duly considered in Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516 [83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704], the conflict of authority was recognized, and the conclusion there expressed deliberately adopted. We perceive no reason for receding from that conclusion."

The Stoner Case was distinguished in Davis v. Martin, 157 Cal. 657, 661, 108 Pac. 866, and in Broads v. Mead, 159 Cal. 767, 116 Pac. 46, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1125, upon the facts; but the rule laid down in the Stoner Case was in no degree impaired.

We are therefore chiefly concerned with the question whether or not the facts in the present case bring it within the rule enunciated in Stoner v. Zucker, supra. Most of the evidence is found in a somewhat extended correspondence conducted by J. Leroy Nickel, president of Miller & Lux, incorporated, who also testified as a witness for plaintiff, and by W. H. Talbot, president of Pope & Talbot Company, defendant. Mr. Talbot did not testify.

Certain facts may be stated as shown by the evidence without contradiction. Miller & Lux, Inc., owned a large body of land situated between the San Joaquin river and Fresno river, and east of what is known as the Aliso Canal, and extending from the intake of the canal in question at the San Joaquin river northerly about 15 miles to the Fresno river; defendant also owned a large body of land, three sections of which, to wit, sections 9, 21, and 22, township 12 south, range 16 east, are about midway between the termini of said canal. That in surveying the line of said canal it was found unavoidably necessary to pass over parts of these three sections of land in order to furnish water to the Miller & Lux lands lying north of defendant's land. The canal was designated to irrigate about 17,000 acres of the Miller & Lux land which had theretofore been unirrigated. Plaintiff corporation was organized in May, 1912, and all of its stock was owned by Miller & Lux. In that month plaintiff made its appropriation of the water of the San Joaquin river, the object being to carry out the canal enterprise and convey said water for the irrigation of the lands of Miller & Lux and not as a public service corporation. Construction work was done on the canal by Miller & Lux in the spring of 1912 before plaintiff was incorporated, but thereafter the work was prosecuted by plaintiff under an agreement with Miller & Lux. More or less work was done in 1912 for the entire length of the canal, including construction work through defendant's said sections of land. Miller & Lux was in possession of two of defendant's said three sections of land and other of its land as lessee. There was construction work done on the canal in 1912 from its intake for its entire length to Fresno river, through defendant's land as well as through land of Miller & Lux. Mr. Nickel testified:

"In that year I took up with the representatives of Pope & Talbot Company the matter of their granting a right of way for a canal through those sections of land (9, 21, 22), and from that time until shortly before the commencement of this action (complaint was filed January 9, 1917), these negotiations continued with that company. I, myself, carried on personally the greater part of those negotiations. The greater part of those negotiations were by written correspondence passing between myself and the representatives of Pope & Talbot Land Company. * * * Whatever I did in this matter, I did on behalf of the two corporations I have mentioned." (Miller & Lux, Inc., and plaintiff.)

The witness then produced and there was admitted a number of letters constituting the written correspondence between the parties concerned. It becomes necessary to show the material portions of this correspondence.

The letters are between Miller & Lux, Inc., and the defendant and embrace a period commencing March 29, 1912, and ending December 22, 1916. In the first letter, March 29, 1912, Miller & Lux informs defendant that it has made a survey for a canal from Gravelly Ford to the Fresno river running through certain lands of the defendant, and stating:

"We desire to purchase from you for this right of way a strip 200 feet wide. This apparently wide strip is necessary for the reason of the large capacity of the canal and its shallow depth necessary on account of the hardpan through a great portion of the country south of your lands. We wish to commence construction at each end of the proposed canal in a few days and sincerely hope we may be able to obtain from you the desired right of way. Kindly let us hear from you stating the price you will charge us for the land required."

March 30, 1912, defendant replied:

"Before going further into this matter, we would thank you to send us a blue print or at least a rough drawing showing just how this canal is to run through our property. Upon receipt of such a sketch, we shall be glad to take the matter up and advise you further."

On April 1, 1912, Miller & Lux acknowledged receipt of the last above letter and states that a map of the survey is being prepared and the blueprint will be forwarded when completed. April 16, 1912, Miller & Lux writes defendant referring to the letter of March 29th, in which it had made application for a right of way for a canal through defendant's lands and describes the course of the proposed line of the canal. April 18, 1912, defendant replies that, while it can follow the right of way roughly from the description given, it would like to have a blueprint showing the exact course of the right of way "after which we shall then be glad to take the matter up further with you." April 22, 1912, Miller & Lux writes defendant stating that, in compliance with its letter of April 18th, it inclosed two plats showing the course of the right of way through defendant's lands and stating that the engineer has now decided that the strip 200 feet wide would be sufficient. May 4th defendant replies, stating, among other things:

"* * * In this connection now have to suggest that you advise us just what you desire in the premises, stating definitely what concessions and reservations for use of water, etc., will be granted to the owners of adjacent property. If you will present these matters definitely and in detail, we shall be glad to take the matter up with the owners and advise you as to their conclusions."

Miller & Lux replied on May 6, 1912, stating:

"Our Mr. Nickel, who has this matter in charge, is in the San Joaquin Valley at present, and your letter will receive attention on his return to the office next week."

On May 13, 1912, Miller & Lux replied to defendant's letter of May 4th:

"In regard to the proposed right of way for a canal through your land and Madera county, our proposition is to purchase outright a strip of land of the width specified, paying you the full value for the same. In regard to any arrangement for the sale of water to you, or any concession for the use of water in exchange for the right of way, such act would give the canal the character of a public service corporation and would thus render entirely undesirable the building of the canal. We should be glad, however, if you so desire, to have you join with us in the expense of constructing this entire canal and assume equal responsibility on an acreage basis of the cost of the project. You would thus share in the use of water such percentage as your land would bear to ours. We have a large force of men, teams, etc., engaged upon this work and it is desirable that we have an understanding as early as practicable, as the construction will soon be up to your land."

On May 17, 1912, Miller & Lux wrote to defendant, referring to its letter of May 13th, and stating:

"If you prefer it, we should be willing to exchange land with you, granting an acreage elsewhere equal to the proposed right of way, provided it be of similar quality and so forth. This has occurred to us as being possibly more acceptable to you than either of the other propositions, and if so, we shall be glad to take it up with you for detailed consideration any time."

On May 24, 1912, Miller & Lux again wrote to defendant, in which letter it states:

That it has just received a letter from Mr. Clyne, who has charge of the construction of the canal, stating that the information which it requested of him for defendant's benefit "is not as explicit as we would like to submit. According to Mr. Clyne's idea, it is difficult, if not impossible, to estimate the cost of constructing this canal by reason of the unknown expense involved in removing the hardpan. Until the surface soil be removed, and the hardpan encountered as the canal construction proceeds, the quantity of hardpan to be removed is entirely indefinite. However, it is safe to say the entire cost of the canal and structures will not be less than $100,000, and not more than $125,000. Our proposition is if you should wish to join us in this enterprise that the entire cost of construction and future maintenance be borne pro rata according to the quantity of land owned by this corporation and yourselves under the flow of the canal susceptible of irrigation. * * * There are some phases connected with this enterprise which you should, perhaps, understand more fully before making up your mind finally as to whether you wish to embark with us upon this project. We are almost sure to meet with expensive litigation, lasting in all probability through many years, and you will, of course be expected to bear your proper proportion of the same. It will also be necessary that a very careful agreement be drawn by which any rights that would accrue to your land would be made subordinate to all of our prior rights, which will involve our entire irrigation system, aside from this Gravelly Ford Canal. If you would like to go into this matter more fully we should be glad to have Mr. Talbot call and see us at his very earliest convenience."

May 25, 1912, defendant answered the last above letter, stating:

"Our Mr. W. H. Talbot will endeavor to arrange to see your Mr. Nickel some time Monday, which we trust will be satisfactory."

June 18, 1912, Miller & Lux wrote to defendant stating that Mr. Ogle, division superintendent of Miller & Lux, had suggested a basis for an exchange of land that he thought would be mutually beneficial to the parties concerned, and stating that it would be glad to take the matter up on a basis of offering an exchange of lands of equal value:

"We beg leave to suggest that if the exchange seems desirable to you that you appoint a representative to meet a representative appointed by us to agree upon the quality and value of the lands to be exchanged and in case these representatives fail to agree, that they be authorized to call upon a third person to conclude an agreement. This proposition is not submitted in lieu of our previous proposition to have you join with us in the construction of the proposed canal, and should you, upon reflection, prefer to join us in the building of the canal with a view to irrigate the lands you own under the canal, we shall be pleased to carry out that arrangement."

June 20, 1912, defendant acknowledges the receipt of the last above letter with reference to an exchange of land, stating:

"* * * after we have had an opportunity of presenting this suggestion to our superintendent, we will again communicate with you."

July 22, 1912, defendant wrote to Miller & Lux referring to the suggestion that an exchange of lands might be effected, quoting from a letter written by defendant's superintendent in which he states that he has been over parts of the lands proposed for an exchange and that for satisfactory examination of the relative values it would facilitate his labors if he were furnished a plat "showing the acreage lying on the east side of the canal of the various sections of their land through which the canal passes." July 25, 1912, Miller & Lux replied, stating that it had prepared a plat showing its lands east of the canal as requested, and on August 31, 1912, Miller & Lux submitted a proposition definitely describing its lands which it proposed to exchange for definitely described lands belonging to defendant and suggested that each party appoint an appraiser to appraise the lands and if they could not agree, to appoint a third, and that the decision of a majority of the appraisers be binding, and in the case the lands of defendant should be more valuable than those of Miller & Lux, that it pay the difference in cash. "If this general idea is satisfactory to you, kindly let us know and we will draw a formal agreement." September 3, 1912, defendant acknowledged the receipt of the last above letter, stating that it desired a blueprint diagram showing the location of the proposed canal which it had not yet received and that it wanted this map to forward to its superintendent to aid him in picking out the land to be received in exchange for its land, and stating:

"* * * While we have not had a chance to look over the sections mentioned in your letter, at the same time we would be glad to have this map to refer to and would thank you to send it to us at your earliest convenience."

September 5, 1912, defendant wrote Miller & Lux, acknowledging receipt of the plat of the lands proposed for exchange, and stating that it would send the map to its superintendent. October 8, 1912, defendant wrote Miller & Lux:

"Further referring to proposed exchange of lands in Madera county in order to permit of the construction of your canal, would state that we have been in communication with our superintendent, and after going thoroughly over this matter, it has been suggested that we exchange on the basis of descriptions as follows: [Then follows a description of the sections proposed for exchange.] An exchange as above outlined would block out our holdings and would at the same time enable you to proceed with the construction of the canal as now surveyed. By this exchange, we would be transferring to you ten full sections and that portion of section 22 lying west of the east bank of the canal, while you would be transferring to us fifteen full sections. We consider this a fair and equitable basis of exchange for the reason that the land which we propose to transfer to you lies west of the canal and would, therefore, lie under the flow of the Gravelly Ford Canal and in consequence thereof would be greatly enhanced in value. * * * If an arrangement along these lines meets with your approval, we shall be glad to take the matter up further with you and conclude the final arrangements."

On the same date October 8, 1912, Miller & Lux acknowledged receipt of the above letter, stating:

"The proposed exchange of land does not appeal to us at all. This proposition for an exchange of land emanated from you and not from us. We supposed and understood that your object in wishing to exchange land was to consolidate your holdings, and we never for a moment contemplated an exchange on any other basis than an equivalent in acreage, with such adjustment for any difference in the value of the land as the appraisers might find to exist."

October 22, 1912, Miller & Lux wrote to defendant:

"Since apparently there seems to be no practicable basis for an exchange of land as contemplated, we should be pleased to take up with you the matter of a right of way through your lands for our Gravelly Ford Canal. At your convenience we should like to hear from you on this subject."

October 25, 1912, defendant acknowledged the receipt of the last above letter, saying:

"We have no suggestions to offer other than those already submitted. At the inception of the negotiations, we requested you to indicate what concessions in the way of water rights, etc., you would be willing to grant in return for right of way through our property, and upon your refusal to consider any such arrangement, we have endeavored to come to an understanding on the basis of an exchange of certain lands, which has likewise been rejected on your part. We have endeavored to suggest a means of coming together, but as our proposals have not received favorable consideration, we shall now be glad to have you submit some plan that might be mutually acceptable. In conclusion we wish to add, however, that we shall expect something in exchange for this right of way which shall be commensurate with the value of the privilege which you are seeking."

October 26, 1912, Miller & Lux replied to the above letter stating, among other things:

"Permit us to say the last paragraph in your letter would seem to imply that we are expected to recognize in adjusting the value for the land conveyed for the right of way the same principle, which you suggested in regard to the exchange of land, viz., that the value of the land that you may convey to us is not to be determined upon the intrinsic value of the land, but upon its enhancement in value by reason of the application of water upon the land. We do not think that this is a tenable position on your part. On the contrary, we think the large expenditure of money involved in the construction of the canal, the risk and expense incurred in connection with the litigation that is likely to ensue, together with the expense of operating the irrigation system is a return which should legitimately accrue to the owners of the irrigation system. At least we have never heard of any different principle that was recognized in this state."

Attention is then called to the act of 1911, considered in the condemnation case heretofore decided by this court and referred to above, and the writer states that—

Under this law "an owner of land shall receive compensation for the value of the land so condemned without regard to any possible enhancement in the value of the lands upon which the water may be applied. We are quite willing to pay you for this land all that any court or jury would award, and we cannot imagine that on giving the matter proper consideration you would think of demanding any more than this. We hope you will not embarrass us by declining to negotiate with us on the basis of the value of the land, and thereby delay the operation of our irrigation system. If you prefer to accept land, in lieu of cash, for the acreage required for the right of way, we are quite willing to convey to you lands of equal value for the acreage you may convey to us. We hope we shall hear from you again on this subject at your earliest convenience."

At this point the correspondence seems to have broken off; at any rate, no letters appear again until October 27, 1915, and is resumed by letter of Miller & Lux to defendant of that date, stating:

"In accordance with our conversation of last Monday, we submit herewith two propositions covering the proposed exchange of lands in Madera county."

The first of these propositions related to the Aliso Canal project, and the second with regard to an exchange of lands as had been previously contemplated. October 28, 1915, defendant replied expressing disappointment at the offer contained in the letter of October 27th, and stating that it had notified its superintendent, Mr. Straube, "to proceed at once with the erection of the necessary buildings for the new ranches which will be placed under cultivation this coming season." November 3, 1915, Miller & Lux wrote the defendant as follows:

"Referring to the matter of the right of way for our Ford Canal concerning which it is understood the matter is to be considered by you at an early date, I wish to suggest that, in view of the fact that this canal runs through only three sections of your land, it may be desirable that an exchange be made for these three sections, and thus avoid the necessity of surveying a right of way through your land, and thus dividing the sections."

November 6, 1915, defendant wrote Miller & Lux with reference to the renewal of the lease of the Madera county lands, stating:

"We now inclose herewith original and duplicate which we would thank you to sign, returning one copy for our files."

November 9, 1915, Miller & Lux wrote defendant acknowledging receipt of defendant's letter of November 6th, and stating:

"We understood clearly your position, in regard to the matter of exchanging lands, when we wrote you on the 3d inst. We thought possibly, however, that you might prefer to have the land you farm intact, rather than have the Ford Canal pass through it, and we had this in mind when we suggested that possibly there may be three sections of our land which you would prefer, rather than retain the three sections you now own through which the canal passes. However, since this does not appeal to you, we have nothing further to suggest. Please allow us to add: In regard to the apparent irreconcilable differences, which precludes an exchange of land, while we are not able to appreciate the consistency of your position that the payment by us of what it will cost to build the levees is unsatisfactory to you, for the reason you feel that you are entitled to share, in some manner, in the benefits that would accrue to us by obtaining additional acreage under our canal, we should not be unwilling to meet your views at least to some extent, in addition to the payment of the cost of the levees, if the benefits you seem to think we would obtain were material and important. The fact is, however, that the benefits are almost entirely imaginary, for the reason we already own more land under the canal than we are able to irrigate, or probably ever shall be. If the capacity of the canal were sufficiently large, and the quantity of water available ample for irrigating all of the lands we now own under the Ford Canal, plus the land you also own under the canal, we could, no doubt, afford to pay you a considerable sum, as a bonus, in addition to an exchange of land of equal value, but since these conditions do not exist, there is no basis whatever for our meeting your views. We trust you will be able to take up the matter soon as to the basis on which you prefer to consider the right of way, either to sell us the necessary strip through the three sections referred to, or that we convey an acreage of equal quantity and value for your land embraced in the right of way."

Correspondence broke off again and was not resumed until October 31, 1916, by letter of defendant to Miller & Lux in which it stated:

"We were very much surprised to be advised by our superintendent that you have again resumed work on the Ford Canal through lands of the Pope & Talbot Land Co. in sections 21 and 22, township 12, south, range 16 east, and we are quite sure that this action has been taken without your knowledge, for when this question was up for consideration on a previous occasion, we were assured that no further steps would be taken on your part before first again taking the matter up with us and an understanding having been reached between us."

November 1st Miller & Lux acknowledged the receipt of this letter and stated that it would have attention on the return of Mr. Nickel to its office. November 6, 1916, defendant wrote Miller & Lux calling attention to a recent visit by Miller & Lux to defendant during which the question of the right of a private corporation to condemn a right of way for irrigation, presumably under the act of 1911, and stating:

"This information will greatly facilitate matters and probably save time in reaching a conclusion."

Subsequent letters relate chiefly to this subject and to the opinions of attorneys for both parties. On November 29, 1916, defendant wrote, among other things:

"We have no desire or wish to hinder you unnecessarily in your construction work, but we must ask for a reasonable time in which to investigate the matter before we can permit any further work on our lands."

Finally, on December 20, 1916, defendant wrote to Miller & Lux, stating:

"We have, as previously advised, instructed our superintendent to prevent any further construction work on our lands, and to resist any such effort to the fullest extent. We cannot permit the canal to be completed with the idea of having our rights determined at a later date, but shall on the other hand expect work to be suspended until a court ruling may be had under condemnation proceedings, which we are willing that you commence in order to determine your right to condemn a right of way over our property."

The action, No. 1802, heretofore referred to, followed as also this action.

As shown by the letters introduced, there was a break in the written correspondence from October 26, 1912, to October 27, 1915; but it appeared from the testimony that work on the canal continued after 1912 without interruption or objection by defendant. Mr. Nickel testified:

"We continued working on this canal and the portions of it that go through the Pope & Talbot land up to the time the temporary injunction was issued in this case. (The temporary injunction was granted May 8, 1917.) The canal was completed up to the Pope & Talbot land at that time. It was completed sufficiently to carry water beyond that from there to the Fresno river. We had our men there on the ground working on this particular part on the Pope & Talbot land trying to complete it. Although construction work was done all the way through in 1912 on the entire canal, including the Pope & Talbot land, it was not completed. It was not down clear to the depth we expected to go."

Other witnesses who knew of the work and assisted in it testified to like effect and there was no controverting testimony. Mr. Nickel testified:

"At the beginning of the correspondence with Pope & Talbot we were the lessee of some sections of their land. (Including among them two of the three sections involved.) I am quite positive that we never went on the Pope & Talbot land until we had taken up negotiations with Mr. Talbot. I do remember very distinctly before we ever did a stroke of work on their land I had discussed that with Mr. Talbot. When I mentioned the fact of our project to them and discussed the subject by correspondence or orally, they did not oppose it. * * * I know that Mr. Talbot knew when the work was done and I explained it to him."

He testified that his company had expended $80,000 on the work and it appeared that $3,000 of this had been expended on defendant's land.

Witness Bader, Miller & Lux's foreman of the division including this canal, took charge in February, 1914. He testified they irrigated in that year 800 acres of barley and some grass and a much larger acreage in 1915 and 1916 and put in some alfalfa; that two sections of land north of the defendant's land have been checked and prepared for irrigation besides two or three more roughly checked. He testified, as did other witnesses, that the flow of water comes occasionally in December and January, but that "the dependable flow comes in May, June, and July, and at times in April." He testified further:

"In 1915 we had a whole month of water filling that canal in January and we had six weeks of it later constantly. * * * We had water also in 1915 from May 4th up to July 20th, * * * and some going by. It wasted on a waste gate. If it had not been for that waste gate, it would have gone through to Fresno river. In 1916 we had water until July beginning in the latter part of April. * * * In 1912 they worked on this canal about three months; in 1913, 1914, and 1915, about the same. This year we worked more."

Defendant introduced two witnesses. Clement H. Miller, a civil engineer, testified to certain facts in relation to the seasonal flow of water through the San Joaquin river and to the number of second feet diverted by various canals and pumps which he stated he had "gathered from state and government publications on the subject and statistics gathered by various commissions of the state of California and from personal observations and calculations as an engineer." He described the land lying west of the canal as what is known as hardpan land "impregnated with alkali to a greater or less extent" and not desirable as irrigable land and "especially as better land can be acquired in the immediate vicinity." He testified:

"This canal, as I view it, is intended, and is only useful to wash out alkali by flooding and turning the water impregnated with alkali into the Fresno river or Aliso Canal." He expressed the opinion that this canal "is constructed and designed to carry extreme flood waters in large volumes for a few days only"; that "this canal if complete will back water over lands belonging to the defendant lying east of the canal, and will also flood lands belonging to the defendant lying west of the canal, by seepage. The extent of this overflow and seepage cannot be determined at this time." He stated that "there is not sufficient water in the San Joaquin river to supply all of the water needed by the canals taking water out of the river, to irrigate the lands lying under them, and there is not a dependable flow available for the Gravelly Ford Canal under present conditions. To divert water into this canal, is to deprive other existing canals of water needed to irrigate much better land."

Witness J. C. Straube, superintendent of defendant company for many years, testified that he was familiar with the Gravelly Ford Canal. He testified:

"It is surveyed across the lands of Pope & Talbot Land Company. It has never been completed across these lands. No water has ever flowed through it across these lands. Some work was done on sections 21, 22, and 9, township 12 south, range 16 east, in 1912, but the work has not been completed. The canal will back floodwaters over lands lying east of it, and water will seep through the west bank on lands belonging to Pope & Talbot Land Company lying west of the canal."

We have endeavored to state all the evidence bearing upon the issues, perhaps more fully than it need to have been.

[2, 3] Findings of fact and conclusions of law were waived. We are without aid as to the view taken by the trial court upon the issues of fact presented in the record. We must, upon material questions of fact as to which there is any substantial evidence in support of the judgment assume that the court properly found in defendant's favor. If, however, there was no evidence, or if the evidence was insufficient in support of an implied finding essential to sustain the judgment, or where the uncontroverted evidence justified such a finding in favor of plaintiff instead of defendant's favor, the judgment cannot stand. Thus, as we view the case, the vital facts upon which plaintiff relies are found set forth in paragraphs 8, 12 and 14 of the complaint, quoted above. The evidence, in our opinion, and without substantial conflict, fully supports the averments in said paragraphs. It seems to us that the correspondence by letter between the parties considered together with the uncontroverted testimony leads to no other reasonable conclusion than that this canal project and the purpose for which the canal was to be constructed were fully understood by defendant and that the construction was entered upon and prosecuted with reasonable diligence for nearly four years with defendant's knowledge, consent, and acquiescence and with the understanding that the only matter to be determined was the compensation to be paid or given defendant by Miller & Lux for the right of way, and that as to this the parties anticipated no difficulty in reaching an agreement and did not make the consummation of such agreement a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to enter into possession of defendant's land, complete the canal, and operate it for the purposes for which it was designed.

The questions, to our minds, are simply questions of law, namely: Do the facts and circumstances bring the case within the rule laid down in Stoner v. Zucker, supra, and did not the conduct of defendant amount to an executed parol license, and is not defendant estopped from interfering with the continued possession by plaintiff and is not defendant limited to an action for compensation. A closely allied question, also, is: Should defendant be given equitable relief in view of its laches in asserting its rights?

[4-6] "A 'license' is defined as a personal, revocable, and unassignable privilege conferred either by writing or parol to do one or more acts on land without possessing any interest therein." 17 R. C. L. 584. A license may be implied from the acts of the parties, from their relations, and from custom, and where the owner of land, with full knowledge of the facts, tacitly permits another to repeatedly do acts upon the land, the license may be implied from failure to object. 25 Cyc. 642. The essential of a license that it be assented to may be shown by any acts which tend to show assent. 17 R. C. L. 572. And the creation of a license privilege may be evidenced by acquiescence in its exercise. Id. A license by deed or parol, under the well-settled rule of the common law, is revocable at pleasure, unless under certain circumstances, among them, that it is executed and also unless, by reason of expenditures made by the licensee on the strength of the license. It would otherwise be inequitable to permit the licensor to effect a revocation. In such case the license is irrevocable. Id. 576, 578; Stoner v. Zucker, supra; Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., supra.

[7, 8] It is a familiar doctrine of laches, apart from any question of statutory limitation, that courts of equity will discourage laches and delay in the enforcement of rights, and the general rule is that nothing can call forth the court of chancery into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence. Where these are wanting, the court is passive and does nothing. 10 R. C. L. 395. While mere lapse of time may not constitute laches, lying by and acquiescence are important factors in determining whether there has been such laches as to constitute a bar to relief in equity. Id. 397.

[9] With these principles before us to what conclusion do the facts lead us in the present case? Before any work was done on the canal, defendant was notified of the project contemplated by plaintiff. (We refer to Miller & Lux and plaintiff interchangeably as the same person, for the evidence so warrants.) Defendant was informed that a right of way was desired over its land for the purpose of enabling Miller & Lux to irrigate its land without which privilege the object of the enterprise could not be effected; making no objection to plaintiff's surveying the route for the canal, or of entering upon the work of construction in March, 1912, and with knowledge that work had begun, defendant commenced negotiations looking only as expressed in one of its letters, to "something in exchange for this right of way which shall be commensurate with the value of the privilege you are seeking." For nearly four years these negotiations continued without result, Miller & Lux in the meantime spending large sums of money, and at no time did defendant object to plaintiff's going on with the work as originally contemplated and as defendant knew it was being done, including work of excavation on defendant's land during the year 1912 and subsequent years. Defendant had a right of action the moment plaintiff entered upon defendant's land in 1912 to construct the canal, if not sooner. As early as May 13, 1912, Miller & Lux wrote defendant, saying:

"We have a large force of men, teams, etc., engaged upon this work and it is desirable that we have an understanding as early as practicable, as the construction will soon be up to your land."

It seems to us that, if defendant was not called upon at an earlier period to do so, it should at this time have made it clear that before extending the canal over its land the question of compensation must be settled. If defendant regarded plaintiff's operations as an unwarranted trespass upon its rights and without its consent, in fairness to plaintiff, defendant should have warned plaintiff to desist from encroaching upon its land pending settlement of the question of compensation. Defendant was informed, early in the correspondence, that the project would entail an expenditure of $100,000. It stood by and saw $80,000 of this sum expended and then for the first time made known its opposition. It seems to us that every principle of equity forbids the court of chancery to aid defendant and that the injunction granted at defendant's request is not supported by the evidence. Its remedy is at law for damages.

[10] Some testimony was introduced by defendant tending to show that the taking of water from the San Joaquin river would interfere with its use by previous appropriators and it could be used on much better land than that proposed to be irrigated by Miller & Lux, and that the dependable water of that river was already fully appropriated; also, that in operating the canal defendant would be damaged by overflow and seepage of water onto defendant's land. We have not considered these phases of the case, as we regard them as immaterial.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

GRAVELLY FORD CANAL CO. v. POPE & TALBOT LAND CO. (Civ. 1800.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 9, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 6, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by the Gravelly Ford Canal Company against the Pope & Talbot Land Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied; Angellotti, C. J., and Sloss and Wilbur, JJ., dissenting.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. W. Dorsey and W. E. Cashman, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action in which a temporary injunction was granted in the same case as No. 1801 (178 Pac. 155), in which latter a permanent injunction was granted. Apparently the matter was heard upon the same record in both cases, except certain maps are found in number 1800 not attached to the record in 1801.

We have considered the questions involved in dealing with the permanent injunction in No. 1801, which would seem to make it unnecessary to consider at any length the questions involved in No. 1800, for they are practically the same in both cases.

On the authority of the case No. 1801, this day decided, the judgment is reversed.

LAWLOR et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 10, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨85 — DAMAGES — EASEMENTS.

Damages may be recovered for a railroad's interference with an easement of right of way whereby property has been depreciated in value.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨307(3) — REMEDIES OF OWNER—INSTRUCTIONS.

In action for damages for impairment of plaintiffs' right of way by reason of construction and operation of spur track, held, that defendant's rights as owner of the fee in the right of way were properly placed before the jury.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨307(2) — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for damages for impairment of plaintiffs' right of way by construction and operation of a railroad spur track, whether such track was so operated as to materially interfere with plaintiffs' right of passage was for the jury.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨298—EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE—DAMAGES.

In action for damages for impairment of plaintiffs' right of way by construction and operation of a railroad, evidence of cars left standing on the tracks as an obstruction to plaintiffs' right of passage, the number of cars operated daily, and the increased danger to life and limb which attended the exercise of plaintiffs' right of passage, was properly admitted.

5. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨303—DAMAGES.

In action for damages for impairment of plaintiffs' right of way by construction and operation of a railroad, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of plaintiffs' property before the construction and operation of the railroad and its inherent value thereafter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by J. B. Lawlor and another against the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiffs for $3,000.

Plaintiffs are, and were during May, 1915, and for a number of years prior thereto had been, the owners of the lot of land described in the complaint. It has no frontage on any public highway. The only means of ingress and exit to or from the property is over a right of way. This right of way is situate on the westerly side of the land of defendant which lies immediately to the east of the land of plaintiffs. The right of way is about 21 feet wide and extends all along the westerly line of defendant's land, which is 268 feet long. The fee of the land subject to the easement of the right of way was and is in the defendant. Immediately east of the land of plaintiffs lies the railroad of defendant, situated on land owned by the defendant. On May, 1915, defendant laid a spur track from said railroad along the right of way of plaintiffs. Said spur track was wholly on the lands of defendant. The plaintiffs complained that their right of way had been seriously impaired by reason of the construction and operation of the spur track, and that their adjoining property had been damaged by such impairment of the right of way.

[1] We will not attempt to answer all the arguments in appellant's brief which are directed against numerous supposititious theories which it suggests of plaintiffs' case. The law is settled that damages may be recovered for an interference with an easement of right of way whereby property of plaintiffs has been depreciated in value. Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 6 Pac. 317, 56 Am. Rep. 109; Eachus v. L. A. Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149.

There is ample evidence in the record to sustain a finding of such interference by the jury.

[2] Appellant states in its brief that the plaintiffs and the court undertook to try the action upon the basis that the defendant had no right to enter upon the right of way and that any entry thereon would be an infringement of the easement, and it is argued that the instructions to the jury should have contained a statement that there must have been a "material" interference or a "substantial" impairment of the right of way before the plaintiffs could recover. This point is made in a number of ways by the appellant. We see no force in this objection to the instructions. On the contrary, the court instructed the jury that—

The railroad company "had the right to lay a track along said strip of land or otherwise use the same unless the laying of said track on, or otherwise using said strip of land, would destroy or impair its use for passage and repassage in the plaintiffs."

The court also instructed the jury:

"That the plaintiffs have not, nor did they have, an exclusive right of passage over said strip of land, but the defendant has and at all times had as much right to pass over the strip of land in question as had the plaintiffs."

In the light of these and similar instructions, it would seem that the objections of defendant that its rights as owner of the fee were not properly placed before the jury are without merit.

[3, 4] We do not see any merit in appellant's contention that merely the laying of the tracks and not the operation of the trains thereon should have been considered by the jury in assessing damages. The injury complained of was the impairment of plaintiffs' right of way by the construction and operation of a railroad. The laying of the track was but a part of this enterprise. The case of McDougald v. S. P. R. R. Co., 162 Cal. 1, 120 Pac. 766, holds that damages in such a case as this is the difference between the value of the land as it was just before the defendant took possession and its value immediately after the works of the defendant were completed and put in operation. It would be strange indeed if only the laying of the tracks was to be considered and the operation of the trains thereon—which is the real source of the impairment of the right of way—and the consequent injury to plaintiffs was to be ignored. This is not, as contended by appellant, a denial of its right of passage over its own land. Such right must be exercised so as not to obstruct the right of the plaintiffs. Galletly v. Bockius, 1 Cal. App. 724, 82 Pac. 1109; Hoyt v. Hart, 149 Cal. 722, 87 Pac. 569. Whether or not the spur track of defendant was so operated as to materially interfere with the right of passage in the plaintiffs was a matter for the jury under proper instructions, after having before it all the facts relating to the extent of defendant's interference with said right of way. Therefore evidence of cars left standing on the tracks as an obstruction to plaintiffs' right of passage, the number of cars operated daily (during the operation of which there was evidence that plaintiffs' passage to and from their property was impossible) and the increased danger to life and limb which attended the exercise of plaintiffs' right of passage, and similar matters—was properly admitted.

[5] The case of Williams v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 150 Cal. 624, 89 Pac. 599, reviews quite extensively the authorities on the subject, and decides that the construction of a railroad is an act permanent in its nature, and that, where injury is done thereby, all damages, past and prospective, are recoverable in one action. See, also, McDougald v. S. P. R. R. Co., supra. The measure of damages is the difference between the value of plaintiffs' property before the construction and operation of the railroad and its inherent value thereafter. Eachus v. L. A., etc., Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149.

If there were any errors committed by the trial court in the admission of evidence regarding noise, etc., upon the question of the amount of the damages (which we do not decide) we think such errors were not prejudicial because the matter is fully and carefully covered in a number of the instructions, which lay down in detail the law governing the elements of damage to be considered, as stated in the case of Eachus v. L. A., etc., Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 614, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149.

The case of St. L. & K. C. R. R. Co. v. Donovan, 149 Mo. 93, 50 S. W. 286, is in point on this question, and holds that, when evidence of such matters has been erroneously admitted in a case similar to the present one, such error is not prejudicial to the defendant when the court instructs the jury correctly as to the true measure of damages in clear and unmistakable terms. We are of the opinion that this has been done in the instructions given in the case at bar.

The other points made by appellant we think are without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

LANGAN v. MARIPOSA COMMERCIAL & MINING CO. (Civ. 2459.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 5, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 3, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐344—OFFER TO PERFORM.

In action for damages from seller's breach, it must be shown that purchaser made a good-faith offer to perform, and was able to perform according to offer, under Civ. Code, §§ 1493, 1495.

2. TRIAL ⇐165—MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

On motion for nonsuit evidence must be viewed most favorably to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by G. W. Langan against the Mariposa Commercial & Mining Company, a corporation. From a judgment entered pursuant to an order granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Langan & Mendenhall and Chapman & Trefethen, all of Oakland, and R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Chas. W. Slack and Curtis H. Lindley, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment entered pursuant to an order granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit. Among the grounds of the motion was that of failure to show either a sufficient offer to perform the contract which was the basis of the action, or readiness or ability to perform the conditions thereof. The contract declared upon related to the purchase by William H. Cook and S. Webber Parker, through their agent, Gen. William H. H. Hart, of certain property of the defendant known as the "Mariposa grant" and situated in Mariposa county, Cal. The proposed deal fell through, and Cook and Webber assigned their rights under the contract to the plaintiff, Langan, who began this action for damages for breach of the contract.

The main reliance of the plaintiff was upon an allegation that, Cook and Parker having performed all the conditions of the contract binding upon them, the defendant repudiated the contract and refused to perform. The record is voluminous, the evidence consisting of innumerable letters, lengthy documents, and considerable oral testimony. Much space is devoted in the briefs to arguments upon nice questions of technical pleading, mainly directed to a variance which defendant's counsel insists existed between the third amended complaint, on which the case was tried, and the proofs offered at the trial.

While we have not before us the reasons of the trial court for granting the nonsuit, it seems to us that the order was based upon very simple questions of law and fact which must, on account of the condition of the record and the impossibility of rehearsing all the evidence, be rather briefly stated here.

On the 26th day of February, 1913, Gen. Hart wrote the defendant a letter requesting the terms of sale of the Mariposa grant. George E. Webber, president of the defendant corporation, replied on February 27, 1913, offering on behalf of the company to sell the property for $400,000, $5,000 of which was to be paid on the 15th day of March, 1913, in cash, and $95,000 additional on June 15, 1913, also in money, and the balance of the purchase price of $300,000 was to be paid in three equal annual payments commencing June 15, 1914. Among the other conditions of the offer to sell included in this letter were the following:

"It is further understood that the purchasers are to give to the company any protection which may be suggested by Mr. Henney Jennings or Judge Curtis H. Lindley, counsel for the company, covering the period of the option and the completion of the payments. In the event of your deciding to exercise your option, a definite agreement under the general terms outlined in this letter will be entered into between the contracting parties."

It may be said in passing that the property was mining property, and that Judge Lindley was the expert mining lawyer for the company. On March 12, 1913, the time to make the initial $5,000 payment was extended to the 31st day of March, 1913, and on the last-named date the $5,000 was paid and in the correspondence accompanying the payment it was suggested that a formal contract of purchase would be drafted with the approval of Mr. Jennings and Judge Lindley during the 90 days' option period, which would, as provided in this correspondence, expire on the 15th day of June, 1913. In the letters which passed at this time between the parties it was provided that the remaining $95,000 of the $100,000 cash payment should be paid on or before June 15, 1913. On May 7, 1913, a tentative agreement was delivered to Gen. Hart from Judge Lindley's office, and in this agreement various safeguards were thrown about the mining property, which formed apparently the valuable portion of the subject-matter of the transaction. Accompanying this tentative agreement was an extension of the time within which to make the $95,000 payment to July 15, 1913. On June 5, 1913, Gen. Hart wrote Judge Lindley, directing him to prepare the contract and papers in accordance with the latter's letter of May 29th. On June 9, 1913, Judge Lindley wrote Gen. Hart, inclosing a final draft of the agreement option, as it was called, with a note and mortgage attached thereto, and the request that Gen. Hart examine these and let Judge Lindley know at his earliest convenience that they were in due form. The receipt of this letter and the inclosed documents was acknowledged on June 9, 1913, by Gen. Hart in writing. No criticism of the papers and no objection to any of the terms thereof was made until July 5, 1913, when Gen. Hart wrote Judge Lindley acknowledging the receipt of the proposed final draft of the agreement. It will be noted that the time for the performance of the agreement was to expire less than a week later, namely, on the 15th day of July. There was some oral testimony to the effect that Gen. Hart had previously expressed dissatisfaction with these papers in a cursory conversation, but the correspondence between Judge Lindley and Gen. Hart is so clear upon this subject that only one finding is possible, namely, that no objection had been made until that contained in the letter from Gen. Hart to Judge Lindley, posted on July 5th. In this letter of July 5th Gen. Hart asked for an extension of time upon the contract, and on July 8th Judge Lindley replied to the criticism to the effect that the papers were drawn in conformity with the agreement between himself and Gen. Hart and in accordance with the correspondence of the parties and declined to recommend any extension of time. On July 8th Gen. Hart again wrote Judge Lindley asking for further time.

The vital events in the case occurred on July 15th. On that day Cook and Hart visited the office of the defendant company. Without reciting the testimony of the various parties, it is clear beyond controversy, in spite of some oral evidence to the contrary, that their sole object in making this call was to procure an extension of time; and it is also clear from the testimony of Cook himself that neither Cook nor Parker was either ready or able to pay the $95,000, and thus perform the conditions of the contract. Much discussion is found in the briefs as to whether the agreement contained in the various letters and papers that passed between the parties was an option to purchase or a contract to purchase. Whether the agreement is called the one or the other, the time limit therein for performance was the 15th day of July. From the evidence in this case, no bona fide offer of performance was made on that day, or, in fact, at any time, by Cook and Parker, or by any one on their behalf. They did not have the $95,000, as is clear from the testimony of Cook himself, the only testimony on that subject in the record.

[1, 2] After an examination of the bulky volume of evidence, we are forced to the conclusion that the trial court could have reached no other conclusion in this case than this, namely: That there was no offer to perform on the part of Cook and Parker; that they did not have the money with which to perform, and that if, as some of the oral evidence in the case indicates, they did offer verbally to perform this contract, the offer was not made in good faith. We are not overlooking the fact that this was a motion for nonsuit, nor the rule governing such motions to the effect that the testimony must be viewed most favorably for the plaintiff. But in our estimate of this evidence, even taking the most charitable view possible in favor of plaintiff, it shows conclusively that the only real object of Hart and Cook in their visit to the office of the defendant company on the 15th day of July was to obtain an extension of time, that they were not prepared in any way to conclude the deal by paying the $95,000, and that they had no expectation of doing so. This being so, the motion for nonsuit was properly granted; for an offer of performance must be made in good faith and in such manner as is most likely under the circumstances to benefit the creditor (Civ. Code, § 1493; Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 91 Pac. 1001), and under section 1495 of the Civil Code, an offer to perform, whether made in writing or orally, is of no effect if the person making it is not at the time able to perform according to the offer. So that, conceding that the oral evidence of some of the witnesses was to the effect that there was an offer to perform—directly contradicted by Cook, the only principal who testified on the subject or who was present at the interview—still, under the rules of law above stated, it appearing that Cook and Parker were not able to perform, and it also appearing clearly from the evidence that the offer, if made, was not made in good faith, the ruling of the trial court on the motion for nonsuit must be sustained.

The plaintiff also complains of numerous rulings made during the trial excluding evidence offered by him. So far as we are able to discern, none of this evidence could possibly have changed the decision of the court on the motion for nonsuit.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ELGAR. (Cr. 625.)

39 Cal. App. 78

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 7, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨613—TRIAL—CONTINUANCE TO OBTAIN DEPOSITION.

In prosecution for rape on child of 13, it was within discretion of trial court to order continuance for more than 15 days to enable prosecution to procure deposition of child's grandmother as to her age; defendant having objected to child's testimony, and having had excluded testimony of child's mother.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨1163(1)—APPEAL—BURDEN TO SHOW PREJUDICE.

On his appeal from conviction of rape, burden rests with defendant to show he was prejudiced by action of trial court in ordering continuance of more than 15 days to procure deposition, which action was within court's discretion.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨421(3)—HEARSAY—AGE.

In prosecution for rape on child of 13, prosecutrix could testify as to her age.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨796 — INSTRUCTION — PUNISHMENT.

In prosecution for rape on child of 13, in absence of proof on which it could have been properly found she was between 16 and 18, it was not incumbent on court to give instruction embodying provisions of Pen. Code, § 264, giving jury right to fix punishment of one convicted of rape on child under 18 but over 16.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨1173(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTION.

In prosecution for rape on child of 13, failure to instruct jury that it had right to take into consideration appearance of child in determining her age held harmless to defendant, if erroneous; there being nothing in record as to appearance of child.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨358 — EVIDENCE—ALIBI — IMMATERIALITY.

In prosecution for rape, defendant, attempting to prove alibi by showing he was at work in field when prosecutrix testified offense was committed, testimony by workman employed in field held properly stricken, its only value being to show defendant was in field at time enabling him to go to scene of offense by time prosecutrix testified it was committed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Jim Elgar was convicted of rape, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

See, also, 171 Pac. 697.

S. M. Johnstone and A. P. Nelson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, the prosecutrix being a child of the alleged age of 13 years. The appeal is taken from the judgment of imprisonment and also from the order denying a motion for a new trial.

Defendant was the stepfather of the girl. By the testimony of the latter it appeared that defendant had, in May, 1917, forcibly seized the prosecutrix and accomplished the act complained of, the time being about 7:30 o'clock in the evening and the place a barn on the premises occupied by defendant, to which barn the prosecutrix had gone to give food to a cow kept there. A few days later, according to the statements of the same witness, the act was repeated in the house, and repeated again at a later date. Defendant testified, denying the charge made by the child in toto, and offered evidence for the purpose of showing that at the time when it was claimed by the girl the act was committed he was at work more than a mile away, irrigating a field of beets. The prosecuting officer asked the prosecutrix, while on the witness stand and at the opening of the trial, how old she was. An objection was interposed, the ground stated being, "The proper foundation has not been laid." At this point the prosecutor desisted from further attempt to make proof of the age of the girl by testimony from her own mouth, but called her mother to the witness stand. It was shown that this witness was married to the defendant, and she was not allowed to testify, upon appropriate objection being made. The district attorney then stated that he would be obliged to prove the age of the girl by the testimony of her grandmother, who was then ill, and who resided some 18 miles away. He presented an affidavit, and the court continued the trial from that day, being, the 13th of June, 1918, to July 5th. Upon reassembling on the date last mentioned, a deposition which had been taken was presented, and the reading of it was objected to on the part of the defendant. Thereupon, after some discussion between court and counsel, the prosecuting officer stated that he might secure the attendance of the witness in person by using an ambulance or some such means of conveyance, and her attendance was secured the same day. This witness testified that she knew the date of birth of the prosecutrix and that the latter was born in Mexico on the last day of January, 1904. Cross-examined as to her recollection of other matters and things, many of them of intimate personal nature, the witness was unable to give definite answers. However, she did not vary from her first statement that the prosecutrix was born on the day which she had already mentioned.

[1-3] The defendant had objected to any continuance being granted at the time the district attorney interrupted the trial with his request for time to take the deposition of the grandmother, and he now assigns the action of the court in making that order as prejudicial error. It was perhaps unusual, after the trial had commenced, to order a continuance for more than 15 days for the reason appearing here, but the matter of ordering such continuance was within the discretion of the trial judge, and upon this appeal the burden rests with the defendant to show that he was prejudiced by the action so taken. It nowhere appears in the record as to how or in what manner the action of the court did result to his detriment or tended to prevent his having a full and fair trial of the issues. It is not claimed that by reason of the continuance the defendant was deprived of the presence of any witness or that any condition supervened which operated to his prejudice. The district attorney was acting upon a mistaken view of the law when he assumed that he would not be permitted to prove the age of the prosecutrix by her own testimony. It is well established in this state, as well as in other jurisdictions, and is a settled rule of evidence, that a person may testify as to his or her age. People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915; Commonwealth v. Phillips, 162 Mass. 504, 39 N. E. 109.

[4, 5] Another complaint of the defendant is that the court refused to give an instruction embodying the provisions of section 264, Penal Code, which gives the jury the right to fix the punishment of a person convicted of rape upon a child under the age of 18 years, when it appears that such child is over the age of 16 years. The offered instruction was as follows:

"You are instructed that the prosecution must prove the age of the prosecutrix to be under that of 18 years by evidence satisfactory to your minds and beyond a reasonable doubt. If you believe that the prosecutrix is under the age of 18 years after considering all of the testimony introduced in the case on that question, including the appearance of the prosecutrix herself, her development, her intelligence, and her general appearance, and from the same evidence you believe her to be over the age of 16 years, if you find the defendant guilty, then it is your province to advise the court in your verdict as to the place where the defendant must be confined during the term of his imprisonment; and, if you find the prosecutrix to be over the age of 16 years, then in your verdict you shall state whether the punishment shall be by imprisonment in the county jail or the state prison."

Before discussing the argument presented to this point it may be further stated that the defendant offered no testimony in contradiction of that given by the grandmother of the girl as to the age of the latter, and nothing appears in the entire record from which we can gain any idea as to the weight or physical development of the child—in short, nothing which would suggest that in appearance she seemed to be of any greater age than that represented by the grandmother. Under such a state of the record it is correct, we think, to say that there was no conflict of testimony as to the child's age. Hence, it appears that there was no proof upon which the jury could properly have found that the child was between the ages of 16 and 18 years. It was therefore not incumbent upon the court to call to the minds of the jurors the provisions of section 264, Penal Code. But, insists the appellant, the jury should have been advised that it had the right to take into consideration the appearance of the child, and that such view would furnish proper evidence upon which to warrant the jury in concluding that the age of the prosecutrix was greater than that stated by the grandmother. That it may be proper for the jury to take into consideration the appearance of a child in connection with testimony to determine her age has been held in People v. Elco, 131 Mich. 519, 91 N. W. 755, 94 N. W. 1069, Commonwealth v. Hollis, 170 Mass. 433, 49 N. E. 632, Commonwealth v. Phillips, supra, and other cases. There is some contrary authority, although the question seems not to have been directly ruled upon in this state. The text-writers on Evidence, Greenleaf and Wigmore, both admit the rule to be in general as appellant contends for. Conceding that an instruction, advising the jury of its right to take into consideration the appearance of a child in determining its age, correctly states the law, before this appellant can claim that he has been prejudiced by the refusal to give such an instruction we must be able to see that, to some extent at least, the physical appearance of the child would tend to contradict the positive evidence shown in this record as to her age. We have before stated that there is nothing in the entire record which in any way tends to enlighten us as to how this girl appeared, whether she appeared well developed or immaturely developed; whether she was large or small, or any evidence tending to show when she had first approached the state of womanhood. Defendant at one point in his testimony referred to her as this "little girl," which, if we deem the statement descriptive of her appearance, indicates nothing inconsistent with the testimony of the grandmother.

[6] The court struck out the testimony given by one of the workmen who was employed in irrigating the same field as was the defendant. This witness stated that he was on the day shift and defendant on the night shift; that he met the defendant at the field on the evening of the day in question, but that he (the witness) left the place at 6 or 6:30 o'clock, as his day's work was done. There was no error in striking out this testimony. The hour given by the prosecutrix as that when the rape was committed was 7:30 o'clock; the field in question was located a mile or a mile and a half away from the barn where the rape was alleged to have taken place. There was no contention nor showing that the defendant could not easily have returned to his home and to the barn after this witness left the field. The only value the testimony could have, then, was to show that the defendant was at the field on the night in question between 6 and 6:30 o'clock, and as to that the prosecution made no contrary claim. The prosecutrix herself had stated that her stepfather on the night in question was engaged in irrigating.

No error is presented by appellant showing that he has been prejudiced in his right to a fair trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY — §8(4) — FRAUD — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment against them in an action for the cancellation and rescission of a contract for the exchange of real property.

The single and simple question involved in the appeal is as to whether or not the findings in favor of plaintiffs are sustained by the evidence. We think this question must be answered in the affirmative. The plaintiffs transferred certain real property to the defendants in exchange for an option to purchase certain other real property upon given terms, and in their complaint they allege, and the court found, that the execution of the deed by them was procured by the fraud of the defendants in that the defendant James Tolosano, in consideration for the conveyance of plaintiffs' property made certain promises which he neither performed nor intended at the time of his undertaking to perform.

Briefly the facts are that in the month of December, 1913, plaintiff Maude L. Holiday was the owner of nine lots in a suburb of Fresno. With the little home which she had built upon one of the lots the property was worth about $2,500, and she and her husband, a car conductor, were living thereon. At the date mentioned she advertised the property for sale or exchange. The defendant James Tolosano, a real estate manipulator, answered the advertisement shortly after January 1, 1914. About a year prior to that date Tolosano, by an instrument in writing, had acquired of one Ripperdan, an option to buy a ranch of 20 acres in Madera county, about 40 miles from Fresno. The value of this ranch was $4,000, and Ripperdan was willing, in consideration of 6 per cent. per annum upon that sum, paid to him annually, to hold his sale price at that figure. In effect, his charge was $240 per annum for binding himself to sell at $4,000, and the option was good for 10 years, providing the annual option money was punctually paid. All that had been paid under this agreement was $240 to cover the year ending on February 8, 1914. When the parties to this action met in the first week of January, 1914, there remained a period of approximately 5 weeks yet to run of the first year's option, which portion of the option, at the annual rate of payment therefor, would be worth less than $25.

According to the testimony of Mrs. Holiday, and of another witness, Mrs. Lukens, Tolosano stated to the plaintiffs, when negotiating the proposed exchange, that he had contracted to pay Ripperdan $4,000 for the ranch; that he had put upon the place a $1,000 pumping plant, had erected thereon a barn at an expense of $250, and had also expended $300 in leveling part of the land and seeding it to alfalfa. To induce the plaintiffs to make the exchange, it also appears, from the evidence introduced by them, that Tolosano promised to deliver to them a span of horses, harness, a wagon, mower, and other personal property, and also to pay the $240 falling due on the option to purchase the ranch on February 8, 1914. None of this personal property was delivered, nor was the $240 paid, though urgently and repeatedly demanded. The result was that this amount, required to keep alive the option, not having been paid when due, nor within an extension of time therefor, the option was canceled. It also turned out that the improvements which, according to his representations, Tolosano had made upon the ranch, were not made by him, but were in existence at the time he procured the option from Ripperdan, and therefore represented nothing of value added to the place. Notwithstanding that Tolosano represented that he was unable to pay the $240 to Ripperdan when it became due, when called as a witness by plaintiff at the trial he testified that at that time he was worth $20,000 to $25,000.

It is no doubt settled law that the mere failure to perform a contract which was made in good faith is not fraud. Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 Pac. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162.

"In the absence of confidential relations between the parties, the mere making of a promise, which the promisor afterwards fails or refuses to perform, is not actionable fraud, unless the promise was made without the intention of performing it. Civ. Code, § 1572, provides that a promise, made without any intention of performing it, in order to induce another to enter into a contract, constitutes actionable fraud." Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 119 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140.

It is also true that there is no direct evidence in the record before us that at the time of making the contract here involved there was any preconceived secret intention on the part of Tolosano not to perform it; but in this connection the record, in our opinion, discloses sufficient evidence from which it may be justly inferred that at the time of entering into the contract Tolosano had in fact no intention of performing his obligations thereunder.

"What a person's intent in such a matter may be is often a difficult thing to determine. It usually must be ascertained from his future conduct and speech, and the fact as to such intent is one peculiarly to be deduced by process of reasoning from the facts in evidence by the trial judge." Tench v. McMeekan, 17 Cal. App. 20, 118 Pac. 478.

"In cases of fraud, subsequent acts are frequently resorted to for the purpose of showing antecedent fraud. Fraud being proven, in reference to the transaction under question, the criminal intent is necessarily a matter of inference for the jury. The dealing with property today by the vendor, as his property, is evidence to show the fraud committed in a sale a month ago. The subsequent acts are illustrative of the intent and character of the first." Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 458. See, also, Dowd v. Tucker, 41 Conn. 204; Maxson v. Llewelyn, 122 Cal. 198, 54 Pac. 732.

The judgment is affirmed.

HUDSON v. POLICE COURT OF CITY OF OAKLAND et al. (Civ. 2578.)

BAIL — 73 — DEPOSIT IN LIEU — RIGHT TO RETURN.

Construing together the sections of Pen. Code, pt. 2, tit. 10, c. 1, arts. 5, 6 (sections 1295-1302), held that an attorney who deposited his money as bail for appearance of his client did all that was required for return thereof, so that it could not be subjected to payment of her fine, he at time of trial, both before and after she pleaded guilty, offering to surrender her and demanding return of money.

Petition by Oscar Hudson for writ of review to the Police Court of the City of Oakland, County of Alameda, and Mortimer Smith, Judge thereof, for annulment of a part of a judgment. Part of judgment annulled.

Oscar Hudson, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

Ezra Decoto, Dist. Atty., and Walter J. Burpee, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner, Oscar Hudson, asks this court to annul a portion of the judgment of the police court in the city of Oakland whereby a fine imposed upon one Lucy Alexander after a judgment of conviction of a misdemeanor was taken out of bail money deposited by petitioner for the appearance of the said Lucy Alexander for trial in said police court.

The undisputed facts seem to be that Lucy Alexander was charged with a misdemeanor, and upon her appearance, Hudson, her attorney, deposited $200 of his own funds with the court as bail for her appearance. Upon the day set for trial, petitioner appeared with the said Lucy Alexander and offered to surrender her, and demanded of the court the return of his money. The court refused to accept her surrender, and refused to return the bail money to Hudson. The defendant thereupon pleaded guilty, and the court in judgment imposed a fine of $100 upon her, with the alternative of paying the fine or serving in the city prison of the city of Oakland until the fine was satisfied in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every $2 of the fine, and further, in the judgment provided that the fine be collected out of the $200 cash bail. The petitioner herein then and there offered to surrender the defendant into custody, as the record shows, and again demanded his money. The court "denied his motion" and ordered that so much of the bail as was necessary be applied by the bailiff to the payment of the fine, and "that the balance of the bail be exonerated."

We are asked to annul the part of the judgment which ordered the bail money subjected to the payment of the fine. Articles 5 and 6 of chapter 1 of title 10, pt. 2, of the Penal Code provide for bail and for the exoneration of bail, but do not seem to exactly cover cases in which bail money is deposited by any person other than the defendant. But construing all the sections of these articles together, we think that the petitioner, Hudson, did all that was required of him in order to entitle him to a return of his money, and that that part of the judgment of the judge of the police court which we are asked to annul was beyond its jurisdiction, and it is therefore ordered that it be annulled as prayed in the petition.

APPEAL AND ERROR — 1011(1) — REVIEW — FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where only specifications of error are that certain of findings are not supported by sufficient evidence, and evidence on such questions was conflicting, judgment will be affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by J. M. Stott and others against W. W. Johnson and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Thos. R. White, of San Francisco, for appellants.

F. R. Wall, of San Francisco, for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This action was brought to recover the sum of $5,250, claimed to be due plaintiffs under an agreement of sale of certain mining property.

The parties to the action were general partners operating a gold mining dredge near the city of Nome, in Alaska. Plaintiffs owned a three-fourths interest in the partnership, and defendants entered into an agreement of purchase with plaintiffs whereby they undertook to acquire such interest. Plaintiffs by this action sued to enforce payment under the terms of the agreement. As a defense to the action defendants pleaded that the agreement sued upon had been rescinded by them because of misrepresentations of certain facts willfully and fraudulently made by plaintiffs. These alleged misrepresentations consisted of: (1) That there were good values in the ground ahead of the dredge and to be worked by it that would make the dredging profitable; and (2) that one of the sellers owned a lease on valuable ground ahead of the dredge and to be worked by it. The trial court rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal.

The only specifications of error are that certain of the findings are not supported by sufficient evidence. There is no merit in the appeal. The evidence upon the questions presented was conflicting, but it is ample to support the findings of the trial court. The judgment is affirmed.

fy as jurors upon said trials; that the said sentiment of prejudice on the part of the residents and possible jurors upon the east side of said river has been both stimulated by and reflected in the comments of several of the newspapers of said county, which have from time to time since the inception of said action, and particularly at and during the times of the several trials thereof, published articles highly prejudicial to the plaintiff's case and highly favorable to the cause and claims of the defendant. The affidavit of said J. F. Clyne further sets forth that the state of public sentiment among the people of Merced county on both sides of the said San Joaquin river extends, not only throughout said Merced county, but extends also to and throughout the counties of Stanislaus on the north, and of Madera and Fresno on the south of said county of Merced, and that for that reason neither of said adjacent counties are available for the trial of this action. These latter portions of the affidavits of said J. F. Clyne are strongly and also with much circumstance and detail contradicted by the various affiants who have signed and verified the counter showing made by said defendant upon the hearing on said motion.

[1, 2] If numbers of affiants or of affidavits were the determining factors in questions of this character, the defendant herein would have been entitled to prevail upon said motion; but as this is not the rule, or proper measure of the rights of the respective parties, the utmost that can be said is this, that the affidavit of said J. F. Clyne, had its statements been unopposed or uncontradicted, would clearly have been sufficient to have sustained the order of the trial court granting a change of place of trial in the present case; and that the counter affidavits offered on behalf of the defendant created merely a conflict of evidence upon the subject; and that, this being so, the trial judge who had been in touch with this cause from its inception, and who had presided over the three former trials thereof and who was himself a resident of the community, the sentiment of whose people, available as jurors, were challenged by the affidavits on the one side or the other of this controversy, was in a better position to rightly weigh and justly resolve this conflict in said evidence than the judges of an appellate tribunal could possibly be; and hence that the conclusion of the said trial judge thereon should not be disturbed upon appeal, particularly in the entire absence of any claim on the part of the appellant that his discretion so to decide has been abused through the presence and exercise of personal bias or prejudice on his part. There is no such contention here.

[3] As to the final contention of the appellant to the effect that the trial court was in error in transferring said cause to the county of Mariposa for trial, it may be briefly stated that section 398 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which deals with the place of such transfers, permits the court to send the cause for trial "to the nearest or most accessible county where a like prejudice did not exist." The county of Mariposa is one of the counties adjacent to the county of Merced. Its county seat is about 45 miles from the county seat of Merced county and is somewhat less accessible, as well as somewhat farther away, than are the county seats of Stanislaus county on the north and of Madera county on the south of Merced county. On the other hand, the county of Mariposa is topographically unsuited to the development of extension systems of irrigation, and hence its residents who might be called upon to do jury duty are not affected by those problems and prejudices which arise and persist where large corporations operate in the control of waters and the extension of irrigation systems with frequently conflicting interests and claims. On the other hand, the counties of Fresno, Madera, Merced, and Stanislaus occupy a region as to all its parts identically affected by the development and operation of vast irrigation systems and interests, drawing their water supply in the main from the same source of supply and extending their activities over the lands of these several counties whose respective division boundaries are as to these irrigation systems and projects, mere arbitrary lines. These facts would be potential in determining the question as to where the trial of the instant action should be had, unaffected by the state of prejudice which would, in the opinion of the lower court, have attended its trial in the county of Merced. Under these circumstances, we are unable to say that the said court abused its discretion in the transfer of this cause for trial to the county of Mariposa.

Order affirmed.

In re MORHOFF'S GUARDIANSHIP.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1919.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD ~~18~~—PROCEEDING TO SET ASIDE—FATHER'S SANCTION—EVIDENCE.

On motion by father of minor to set aside order appointing aunt guardian of minor's person and estate, court held justified, under the circumstances, in believing that father, by letter to uncle, who formally consented to guardianship, intended to sanction the guardianship.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD ~~13~~(3)—PROCEEDINGS FOR APPOINTMENT—NOTICE TO FATHER.

Father was not entitled to formal notice of proceeding for appointment of general guardian of minor daughter; such notice not being jurisdictional prerequisite to court's action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1747.

3. PARENT AND CHILD — 2(3)—CUSTODY OF CHILD BY GRANDMOTHER—FATHER'S RIGHT TO CUSTODY.

That father, upon mother's death, left one year old daughter in custody of the daughter's grandmother, would not detract from father's right subsequently to take daughter into his care and custody, if he were a proper person for such parental control.

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD — 18 — APPOINTMENT—PROCEEDINGS TO SET ASIDE—MOTION BY FATHER.

Where mother died, leaving one year old daughter, who with father's consent was cared for by grandmother, who died seven years later, leaving the daughter part of her estate, letters of guardianship of daughter's person and estate, granted an aunt after formal consent of uncle, to whom father had written, showing intention to sanction such guardianship, will not be revoked upon father's motion, where father was sailor, absent much of the time, and had remarried.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Elenora Morhoff, a minor. From an order denying a motion by William C. Morhoff, father of the minor, to set aside an order appointing Julia Farrell guardian of the minor's person and estate, William C. Morhoff appeals. Affirmed.

H. M. Anthony, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. William C. Morhoff, father of a minor child, Elenora Morhoff, appeals from an order denying his motion to set aside an order previously made appointing Julia Farrell, an aunt of said Elenora, guardian of the minor's person and estate. The grounds of the motion were lack of necessity for a guardian, fraud in procuring the appointment of Mrs. Farrell, that the father was entitled to be heard on the necessity for the appointment of a guardian, and that the order was taken through the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect of the father. The facts, in brief, are as follows:

Appellant is in the United States navy. He and Nora H. Brosnan intermarried in 1905. To them two children were born—one a boy, since deceased; and other, the daughter, Elenora. Mrs. Morhoff was in ill health, and lived at the home of her mother in San Francisco, where her little girl was born in 1908. Mr. Morhoff was absent much of the time in pursuit of his calling. Mrs. Morhoff died in 1909, and thereafter the child lived with the grandmother, Mrs. Brosnan. This was with the father's full consent. Mrs. Brosnan died in the final week of 1916, leaving property, to one-third of which the little girl Elenora is entitled as an heir at law. Subsequently Julia Farrell, the child's aunt, applied for letters of guardianship, averring in her petition among other things, that Mr. Morhoff was a resident of Portland, Or., and that he had acquiesced in the appointment of Mrs. Farrell as guardian of said minor. Cornelius Brosnan, an uncle of the minor, residing in San Francisco, formally consented to the appointment of the petitioner.

At the hearing of this petition, and the later proceeding upon motion to set aside the order appointing a guardian, there was exhibited a letter written by Mr. Morhoff from Portland, Or., to Mr. Brosnan in San Francisco, expressing the writer's gratitude to his brother-in-law and sister-in-law for their wishes in reference to the division of their mother's property with their niece, and containing the following language:

"Now Con in regards to a Guardian being appointed to look after Elenora's share whatever it may be either you or Julia is satisfactory to me. Let me suggest that as neither Julia or you has had much experience in money matters that you will both confer with John in whom I have absolute confidence and who could put the money out to the best advantage. You will find me always ready and willing to sign anything you may both wish as I am for all of your good and don't want a cent."

An order appointing Mrs. Farrell guardian of the child's person and estate was made February 5, 1917, and on the 20th of the same month the guardian's attorneys wrote to Mr. Morhoff, at their client's request, acquainting him with the details of the order appointing the guardian. In the month of May following he made the unsuccessful motion resulting in the order which is the basis of this appeal.

[1] It is now argued that the letter, from which we have quoted above, was only a consent to the appointment of a guardian of the estate of the minor; but there was testimony from John Farrell that the communication was written as a result of an understanding between him and Mr. Morhoff that "there would have to be a guardian appointed over Elenora to look after her and her interests." We think that, under all the circumstances, the court was justified in believing that the writer intended to give his sanction to a general guardianship of his child's aunt over the little girl.

[2] It is argued that Mr. Morhoff was entitled to formal notice of the proceeding for appointment of a general guardian. The statute does not contemplate such notice as a jurisdictional prerequisite to the court's action. Section 1747, Code Civ. Proc.

[3] William Morhoff had married a second time, in 1911, and has resided with his wife at Portland, Or., for some years. From the time of her birth to the death of her grandmother he had consented to Elenora's residence with Mrs. Brosnan. He had contributed some amounts to her support, and testified that he was always ready and willing to give more, but was told by her grandmother and other members of the family that they needed no help in the care of the child. Of course, the mere fact that he left the little girl in the custody of her grandparent would not detract from his right subsequently to take her into his care and custody, if he were a proper person for such parental control. He insists that he is qualified in every way to perform his duties as a parent, and that, in the absence of a showing of abandonment of his daughter, or that he is otherwise an improper person to have custody of her, the court abused its discretion in refusing to set aside the order appointing Mrs. Farrell, citing, in this behalf, such cases as Guardianship of Moore, 176 Pac. 461, Guardianship of Wise, 177 Pac. 277, and the authorities upon which those decisions rest. Those cases differed radically in their facts from the matter at bar. In none of them had there been express consent to the guardianship.

[4] Under the circumstances revealed by this record, we do not believe that the court committed any abuse of discretion in refusing to revoke or set aside the order appointing Mrs. Farrell guardian of the person and estate of her minor niece.

The order is affirmed.

STEVENS et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (L. A. 5746.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1919.)

MASTER AND SERVANT — §375(1)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DEATH DURING PERFORMANCE OF DUTY.

In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act for compensation for the death of a café waiter, shot while approaching scuffle between another waiter and armed customer, the fact that it was waiter's duty to keep order held sufficient to sustain award.

In Bank.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Merle Lindlaw, for herself and as guardian ad litem and trustee of John Robert Lindlaw, for compensation for the death of John Robert Lindlaw, opposed by C. A. Stevens and another, as employers, and the Aetna Life Insurance Company, a corporation, as insurer. Award for petitioners by the Industrial Accident Commission, and employers and insurer bring certiorari to annul the award. Award affirmed.

E. L. Stockwell, of San Francisco, Leland Mann, of Los Angeles, and Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, J. The petitioner herein, the Aetna Life Insurance Company, seeks, as the insurer of certain café owners against liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279) to annul by certiorari an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission in the sum of $5,000 to Merle Lindlaw for herself as the widow of John R. Lindlaw and as guardian ad litem and trustee of her infant son, John Robert Lindlaw. The writ is prayed for on the ground that the evidence does not justify the findings of fact or the order of award.

Substantially stated, the facts are these: John R. Lindlaw was employed as a waiter in a café at Venice, Cal. On a September afternoon in 1917, one E. E. Rice, accompanied by his wife, entered the café. He was joined some little while later by his son. After the party had been served, Rice got into an altercation with one Sullivan, a waiter attending an adjoining table, during the course of which he threatened picturesquely to make Sullivan "jump over the housetops," and drew a revolver. Sullivan grappled with Rice, as did the latter's son and one Ealand, another waiter, called by Sullivan to help disarm Rice. Lindlaw, serving other tables in the café, started for the scene at this juncture, calling "Come on, Brown," to yet another waiter. As Lindlaw approached the scuffle the revolver, still in Rice's hand, was discharged, the bullet striking Lindlaw and killing him. Brown, following Lindlaw, caught him as he fell.

The paramount point presented for review is whether or not Lindlaw, in starting for the scene of altercation, was performing a duty incident to his employment as a waiter in the café. In a word, if it was incumbent on Lindlaw as a part of his duties as a waiter in the café to help keep order and suppress commotion, then he was killed in the performance of his duties and the award must stand; and it needed only to be shown that the hazard was one to which deceased was exposed by his employment to warrant the award. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury et al., 170 Cal. 686, 151 Pac. 398. On this point the evidence seems crystal clear. One of the owners of the café testified that it was a part of the duties of waiters in his employ to assist in keeping order, to quell disturbances, and eject unruly persons. It was also admitted to be a fact in the case that the employes in the café had instructions to keep order. The waiter Brown testified, in effect, that relative to an altercation arising in the café it was as much the duty of the waiters as any other part of their waiters' business to go there and try to stop it as quickly as possible. Considered in connection with the testimony of the witness McFadden, identified with café life for a period of 25 years, to the effect that the café in question was what is known as a cabaret house, "catering to a class of people that are subject more or less to brawls and things of that kind that will cause trouble, and especially where there is dancing," and that this particular café was "a type of house that would be in trouble quicker than any average house at the beach," it follows that the employer's business in the instant case was such as to expose his employes to the danger of bodily injury ensuing upon altercations by disorderly patrons. What Lindlaw's intentions were as he started towards the altercation must, of course, remain unknown; but it is obvious he was not intending to start the fight, since it was already started, and it is reasonable to assume, therefore, that he was intending only to assist in stopping it, and that, as an employé of the café, it was his duty to assist in stopping it, seems from the uncontradicted evidence to admit of little doubt and less speculation.

Petitioners' citations relied on in support of the petition for the writ are not sufficiently analogous in point of principle or of fact to warrant discussion, nor do they at all cover and control the situation presented here, namely, one in which an attendant is charged as part of his duties to quell or assist in quelling disturbances and to eject disorderly persons in a cabaret house where alcoholic liquors are sold, and is injured in the course of a brawl started by a disorderly patron.

It follows, from what has been said, that it does not appear as a matter of law that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant and sustain the award.

The award is affirmed.

JOHNSON v. ALEXANDER. (Civ. 2621.)

1. MARRIAGE ⚡58(1)—ANNULMENT—"AGE OF LEGAL CONSENT."

"Age of legal consent" within Civ. Code, § 82, subd. 1, authorizing annulment of marriage, where the party seeking it was at the time of marriage under the age of legal consent, and consent of parent or guardian was not given, is the age at which, under section 56, one is capable of consenting to and consummating marriage (in case of a female, 15 years), and not the age (in case of female, 18 years) below which it is unlawful under section 69, for the clerk to issue a marriage license without the consent of parent or guardian.

2. MARRIAGE ⚡58(1)—VALIDITY—LICENSE—WRONGFUL ISSUANCE.

A marriage, solemnized under a license issued contrary to Civ. Code, § 69, providing that the clerk must not issue without consent of parent or guardian of a party under age, is not, on that account, void or voidable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by Alva Johnson, by her guardian ad litem, Jennie Carroll, against Manuel Alexander. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest Klette, of Fresno, for appellant.
C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The complaint states that the plaintiff and the defendant were married on the 23d day of March, 1917; that, at the time of the marriage, the plaintiff was of the age of 15 years, and had not previously been married; that said marriage was not consented to in writing or otherwise, or at all, by the parents or guardians of said plaintiff; that Jennie Carroll was, at the time of said marriage, the legal guardian of plaintiff, and still is said legal guardian, duly appointed and qualified, and has likewise been appointed guardian ad litem for the purpose of prosecuting this suit for the annulment of said marriage.

A demurrer to the complaint was sustained on the ground that said complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The only question presented involves a construction of section 82 of the Civil Code. This section provides that a marriage may be annulled for a number of specified causes, existing at the time of the marriage. The cause relied upon by plaintiff is:

"That the party in whose behalf it is sought to have the marriage annulled was under the age of legal consent, and such marriage was contracted without the consent of his or her parents or guardian, or person having charge of him or her. * * *

[1] The precise question presented is whether the term "age of legal consent," as used in the above section, refers to the age of 15 years specified in section 56, Civil Code, as the age at which females, not otherwise disqualified, are capable of consenting to and consummating marriage, or whether it refers to the age of 18 years, specified in section 69, Civil Code. The last-mentioned section provides that:

"If the male is under the age of twenty-one years or the female is under the age of eighteen years, and such person has not been previously married, no license must be issued by the county clerk unless the consent in writing of the parents of the person under age, or one of such parents, or of his or her guardian, is presented to him, duly verified by such parents, or parent, or guardian; and such consent must be filed by the clerk, and he must state such facts in the license."

It will be noted that section 56, Civil Code, specifies 15 years as the age at which females are capable of "consenting to" and consummating marriage. Section 82, Civil Code, provides for an annulment in cases where a party was "under the age of legal consent." It seems from the language of these two sections to be clear that an annulment would be possible under subdivision 1 of section 82, Civil Code, only when the party seeking it was under the age of 15 years at the time of the marriage and the consent of her parents or guardian had not been previously obtained.

[2] By section 69, Civil Code, the duty of the county clerk is clearly defined, but we are of the opinion that, if he fails in this, either willfully or through mistake, and issues the license to a female under the age of 18 years without the consent of parent or guardian, and the marriage is afterward solemnized, such marriage is not void or voidable because of the failure of the clerk to perform his duty as prescribed.

After a careful search of the authorities, we are unable to find any decisions in which the precise question presented here is directly involved; but there are intimations in several decisions in this state which tend to sustain our view. In addition to these intimations, we quote from the language of the decision in the case of Hunter v. Milan, 5 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 107, 41 Pac. 332:

"By the marriage act of 1850 [making fourteen years the age of consent], any person joining in marriage any male under the act of twenty-one years, or female under the age of eighteen years, without the consent of the parent or guardian of such minor, was deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine, * * * but the marriage was not void, or even voidable, except in cases where the female was under the age of fourteen."

Moreover, while the question to be directly decided here may not have been in issue, and therefore not necessary to a decision in the case of the Matter of the Guardianship of Ambrose, 170 Cal. 160, 149 Pac. 43, the sections of the Code involved here were there considered and by the court construed to mean that it is only when the marriage is contracted by a minor who is incapable of consenting thereto by reason of being under the age of consent provided and designated in section 56 of the Civil Code, and the consent of his or her parents or guardian has not been secured, that the marriage may be annulled under the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 82 of the Civil Code.

We, therefore, conclude that the demurrer was properly sustained, and the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SCOTT. (Cr. 616.)

1. COURTS ⇐92—OPINIONS—DICTUM.

In habeas corpus proceedings, where main question presented was constitutionality of indeterminate sentence law (Pen. Code, § 1168) as to petitioner, who had committed crime prior to enactment and had been given indeterminate sentence, court's decision, after holding that such law was unconstitutional as to petitioner, that petitioner might be remanded to lower court for resentence, was not mere dictum, though not fully discussed, being question upon which it was necessary for court to pass.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐913(4), 993—INDETERMINATE SENTENCE — RESENTENCE — NEW TRIAL.

Defendant, who was given indeterminate sentence for crime committed prior to enactment of Pen. Code, § 1168, providing for indeterminate sentences, upon being returned to court for valid sentence, under section 1493, more than 115 days after date of verdict, was not entitled to new trial under sections 1191, 1202, and resentence pronounced was valid.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

William A. C. Scott was convicted of rape, and, having been given void sentence, was brought before court for resentence. From an order denying a motion for a new trial at time of resentence, and from judgment of resentence, he appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Johnson, of San Diego, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, committed on or about the 28th day of June, 1917, upon a female whose age was more than 18 years. According to section 264, Pen. Code, that crime is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not more than 50 years. According to a statute which became effective on the 27th day of July, 1917, the Penal Code was amended by adding thereto a new section, numbered 1168, wherein it is provided that—

“Every person convicted of a public offense, for which public offense punishment by imprisonment in any reformatory or the state prison is now prescribed by law, * * * shall be sentenced to be confined in the state prison, but the court in imposing such sentence shall not fix the term or duration of the period of imprisonment.”

It was further provided that the period of such confinement shall not exceed the maximum or be less than the minimum term of imprisonment provided by law for the public offense of which such person was convicted. Pursuant to the verdict rendered against the defendant in this case, the superior court, on the 18th day of September, 1917, ordered and adjudged that the defendant be punished “by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California.” Thereafter, by order of court made on the 10th day of May, 1918, the defendant was returned to the superior court of San Diego county, “to be sentenced upon said conviction according to the law of said state existing at the time of the commission of said offense, to wit, on or about the 28th day of June, 1917, and prior to the taking effect of said indeterminate sentence law.” Defendant having been brought before the court on the 13th day of May, 1918, for sentence, the defendant moved for a new trial solely upon the ground that the sentence is not pronounced within the time limited by section 1202 of the Penal Code. The court denied that motion and pronounced judgment upon the defendant that he be punished by imprisonment in the state prison of the state of California at San Quentin for the term of 10 years. The defendant appeals from the judgment so rendered on the 13th day of May, 1918, and from the order denying his said motion for a new trial.

In Ex parte Lee, 171 Pac. 958, a habeas corpus proceeding, it appeared that the petitioner was being held in imprisonment under an indeterminate sentence for a crime committed on the 16th day of May, 1917. The Supreme Court held that section 1168 of the Penal Code was unconstitutional and ex post facto as to the petitioner, whose offense was committed before the enactment of that law; nevertheless the court refused to discharge the petitioner from custody, and directed that he be delivered to the sheriff of the county of Mendocino, to whose custody he was thereby remanded for judgment by the superior court of that county upon the conviction. In making that order the court said:

“Having been tried and found guilty of the crime of manslaughter, as appears from the return to the writ, the petitioner is not entitled to an absolute discharge, but must be returned to the superior court of Mendocino county for sentence. Section 1493, Pen. Code. Section 1202, Pen. Code, providing that a new trial should be granted unless judgment is pronounced within the time limited in section 1191, Pen. Code, has no application to a case of this kind, in which a sentence has been imposed.”

Section 1191, Pen. Code, establishes certain limitations upon the time for pronouncing judgment. Those limitations do not in any case permit the court to pronounce judgment at a time more than one hundred fifteen days from the date of the verdict. Section 1202 of the Penal Code provides that if the judgment be not rendered or pronounced within the time permitted by section 1191, “then the defendant shall be entitled to a new trial.”

In Rankin v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 189, 106 Pac. 718, the Supreme Court construed sections 1191 and 1202 as mandatory in their terms, and held that where sentence is not pronounced in a criminal case within the time prescribed by section 1191, and the defendant applies for a new trial on that ground, it is the imperative legal duty of the trial court to grant the application. Nevertheless, the same court, as we have seen, held in Ex parte Lee that the rule “has no application to a case of this kind in which a sentence has been imposed.” See, also, Matter of the Application of Germino for a Writ of Habeas Corpus, 176 Pac. 701, being a decision rendered by the Third appellate district on October 24, 1918; People v. Booth, 174 Pac. 685; People v. Mendosa, 173 Pac. 998.

[1, 2] The contentions of appellant are that for the reason stated in his motion he was entitled to a new trial; that as soon as the defendant's imprisonment in the state prison began under the first sentence the power of the court to pronounce judgment against him was exhausted and its jurisdiction to recall, annul or change its judgment was at an end. Although these matters were not fully discussed in Ex parte Lee, supra, we do not agree with the claim that the court's decision thereon was mere dictum. Having reached its conclusion upon the main question presented in that case, it was necessary for the court to determine whether the petitioner was entitled to discharge from custody, or whether, on the other hand, he might be remanded to the lower court for sentence.

In accordance with the law, as declared in that decision, the judgment appealed from in this case is affirmed, and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

Action by the Fresno Irrigated Farms Company against Stavros Canupis and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for appellants.
L. L. Cory, of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to quiet title.

On July 10, 1912, an agreement was entered into between the plaintiff and defendants for the purchase and sale of certain real property in Fresno county, for the sum of $3,000 payable in installments. By the express terms of the contract time was made of the essence thereof. This suit was brought for the purpose of quieting the title to the land in question against any claim of the defendants. They answered, setting up the contract, upon which they were in arrears, as a defense to the action. The case came on for trial, and upon the evidence and stipulation of counsel as to certain facts a judgment was awarded in favor of plaintiff, from which the defendants prosecute this appeal.

The only question raised thereby is whether or not an action to quiet title was proper under the circumstances of the case. It is the contention of the appellants that there was no evidence of the breach other than failure to pay an overdue installment, and that under the circumstances the plaintiff should have resorted either to an action to rescind, or should have notified the defendants in advance that the contract was terminated before an action to quiet title could be initiated.

As we view it, this is no longer an open question in this state. The authorities establish a contrary doctrine. The action was commenced on May 24, 1916. It is shown by the statement introduced in evidence that a large sum of money was due upon the contract at the time of the initiation of the action, also that the defendants had been in arrears in their payments for over two years prior to that time. As we have said, it is provided in the contract that time is of the essence thereof, and that in the event the defendants failed to comply therewith the plaintiff should have the right to terminate the contract, and should also have the right to enter upon the property and take immediate possession thereof, and in the event of any such failure the defendants were to surrender to the plaintiff the land and premises without delay or hindrance. At the time of the trial it was admitted by the defendants that no payments other than those referred to in the statement above mentioned had been made, at which time it was also stipulated between the attorneys as follows:

"That the defendants, at the time of the commencement of the action, were in default in making the payments specified in the contract and had not complied therewith, and that there was only one question to be determined by the court herein, i. e., whether the plaintiff could bring this suit to quiet title without taking some affirmative action to forfeit the contract because of the default of the purchasers, and that the case was to be submitted to the court for decision upon that one question alone."

A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, this court had occasion to consider and definitely settle the respective rights and liabilities of a vendor and vendee upon contracts similar to the one in question. A very late case, which seems identical in principle with the case at bar, is that of Schwerin Estate Realty Co. v. Slye, 173 Cal. 170, 159 Pac. 420. In that case, as here, the plaintiff sued to quiet title to certain property. The defendant answered, as here, setting up certain contracts for the purchase and sale of the property, upon which they were in default. The Supreme Court, in discussing this case says:

"We cannot escape from the conclusion that by failing to prove their readiness, ability, and willingness to perform their part of the contract within the time limited therein the defendants utterly failed to establish their right to any relief. * * * Under the terms of the contract no affirmative act on the part of the vendor was necessary to place the vendees in default. It expressly made failure to comply with its terms within the time limited 'by the parties of the second part' (Slye and Condon) an automatic termination of all of the vendor's obligations in law and equity. Of this agreement it may be said, just as Mr. Justice Henshaw said in Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1-16 (69 Am. St. Rep. 17, 43 L. R. A. 199, 55 Pac. 713): 'In the case at bar the payment of the final amount under the contract, at the time and in the manner agreed upon, was a condition precedent to the right of the vendee to demand a conveyance. Upon his failure to make payment the vendee committed a breach, and no affirmative act upon the part of the vendor was necessary to bring about this result.'"

See, also, Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Burns, 31 Cal. App. 549, 161 Pac. 14; Champion G. Min. Co. v. Champion Mines, 164 Cal. 213, 128 Pac. 315; Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, 162 Cal. 539, 123 Pac. 363; Hay v. Casey, 30 Cal. App. 570, 159 Pac. 726, 728; Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 93 Pac. 1007.

[1-3] From these decisions it would seem to be settled that when time is made of the essence of such a contract that provision will be enforced, both in law and in equity, unless waived expressly or by the conduct of the vendor; that upon a breach of any of the conditions, such as failure to make a payment, the vendee, at the option of the vendor, forfeits all right in and to the contract, also to all payments made, and that no affirmative action is necessary on the part of the vendor; that, without notice, an appropriate suit may be commenced by the vendor, either to quiet title or in ejectment, for the purpose of establishing judicially that the vendee has forfeited his rights to the contract, and no longer has any interest in and to the property described therein.

The judgment is affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐ 1010(1)—FINDINGS — EFFECT.

Defenses to an action on a note based on hypotheses contrary to the findings of the trial court which were supported by sufficient evidence are not available on appeal.

Action by A. T. Crane and another against W. D. Reynolds. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellant. Rolfe L. Thompson, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. Action by plaintiffs on a promissory note given by defendant in payment of his proportionate indebtedness upon certain notes paid by plaintiffs and of which the plaintiffs and defendant were common guarantors. Plaintiffs had judgment as prayed, and defendant appeals.

The appellant in his brief states that his defense to the action was based upon eight grounds, setting them forth; but the only propositions argued by him are three in number, and we will take them up in their order.

[1] The first is that the respondents were stockholders in a corporation, which, according to the contention of the appellant, was the principal debtor upon the notes of which respondents and appellant were guarantors, and that consequently they were primarily liable as such stockholders for a certain proportion of the indebtedness represented by the notes. A complete answer to this contention is found in the finding of the trial court, made upon sufficient evidence, that the corporation was not the principal debtor upon said notes and was not interested therein.

Appellant's second proposition is that the respondents failed to use ordinary diligence in compelling the stockholders of the corporation to contribute, and in compelling the principals to pay the notes, at a time when the corporation and stockholders were solvent, which failure would in equity release the appellant from his liability to contribute to the payment of the indebtedness jointly guaranteed. Even if this proposition were sound as a matter of law—and from the record the contrary appears to us to be the case—it, like the first, is made untenable by the court's finding that the corporation was not a party to or interested in the indebtedness before mentioned.

Appellant's final contention is that the respondents received a part of the money for which the notes jointly guaranteed were given, and concealed this fact from the appellant, for which reason equity will not compel a contribution from him as cosurety. This again is met by the finding of the trial court that such was not the fact; that while part of the money procured upon said notes was used to purchase from the respondents their holdings of stock in the corporation, this fact was known to the appellant at the time of the transaction, and that such use of the money by the borrower did not make of the loan one for the benefit of the respondents.

The appeal is entirely devoid of merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1217—DETERMINATION—REMITTITUR.

The jurisdiction of the appellate court ceases the moment remittitur goes down, and execution which was stayed pending appeal may be issued, regardless of the filing of the same, for the jurisdiction of the trial court had again attached.

2. EVIDENCE ⇨83(6)—PRESUMPTION—OFFICIAL ACTS—DETERMINATION—REMITTITUR.

As Code Civ. Proc. § 958, does not call for a separate file mark on a remittitur, held, where a remittitur was sent down after disposition of an appeal on the taking of which execution was stayed, it will be presumed that the clerk of the trial court in accordance with statute entered a minute of the judgment of the appellate court, etc., and so execution was properly issued, though the remittitur was not filed until thereafter under an order nunc pro tunc.

Action by Xavier Fischer against E. G. Lukens and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Stanley Moore, of San Francisco, and Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to quiet title. The plaintiff had judgment in the trial court. Pacific Investments, Incorporated (a corporation), one of the defendants, has appealed and has brought up all of the evidence in a bill of exceptions. The evidence of the parties consists of written instruments. No witness was called by either party. Both parties claim to deraign title from Western Fuse & Explosives Company. On December 22, 1904, the plaintiff obtained a judgment against the Western Fuse & Explosives Company and later took out execution and caused the property involved in this action to be sold at execution sale. The plaintiff purchased at the sale, and if his purchase vested in him a legal title the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed. The appellant attacks the execution sale on the ground that at the time the clerk of the trial court issued the writ the jurisdiction of the trial court had been divested by virtue of an appeal duly perfected. Code Civ. Proc. § 946; Ruggles v. Superior Court, 103 Cal. 125, 37 Pac. 211.

[1, 2] The facts regarding that appeal and pertinent to this appeal are few. They are all admitted. The first appeal was taken regularly and the execution was duly stayed. Later that appeal was disposed of and a remittitur was sent down. The remittitur was dated May 9, 1910. It was filed September 13, 1916, nunc pro tunc, May 11, 1910, pursuant to an order of the trial court made on that date. The record is silent as to when, if at all, the clerk of the trial court did "attach the certificate to the judgment roll, and enter a minute of the judgment of the Supreme Court on the docket against the original entry." The writ of execution was taken out August 1, 1913, and the sale was had September 8, 1913. As the record contains no evidence to the contrary, we must presume that the clerk of the Supreme Court promptly transmitted the remittitur after its issuance; that it was duly received; that the clerk of the trial court duly received it, and thereafter that he did promptly "attach the certificate to the judgment roll, and enter a minute of the judgment of the Supreme Court on the docket, against the original entry." Code Civ. Proc. § 958; sec. 1963, subs. 15, 20, and 24. These matters fill all of the calls of the statute. It will be noted that the statute does not call for a separate filing mark on the remittitur. Code Civ. Proc. § 958. When the provisions of the last-mentioned section have been complied with, it is clear that jurisdiction reverts in the trial court. Granger v. Sheriff, 140 Cal. 190, 73 Pac. 816. There is not, however, any express statement on that subject in our statutes. But there is settled authority to the effect that all jurisdiction of the appellate court is divested on the instant the remittitur goes down. Herrlich v. McDonald, 83 Cal. 505, 23 Pac. 710; Adams v. Dohrmann, 63 Cal. 417; Granger v. Sheriff, 140 Cal. 190, 73 Pac. 816. But it needs no citation of authority to the effect that jurisdiction of a pending case rests in some court. In this case the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and the jurisdiction of the superior court, only, are involved. It being settled by the above authorities that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court ceased when the remittitur issued, it seems clear that instantly the jurisdiction of the superior court attached. It follows that the attack on the title of the respondent is without merit.

As no other error is alleged, the judgment is affirmed.

FRATESSA v. MORRISSEY et al.
(Civ. 2584.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 11, 1918.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 10, 1919.)

CORPORATIONS—§619—FORFEITURE OF FRANCHISE—TRUSTEE DIRECTORS—COMPENSATION.

Where a corporation lost its charter for failure to pay license taxes, and all the stock was transferred to plaintiff, held that director trustees, if entitled to compensation for winding up the corporate affairs, were not entitled to compensation where they rendered no services.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Paul F. Fratessa against W. H. Morrissey and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Morrissey, of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. J. West and Paul F. Fratessa, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This action was brought to restrain defendants, who claimed to be director trustees of a defunct corporation, from selling certain real estate for the purpose of winding up the corporation's affairs.

From the facts it appears that the Anvil Land & Stock Company, a domestic corporation, forfeited its charter for failure to pay its annual license tax. At the time of the forfeiture the corporation's assets consisted of three parcels of land situated in San Francisco of the value of $3,500, and one parcel in the state of Oregon. The corporation was not indebted in any sum, and the defendants herein were its directors in office and its only stockholders at the time of the forfeiture of its charter. Subsequent to this forfeiture the defendants conveyed on the corporate shares to one Harvey F. Turner, who thereafter conveyed the same to the plaintiff. After having disposed of all their interest in the corporation defendants signified their intention as director trustees of selling the four parcels of land for the purpose of winding up the corporation's affairs. Plaintiff thereupon filed his complaint reciting the above-mentioned matters, and claiming that there was no necessity for the sale. In his complaint plaintiff alleged an offer to pay any reasonable expense for settling the corporation's affairs, and for distributing and conveying the assets of the corporation to him as owner of all the shares of the capital stock of the corporation. He alleged further that the defendants demanded the unreasonable sum of $350 for their compensation as trustees to make such distribution to plaintiff, and threatened a sale of the real property to pay themselves such sum. The complaint prayed for a judgment restraining the defendants from selling the lands, and for an order directing a conveyance of the same to plaintiff.

Defendants answered, a temporary restraining order was made, trial was had, and the cause was submitted for decision. Pending the decision an act enabling defunct corporations to have their charters restored was passed by the Legislature; the corporation was rehabilitated, though not by defendants; shares of stock were transferred by plaintiff to other persons; the stockholders of the revived corporation held a meeting and removed defendants from office as directors, and elected others in their stead. Thereafter the corporation through its new directors sold the four parcels of land to plaintiff.

The action brought by plaintiff was then dismissed with the trial court's approval, but on defendant's motion this dismissal was vacated. Thereafter plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint, setting up the rehabilitation of the corporation and its subsequent acts, and further recited that defendants as director trustees were proceeding to sell the lands above mentioned, and alleged that such sale would cloud plaintiff's title. The supplemental complaint prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining defendants from selling the land. In defendants' answer to both complaints it is alleged that the defendants agreed among themselves that defendant Morrissey, who is an attorney at law, should be paid $100 to bring "court proceedings" to settle the affairs of the corporation, and that no distribution of the assets would be made until said sum was paid. Their total claim amounts to the sum of $562 for their services and for costs incurred in attempting to collect the same.

Upon the conclusion of the trial judgment was given enjoining defendants from selling or attempting to sell any of said parcels of land. From this judgment defendants appeal.

The trial court found that, after plaintiff's grantor had acquired all the shares of stock of the corporation, he had tendered to defendants for their execution a drafted instrument of conveyance in proper form to convey and distribute the real property to the owner of all the capital stock of the corporation, and that at such time said owner had tendered to each of the defendants the sum of $5 to defray expenses in executing the instrument of conveyance, but that defendants had refused to make the conveyance. It further found that defendants did nothing toward settling or winding up the affairs of the corporation, nor did they make any outlay on behalf of the company, and that they had no lien or interest or any claim upon the property sought to be sold. The evidence supports these findings.

Defendants' claim is based upon the asserted right of director trustees to compensation for winding up the affairs of defunct corporations. Admitting such right to exist, the record discloses that they rendered no services, and whatever expenditures they may have made in pursuing a claim initiated by themselves and to which they were not entitled must be borne by themselves. Under these circumstances plaintiff was entitled to the relief granted.

MILLS v. GEO. A. MOORE & CO. (Civ. 2341.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §89(5)—CONTRACTS—PLEADING.

A complaint, alleging that plaintiff was engaged by defendant as its exclusive agent to sell bags, that the parties modified the agreement, and that defendant promised to pay plaintiff commissions on sales made by the extra salesmen, is sufficient to show consideration for the agreement and bring plaintiff within Civ. Code, § 1605.

2. CONTRACTS §346(10)—PROOF—VARIANCE.

Where plaintiff alleged his contract according to its legal effect, and, when called as witness, stated the terms of the contract much more in detail than he had stated it in his complaint, but did not state it differently in any respect, there was no fatal variance.

3. CONTRACTS §346(11)—PLEA OF PERFORMANCE—PROOF.

While a plea of performance is not sustained by proof that performance was excused, that rule is not available where plaintiff's evidence showed full performance but defendant's evidence showed it was excused.

Denman & Arnold, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Samuel T. Bush, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action based on an oral contract to recover certain commissions. The plaintiff had judgment in the trial court, and the defendant appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] The plaintiff alleged that he had been employed by the defendant as its exclusive agent to sell bags; that thereafter the defendant and the plaintiff agreed to modify that contract; that by the modification the plaintiff promised the defendant that the defendant might employ other agents to sell bags, and the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff a commission on the sales made by those extra salesmen. These were complete allegations on the subject of consideration, and brought the plaintiff fairly within the provisions of section 1605, Civil Code and the consideration was sufficiently pleaded to withdraw the case from the doctrine stated in Acheson v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 96 Cal. 641, 31 Pac. 583.

[2] The defendant earnestly contends that there was a fatal variance, and presents the point by calling attention to the ruling of the trial court denying its motion for a nonsuit, and, later, its refusal to give certain instructions requested by defendant. We think this contention is not well founded. The plaintiff alleged his contract according to its legal effect. When called as a witness, he stated the terms of the contract much more in detail than he had stated it in his complaint, but in no respect did he state it differently. These facts do not show a fatal variance. Bowers' California Dredging Co. v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 132 Cal. 342, 64 Pac. 475; Antonelle v. Kennedy & Shaw Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 309, 73 Pac. 966.

[3] The contract, it is admitted, contained a covenant that the plaintiff would keep the defendant advised as to the features of the market. The defendant attempted to prove that the plaintiff did not do so, but was excused therefrom. The defendant then invokes the rule that a plea of performance is not sustained by proof of excuse from performance. Peek v. Steinberg, 163 Cal. 127, 124 Pac. 834. That rule is well settled, but the defendant has not brought itself within that rule. Throughout a long examination the plaintiff, who was the only witness on the subject, consistently claimed that he had performed his contract, and at no time did he admit nonperformance and claim excuse.

The record shows no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

SOTO v. SPRING VALLEY WATER CO.
(Civ. 2553.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT $\hookrightarrow$ 265(5)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE.

In an action for the death of a servant killed when a scraper operated by a cable connected with an engine broke a timbered structure under which the servant was working, held that the circumstances were sufficient to warrant a finding of negligence under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT $\hookrightarrow$ 264(5)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE.

In an action for the death of a servant killed under circumstances raising an inference of negligence, held that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may be relied on though the complaint alleged negligence in the operation of machinery, etc.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT $\hookrightarrow$ 265(2)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for the death of a servant killed when scraper operated by a cable connected with an engine came in contact with the structure under which the servant was working, an instruction that plaintiff is not required to show any specific act of negligence, but only that the accident was one which would not have happened, had due care been used, etc., held correct.

4. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 251(8)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for the death of a servant, where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was relied on, an instruction that when a thing which causes injury is under the control of defendant and the accident is one not ordinarily happening if due care is used, etc., held correct, and not open to objection as being abstract.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT $\hookrightarrow$ 291(9)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for the death of a servant, where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was applicable to the facts, an instruction that the burden of proving negligence was on plaintiff held properly refused, where the instruction went further and would have led the jury to believe that negligence could not be inferred from the happening of the accident.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1050(4)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The admission without proper foundation of testimony as to an inspection of the place of the accident several days thereafter held harmless, in view of testimony of witness.

7. DEATH $\hookrightarrow$ 72—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In a death action, where the trial proceeded on the theory that it fell within Civ. Code, § 1970, and the Roseberry Act, which was in force at the time of the accident, held that it was not improper for plaintiff, who was the mother of deceased, to testify he was her sole support, for under the Code she could only recover if dependent on deceased.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Tovina Soto against the Spring Valley Water Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gillett & Cutler, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis Oneal, of San Jose, and Geo. K. Ford, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. Herbert Soto, son of the plaintiff, Tovina Soto, was killed while in the employ of defendant, and his mother had judgment in this action for damages for his death. Defendant appeals from this judgment.

One eyewitness furnished all of plaintiff's evidence of the tragedy, and, taken with the admissions of the pleadings and certain formal evidence of two relatives of the deceased, this testimony supplies all the facts before the court in the case, no evidence being offered for the defendant.

The facts are as follows: On the 2d day of November, 1913, and for a long time prior thereto, the defendant was engaged in the construction of a dam in the Calaveras Valley in Santa Clara county, and in connection with the work operated a stationary steam engine which rotated a drum, on which ran a wire cable. This cable was attached to a metal scoop, or scraper, which it pulled back and forth over a gravel pit to the top of a sieve, or screen, supported by timbers. On the last-named date, the defendant was employed moving rock under this structure. Velasquez, the only eyewitness, testified that he was driving a team of mules at about 8 o'clock in the evening, and had reached a switch of the track on which the scraper operated, but he did not see the scraper at the time, but heard a noise and went over to the structure under which the deceased was working. He found the scraper attached to the cable which pulled it. It had not stopped at the point where it usually dumped the gravel, but had gone beyond that point, and, coming in contact with the structure which the witness called the "square," as he said, "it busted the square," which fell, crushing the deceased under the timbers. It will thus be seen that the engine and the scraper, which were operated by the defendant company, were, for some unexplained reason, so operated in an unusual manner that instead of dumping where it should have dumped, the scraper crashed into the structure of timbers, under which the deceased was working, and wrecked it.

[1] Appellant insists that this does not show negligence on the part of the defendant, but that negligence must be specifically shown, that is to say, that it must be shown that the scraper was negligently operated by some specific evidence of the carelessness of the person operating it, or by some evidence of defective machinery, before the judgment can be had against the defendant.

With this we cannot agree, as we agree with the respondent that this is a case to which the maxim res ipsa loquitur applies. That maxim, translated, means simply that the thing or affair speaks for itself, and, as applied to cases of alleged negligence, the rule is that when a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care. O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 Pac. 674.

No reasonable inference seems possible, except that this apparatus, had it been properly operated, would have been safe, and that its improper operation was due to the negligence of somebody or to some defect in the machinery, undisclosed to and undiscoverable by the deceased, and known, if known to anybody, to the defendant's employes.

[2] Defendant claims, however, that as the complaint alleged specifically negligence in the operation of this machinery, and defects in the strength of the timbers, that the plaintiff cannot invoke the doctrine of the maxim, and further contends that the evidence showed the specific cause of the accident, and that therefore the maxim may not be invoked, and certain authorities are cited which are claimed to support this contention. We think, however, that this question is foreclosed in this state by the doctrine of the case of Lippert v. Pacific Sugar Corporation, 33 Cal. App. 198, 164 Pac. 810. It may be added that in this case the real moving cause of this accident is not shown. It is true that it appears that the scraper, for some reason, was dragged too far by the cable, thus wrecking the timbers, but this is only the result of some other cause, which must have been the underlying reason for the accident. This underlying cause is not proven, but it does seem to us that nothing could be clearer than that somebody's carelessness must have caused it.

[3] Complaint is made by the appellant of an instruction to the jury, a portion of which is as follows:

"Plaintiff is not required to show particularly what the specific act of negligence was which produced the accident, but is only required to show that the accident is one which would not ordinarily occur had due care been employed. The burden then shifts to the defendant to show its freedom from negligence."

The instruction is copied from language used by the court in the case of Faras v. Lower California Co., 27 Cal. App. 695, 151 Pac. 35, and while the facts of that case are not exactly the same as those before the court in this case, we think the instruction correctly states the law applicable to the facts here.

"When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from want of care."

The language is the language of the case of O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 223, 146 Pac. 674, and is quoted as an abstract proposition from Shearman & Redfield on Negligence. It is contended that it does not apply to this case, but it seems to us to be exceedingly apt in its application to the facts in evidence here.

[5] Defendant asked certain instructions, which the court refused. They are all to the effect that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to prove negligence, which is correct so far as it goes, but they all went a little further than this, and the court, had it given them, would have led the jury to think that the facts proven were not, even in the absence of explanation, sufficient to support a verdict. They were therefore properly refused, for their effect was to say that the maxim res ipsa loquitur did not apply.

[6] Several errors of law are called to the court's attention. They will be briefly noticed. Velasquez was asked about a visit to the scene of the accident with a brother of deceased, which occurred three or four days after the accident happened. Objection was made to this evidence on the ground that no foundation had been laid for it. The testimony elicited by the question was harmless, even if it was inadmissible. He testified that he was not able to identify the timbers which he found on this visit, and when asked whether the timbers were new or old, he said he did not know, that they were very black but were not painted.

[7] Another error, which appellant claims the court committed, was in permitting the mother of the deceased, who was the plaintiff in the action, to testify that her deceased son was the only support she had. From the pleadings in the case, and the instructions offered by the parties, it seems clear that the trial proceeded from the beginning upon the theory that it fell within the scope of section 1970, Civil Code, and of sections 1 and 2 of the Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796), which was in force at the time of the accident. The mother could only have recovered under section 1970 of the Civil Code as it stood at that time, if she was dependent upon the deceased for her support. Taylor v. Albion Lumber Co., 168 Pac. 348, L. R. A. 1918B, 185; Gonsalves v. Petaluma & Santa Rosa Ry. Co., 173 Cal. 264, 159 Pac. 724; Balaklala Consol. Copper Co. v. Reardon, 220 Fed. 584, 136 C. C. A. 186.

It seems to us that there is no error in this record sufficient to warrant a reversal of the case.

RUSSELL v. RUSSELL et ux. (Civ. 2615.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 13, 1918.)

1. GOOD WILL §6(1) — EXECUTORY CONTRACTS—TITLE—BILL OF SALE.

An executory contract of a sale of an undertaking business vested no title in buyers, and, upon its cancellation, a bill of sale from buyers to seller, although in terms transferring all of buyers' "right, title and interest" in the business, "together with the good will thereof," conveyed nothing, and hence did not operate as an engagement, implied from transfer of the good will, not to set up an opposing business in the town.

2. GOOD WILL §5—CONVEYANCES.

The good will of a business is inseparable from the ownership thereof, and cannot be conveyed to one party while the business to which it attaches is owned by another.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by S. S. Russell against A. M. Russell and wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants appeal. Reversed.

C. M. Crawford and Ben C. Jones, both of Lakeport, for appellants.

H. V. Keeling, of Lakeport, and Robert Duncan, of Ukiah, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff. The action was instituted to recover from defendant the sum of $5,000 damages, and to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants from carrying on the business of undertakers in the town of Lakeport, Cal. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for damages in the sum of $1,000, and also granting the injunction prayed for.

The facts, briefly stated, are as follows:

The plaintiff is the father of the defendant, A. M. Russell, and the two defendants are husband and wife. In the year 1913, the plaintiff purchased an established undertaking business, and the stock thereof, and employed the defendants, who are experienced undertakers, to operate and conduct the said business for him. At this time it appears that plaintiff orally gave the defendants the right to purchase the said business upon terms agreed upon between them. This arrangement continued until the 23d of April, 1914, when the parties entered into a written executory contract of purchase and sale of the said business. Under this executory contract, the defendants were put into possession of the business. The agreement provided that, after all payments therein provided for had been made by the defendants to the plaintiff, the plaintiff would execute to the defendants a bill of sale of the said business. In case of default in payments, the plaintiff reserved the right to terminate the contract of sale.

The defendants continued to conduct the business, under the terms of this executory contract of sale, up until March 29, 1916, when, owing to differences between the parties, and to the fact that nothing whatever had been paid by defendants upon the principal amount due under the agreement, the parties to the agreement canceled the same by mutual consent, and the said business, with all its incidents, was surrendered to the plaintiff. The cancellation of the executory contract was effected by indorsement in writing thereon. At the same time the defendants executed a bill of sale of the said business, purporting to sell, assign, and transfer unto the plaintiff "all our right, title and interest in and to the undertaking business heretofore and now carried on by us * * * together with all stock and tools of every description pertaining to said business, the good will thereof, books of account, burial records, wagons and harness, and all else whatsoever belonging or pertaining to said business, including all accounts due and owing to said business at this date." The consideration named in this document was that the plaintiff would assume and pay certain enumerated outstanding accounts payable.

Shortly after the above settlement between the parties, defendants opened up in the town of Lakeport, under a new and distinctive name from that formerly used in the old business, a new undertaking business, and continued to conduct the same until enjoined by the judgment of the superior court herein.

The plaintiff contends that by the bill of sale, quoted in part above, the defendants sold to him the good will of the business, and by such sale they are precluded from setting up an opposing business in the same town.

[1] The original executory contract of sale certainly vested no title to the business in the defendants. Its cancellation, after defendants' default in payments, was a right which the plaintiff had under the very terms of the agreement. The purported bill of sale given at the same time by the defendants to the plaintiff certainly conveyed nothing, because the defendants had nothing to convey. It purported to convey all defendants' right, title, and interest in the business and good will thereof. But such right, title, and interest amounted to nothing whatever, because no title had been vested in the defendants by the executory contract. Their only right thereunder was a right to a conveyance after the completion of all the payments. No payments having been made, they had no rights whatever, and if there was any question about this matter, it was settled by the cancellation of the executory contract by mutual consent, which expressly released both parties from any obligations under that agreement. If, therefore, the plaintiff, under said purported bill of sale, agreed to assume any bills for which he was not previously liable, he did so without consideration.

[2] The plaintiff contends that the defendants conveyed to the plaintiff, by this purported bill of sale the good will of the business. We think the good will of a business is something inseparable from the ownership thereof. The good will of a business cannot be conveyed by one party, while the business to which it attaches is owned by another party. Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 78 Pac. 879. The defendants did convey all their right, title, and interest in the good will of the business to the plaintiff, but their conveyance amounted to nothing, as they had no title whatever to the business. It cannot therefore be argued that the defendants impliedly agreed not to engage in a similar business in Lakeport. They were under no obligation to refrain from engaging in such business before entering into the executory contract of purchase and sale. The entire transaction presents nothing more than a possession under an executory contract, a breach of the contract, and a return of the property to the seller. Certainly the defendants have not lost their right to engage in business by reason of such a transaction.

The facts may present a case of hardship upon the plaintiff, but we think he was bound to protect himself against the failure of the defendants to keep their contract. Since he merely provided that, in case of default, the business should be returned to him and the contract canceled, the courts cannot give him an additional remedy because of an incidental loss which he seems not to have taken into consideration when he made his contract. The judgment is reversed.

WHITAKER et al. v. REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA.
(Civ. 1883.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 11, 1918.)

1. DEEDS ⇨155—FORFEITURE CLAUSE—CONSTRUING AGAINST GRANTOR.

A forfeiture is not favored, and will be strictly construed against grantor with a view of preserving estate granted, in view of Civ. Code, § 1442, requiring strict construction against party for whose benefit it is created.

2. DEEDS ⇨168—EVIDENCE OF FORFEITURE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence of violation of conditions working a forfeiture must be clear and satisfactory to justify the court in decreeing a reversion of the conveyance; in view of Civ. Code, § 1442, requiring strict construction of forfeiture against party for whose benefit it was created.

3. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES ⇨6(4) — DEEDS—DELAY IN PERFORMING CONDITIONS.

Delay in carrying out provision of deed given to regents of the University of California, requiring lands deeded to be used for forestry investigation and research, held not unreasonable so as to work a forfeiture.

4. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES ⇨6(4)—TIME FOR PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS—PRESUMPTION.

Where grantor prescribed no time for beginning the work of forestry investigation and research, it must be assumed that he contemplated that time would be required to accomplish purpose that he had in view in deeding lands to regents of the University of California for the purpose of forestry investigation and research.

5. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES ⇨6(4)—COMPLIANCE WITH CONDITIONS—REASONABLE TIME.

In the absence of any specifications in deed, granting lands to the regents of the University of California to be used for forestry investigation and research, as to time when work should begin, a reasonable time would be allowed therefor.

6. EVIDENCE ⇨98—FAILURE TO OFFER EVIDENCE IN SUPPORT OF AN ISSUE.

Plaintiffs having the burden of showing violation of condition in deed working forfeiture of estate, finding in reference thereto was properly in favor of defendant, where plaintiffs offered no evidence on the subject, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1981, as to evidence being produced by party holding the affirmative of an issue.

7. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES ⚡6(4) — BREACH OF CONDITION IN DEED—EVIDENCE —“USE.”

Facts held insufficient to show that land granted to the regents of the University of California for forestry investigation and research had been “used for a stock range” in violation of condition in deed, the verb “to use” meaning to employ; to put to a purpose; to avail oneself of.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Use.]

8. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES ⚡6(4) — BREACH OF CONDITIONS IN DEED—EVIDENCE.

That defendant, regents of the University of California, to which plaintiff granted lands to be used for forestry investigation and research, had no knowledge of cattle straying upon the lands, and that no damage was caused by such cattle, should be considered in determining whether there had been a breach of covenant forbidding use of lands for a stock range.

9. COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES ⚡6(4)—COMPLIANCE WITH CONDITION IN DEED—EVIDENCE.

Facts held to show sufficient compliance with condition in deed to regents of University of California that “these lands and premises shall be known and called Whitaker’s Forest.”

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Edward Whitaker and others against the Regents of the University of California. Judgment for defendant and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. C. Needham, of Modesto, and Joel W. West, of San Diego, for appellants.

Lamberson, Burke & Lamberson, of Visalia, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. On July 26, 1910, one Horace Whitaker executed a deed without money consideration to respondent herein of 320 acres of forest land in Tulare county. The granting part was in the usual form of a deed absolute, but it was followed by this language:

“This deed is expressly made subject to the following reservation hereinafter set forth, and upon the failure of said party to do and perform and carry out the purposes and intents for which the real property herein described is conveyed or in case of any violation of the reservations herein made, said property herein shall immediately revert to said party of the first part, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns. Reservations: 1. Said party of the second part shall have and hold said lands and premises in its present condition for forestry investigation and research connected with that branch of instruction as taught in the University of California, and that it be preserved and continued as a park and pleasure resort for the people of the state of California. 2. That no whisky or other intoxicating liquors shall ever be sold or dispensed on said premises. 3. That said land and premises shall be used as a public park for campers and that no charge shall be made or collected from any person who uses the same for camping purposes, but regulations may be made governing persons while camped on said premises. 4. That said land shall not be used for a stock range, but campers may keep thereon the necessary stock for their camping purposes. 5. That no Sequoia or Redwood trees growing or that may grow on said premises shall be felled or cut down. 6. That said party reserves the right as long as he shall live, to cut, use and remove from said premises any and all dead or fallen timber. 7. These lands and premises shall be known as and called ‘Whitaker’s Forest.’”

Horace Whitaker died a few months after the execution of the deed and this action was brought by his heirs at law to enforce a forfeiture of the conveyance and to obtain a decree of reversion of title to them. The complaint was in three counts, the first of which alleged the failure of the grantee to comply with the conditions of the deed; the second charged statutory fraud in that defendant accepted the deed without any intention to perform the conditions therein, and upon the false representations that it would perform said conditions; the third charged the grantor with mental incompetency at the time of the execution of the deed, but this last count was abandoned at the trial.

It is not disputed that the deed constituted a conditional conveyance, and that the estate was subject to forfeiture for failure to comply with the conditions or “reservations” as they are denominated in the instrument.

[1, 2] It may be further observed that a forfeiture is not favored, that such conditions are strictly construed against the grantor with a view of preserving the estate granted, and that the evidence of violation of the conditions must be clear and satisfactory to justify a court in decreeing a reversion of the conveyance. Section 1442, Civ. Code; Randol v. Scott, 110 Cal. 590, 42 Pac. 976; Behlow v. S. P. R. R. Co., 130 Cal. 16, 62 Pac. 295; Reclamation District v. Von Loben Sels, 145 Cal. 181, 78 Pac. 638.

No doubt the lower court was familiar with these precepts of the law, and it is at least debatable whether their proper application would not have demanded a judgment for the defendant if the case had rested entirely upon the evidence offered for plaintiff. In view of the whole record, however, we are satisfied that no legal ground exists for our interference with the conclusion of the trial judge.

[3-5] We cannot say that there was any failure to devote the land to the purpose of forestry investigation and research. There was some delay in carrying out this provision of the deed. The delay, however, was not unreasonable. It must be presumed that the grantor contemplated that time would be required for preparation to accomplish the purpose that he had in view, since he prescribed no limit for the beginning of the work. It is manifest that he left this matter to the wise discretion of the university authorities, and they seem to have acted in good faith in their efforts to execute the trust. When the deed was made there was no department of forestry connected with the university and instruction in that branch was not given. At the first meeting of the regents for planning and providing for the next year's activities, after the delivery of the deed, an appropriation of $6,500 was made for such department, and this authorized the president of the university to establish it. He promptly began a search for a suitable man to take charge of the forestry department. He did not succeed until December, 1913, when Prof. Walter Mulford of Cornell University was appointed. The latter, however, could not leave his work at Cornell until August, 1914. But before his appointment he had visited California on the invitation of the university authorities, and the advantages of Whitaker's Forest for forestry investigation and research were pointed out to him by Mr. Henderson, secretary for the regents, as a special reason why he should take charge of the work. We need not detail the various steps taken. It is sufficient to say that the department was established under the direction of Prof. Mulford, who was assisted by several other professors. The land was visited and examined, plans for investigation and research were adopted, scientific instruments and equipment were purchased, and allowance in the university budget for forestry was made for the years 1911-1912, 1913-1914, 1914-1915, and 1915-1916. It is true that the actual work of forestry investigation and research was not begun until after this suit was brought, but the preparation had to be made, and it cannot be said that any one was to blame for the delay, or that said delay is a sufficient reason for forfeiture of the estate. In the absence of any specification in the deed as to the time when work should be begun, a reasonable time would be allowed, and it cannot be held that this principle was disregarded. Brown v. State, 5 Colo. 496; Lawrey v. Hanna, 59 Or. 60, 115 Pac. 975; 2 Washburn, Real Property, 11.

[6] There is no claim of any violation of the second condition in relation to intoxicating liquors, nor is there a particle of evidence that effect was not given to the third provision in reference to the use of the land as a public park for campers. Since no evidence was offered on this subject, the burden being upon appellants, the finding in

[7] One of the main points urged by appellants is that there was a violation of the fourth condition as to the cattle range. The only evidence offered as to this contention is found in the testimony of three or four witnesses who pastured their cattle in the United States Forest Reserve surrounding the land in question and who declared that at various times they had seen a few head of them on the Whitaker property, but there is nothing to show that any one ever turned his cattle on the premises or that respondent permitted or even knew or heard of cattle thus straying on the land. The evidence falls entirely short of proving that the land has been "used for a stock range." As respondent points out, the verb "to use" means to employ; to put to a purpose; to employ for the attainment of some purpose or end; to avail one's self of. 39 Cyc. 846.

It seems quite unreasonable to contend that the unauthorized entry of a few cattle at various times on the land in question would constitute the employment or use of such land for a stock range. Indeed, the language of the condition implies the voluntary act of the grantee in devoting the land to the purpose of a stock range. Nothing of the kind is disclosed by the evidence. Uncertain and inadequate as was the testimony for plaintiffs, its significance was impaired by the testimony of Prof. Walter Mulford, head of the department of forestry of the University of California, who testified that he made an examination of the land in June, 1915, and he saw no cattle there, and no evidence of any damage that would be caused if cattle ranged the property. The only signs of cattle, he said, were along the public road running through the land.

[8] The circumstance that defendant had no knowledge of the cattle straying upon the land, and that no damage was caused thereby, should be considered in determining whether said covenant was violated. Indian Orchard Canal Co. v. Sikes, 8 Gray (Mass.) 562; Collins Manufacturing Co. v. Marcy, 25 Conn. 242; Barrie v. Smith, 47 Mich. 130, 10 N. W. 168.

The grantor, of course, might have required the land to be inclosed so as to exclude estrays, but he did not see fit to do so, and we are not to accord to the condition a narrower meaning than the language plainly imports.

In the preliminary correspondence between the parties the grantor intimated that this condition would be more exacting, but we are to determine his intention solely by the language of the deed, since it is complete in itself and does not admit of extraneous evidence.

[9] The only other condition of which violation is claimed is the last: "These lands and premises shall be known and called Whitaker's Forest." It is apparent that this requirement is very general in its terms. There was no attempt made to specify by whom and to what extent the land was to be so known and called. No explicit duty was thereby cast upon respondent, nor was it pointed out how the memorial of the name was to be created or preserved. The donor's desire to have his generosity fittingly recognized was not unnatural, and his pardonable ambition for this sort of posthumous fame should not go unrewarded; but, since he was silent as to what should be done by the grantee to accomplish this purpose, it must be assumed that he intended to leave to its discretion the particular method or means of satisfying this condition. It might have been well if the regents had passed a resolution reciting that the premises should be known as and called Whitaker's Forest, and if they had caused a suitable sign designating the land by that name to be placed at the entrance of the forest. But we cannot hold that this was required. They adopted a formal order and spread the same upon their minutes, accepting the conveyance subject to the conditions. They gave notice to the world of the gift by publication in the University Chronicle, the official news bulletin of the university. The article was headed in capital letters, "Whitaker's Forest," and the deed was published in full. In making his first biennial report to the Governor after the gift was made, the president of the university specifically referred to the land as Whitaker's Forest, and the deed was set forth in full with the statement that the gift was subject to the conditions therein named. It may be added that there is no evidence that it has been known as or called by any other name, and to hold with appellant that something else should have been done by the regents to advertise the gift would be to read into the condition something that is not found therein. It may not be amiss to say that the probabilities are that as this department of the university grows in importance there will be increased recognition of this forest, and there will be more frequent and general advertisement through the university publications of this munificent gift of "Whitaker's Forest." We also venture the suggestion that it is not too late for the regents to place in the park some suitable monument or inscription to commemorate the name and gift, if such action would be pleasing to the heirs. But, as before indicated, this step was and is not required, since the donor failed to so specify.

As to the second count of the complaint, it is sufficient to say that there was no substantial evidence to support it. It would be a gross misconception of the record to hold that the grantee had no intention of carrying out the terms of the grant, or that it made any false representations to the grantor, which induced the execution of the deed. There was some correspondence between the attorneys of the parties and a desire manifested on the part of the regents to have the gift burdened as little as possible with onerous conditions and to have the university spared unnecessary expense, but there is nothing to show that the regents did not act in the utmost good faith, or that they have failed at any time to appreciate the generosity of the donor, or to do what they deemed necessary to effectuate the intentions of Mr. Whitaker.

The evidence as to what was done by the regents negatives any implication of evil motive, and fully supports the finding of the court in that respect. In showing their conduct, it was proper, as contended by respondent, to describe what was done after the complaint was filed and before trial and what was in progress at the time of the trial, which was in furtherance of plans that had been matured and formulated before the action was brought. It had relevant connection with the good faith and diligence of the regents in administering the trust. 13 Cyc. 697; Chute v. Washburn, 44 Minn. 312, 46 N. W. 555.

It seems unnecessary to notice specifically the cases cited by appellants which enunciate well-established principles of law in reference to such deeds, as they are manifestly not opposed to the views herein expressed.

In conclusion, it may be proper to remember that this gift was for a public purpose, and it should be regarded with even greater consideration than if the grant were for the use and benefit of a certain individual. But even if the regents had a personal interest in the benefaction, we should be constrained to hold that the evidence is ample to support the findings of the court.

It was the intention of the grantor that the land should be preserved for all time for the use of the people of the state, subject to the conditions enumerated in the deed, and we are satisfied that the lower court's decision was in consonance with that intention.

The judgment is affirmed.

OSWALD v. SLOANE, Superior Court Judge.
(Civ. 2810.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 17, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡443—STAY—PROPERTY IN CONTROVERSY.

Where after appeal from judgment of superior court, awarding bonds to petitioner and interveners, all bonds were delivered to county clerk, pursuant to court's order and in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 943, the court was not, pending appeal, authorized to grant motion for an order commanding city clerk to deliver to petitioner bonds not included in amounts claimed by interveners; effect of original order being to stay enforcement of judgment.

Petition by George H. Oswald for a writ of mandate prayed to be directed against W. A. Sloane, as Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Diego. Alternative writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Crouch & Chambers, of San Diego, for petitioner.

CONREY, P. J. In response to the petition herein, an alternative writ of mandate was issued. On the return day it appeared that no answer was made by the respondent, and on motion of the petitioner the matter has been submitted, on which we must determine whether the writ should be made peremptory.

The facts, as they appear from the petition, are as follows: The petitioner applied to the superior court of San Diego county for a writ of mandate directing the county treasurer of San Diego county to deliver to petitioner certain road improvement bonds to the amount of $66,550, which were claimed to be the property of petitioner. The treasurer, by his answer, admitted that he held the bonds and had no claim thereon, but alleged that portions of the same were claimed by various persons and corporations, and asked that the court adjudicate and determine to whom he should deliver them. One Granger intervened and prayed for delivery to him of $30,420.76 of the bonds, and Pacific Metal Products Company intervened and prayed for delivery to it of $4,500 of said bonds. After trial, the court, by its judgment, awarded the bonds to said parties as follows: To petitioner, in the amount of $38,889.16; to Granger, in the amount of $23,160.84; to Pacific Metal Products Company, in the amount of $4,500; and ordered that Schwartz, the county treasurer, deliver to said parties, respectively, the said amounts of bonds. Petitioner appealed from that judgment, and Granger appealed from that part of the judgment which awarded $4,500 of the bonds to the Pacific Metal Products Company. Pursuant to an order subsequently made by the superior court, the county treasurer delivered all of the bonds to the county clerk to have custody thereof and keep the same until the final determination of that action. Thereafter petitioner moved the superior court for an order commanding the county clerk to deliver to petitioner that portion of the bonds not included in the amounts of bonds claimed by the interveners. The court refused to grant that motion, basing its refusal upon the ground that it had no jurisdiction to make such order, because of the said appeals to the Supreme Court. As the point has not been mentioned by counsel, we have not considered the question whether conflicting claims to personal property may be determined in a mandamus proceeding.

Section 943, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that:

"If the judgment or order appealed from direct the assignment or delivery of documents or personal property, the execution of the judgment or order cannot be stayed by appeal, unless the things required to be assigned or delivered be placed in the custody of such officer or receiver as the court may appoint. * * *

The delivery of the bonds disposed of by the judgment in the court below appears to have been made to the clerk by order of the court, in accordance with the above-stated provisions of section 943. The necessary effect of the delivery so made was to stay the enforcement of the judgment, the same as where a required stay bond has been given. This being so, the court was not authorized to grant appellant's motion.

The alternative writ is discharged and the proceeding dismissed.

BACKER v. GRUMMETT. (Civ. 2484.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 10, 1918.)

1. CONTRIBUTION ⚡6—JOINT OBLIGATION—
PAYMENT FROM FUNDS OF ANOTHER.

Under Civ. Code, § 1432, giving joint obligor, who satisfies more than his share of claim against all, right to require contribution, where plaintiff, joint maker of note with defendant and another, borrowed money on second note executed by himself, defendant, and two others to take up first note, which he should have paid with proceeds from sale of stock of company in which he and defendant were interested, but which he himself appropriated, he cannot exact contribution from joint makers of second note on account of his payment of it.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡96—"ACCOMMODATION MAKER."

An "accommodation maker" of a note is one who receives no part of the proceeds, which are used exclusively for another maker's benefit, as in discharging his own personal obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accommodation Maker.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church.

Action by H. H. Backer against John Grummett. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. P. Thompson and A. W. Carlson, both of Fresno, for appellant.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff and defendant and two others were joint makers of a promissory note. The parties, with the exception of the defendant, paid three-fourths of the amount of the note, and upon the failure and neglect of the defendant to pay the remaining one-fourth the plaintiff was compelled to and did pay it, and now sues the defendant for reimbursement.

As a defense to the action the defendant pleaded, first, that he signed the note at the request of the plaintiff upon the distinct understanding with him that he would not be called upon to contribute to the payment thereof, and that he received no part of the proceeds of the note; and further pleaded the following facts: That the plaintiff borrowed the money represented by the note in suit for the purpose of taking up a prior note, of which the plaintiff, defendant, and another were joint makers, the money obtained on which was borrowed for the benefit of a corporation in which plaintiff and defendant were jointly interested; that said corporation had issued to the plaintiff certain shares of its capital stock of the value of the last-mentioned note for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to repay the amount borrowed thereon; that the plaintiff sold the said stock, and, instead of using the proceeds in taking up said last-mentioned note, appropriated them to his own use; and that the money obtained by plaintiff upon the note in suit had been applied by him in taking up the note that he should have paid with the proceeds realized by him from the sale of said capital stock.

The testimony as to the first of these defenses, namely, that the defendant signed the note in suit at the request of the plaintiff and upon the understanding that he would not be called upon to pay any part thereof, was conflicting, and the court resolved the conflict in favor of the plaintiff; and upon the objection by the plaintiff that it was "irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, there is but one issue in this case, and that is, did the defendant sign this note as an accommodation maker?" excluded all evidence offered for the purpose of proving the other facts pleaded as a defense.

[1, 2] We are clearly of the opinion that in excluding this evidence the court committed error to the prejudice of the defendant. The right given by section 1432 of the Civil Code to a joint obligor who satisfies more than his share of the claim against all to require a proportionate contribution from all the parties joined with him is based upon the principle of equity that one who has paid money which in equity and good conscience should be paid by another should be reimbursed therefor; and it is apparent that this equitable principle cannot be invoked by one who has paid no more than what he in equity and good conscience ought to have paid. If the facts above pleaded by the defendant were true, they showed that the plaintiff in paying the note in suit to the extent that he did was discharging a debt for the payment of which he had been furnished with funds by the person or corporation for whose benefit the original indebtedness represented by the note giving rise to the present suit had been contracted. He cannot be permitted to appropriate such funds to his own use; and then claim that, because he had subsequently paid a note given by himself and others to take up the prior note which it was his duty individually to pay, he may now turn around and exact contribution from the joint signers of the second note. Moreover, the proof of these last facts would have gone far towards establishing the defense of accommodation maker, for they would have shown that the proceeds of the note in suit were used exclusively to discharge the plaintiff's own obligation.

The pleading of these facts raised a material issue in the case. Evidence should have been admitted thereon and a finding made.

For the reasons given the appeal taken by the defendants from the judgment in plaintiff's favor should prevail, and the judgment is, accordingly, reversed.

1. COURTS $\hookrightarrow$ 85(1)—RULES—EFFECT.

The rules of court as to appellate practice have the effect of statutes.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 765—BRIEFS—TIME FOR FILING.

Under Rules of Court (Rule 2, subd. 4, 119 Pac. x), and in view of rule 5, held that, as the filing of briefs is not necessary to give the appellate court jurisdiction of an appeal, the time for filing briefs may be extended by the court after expiration of the time fixed; respondent not having moved to dismiss.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Earl Charlton Wood and others against Joseph Mesmer. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file briefs in time. Motion denied, and defendant granted leave to file, etc.

Stanley Visel and J. L. Murphey, both of Los Angeles (Arthur G. Fisk, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. Respondent moves to dismiss this appeal and affirm the judgment on the ground of appellant's failure to file his brief in time. Appellant's brief was due on August 5, 1918, at which time an order was made extending the time to and including August 25th. On August 28th, on ex parte motion therefor and affidavit filed, a second order was made:

"That the time for filing appellant's brief in the above-entitled cause shall be and the same is hereby extended sixty days from the date hereof."

This motion to dismiss was made October 28th, pursuant to notice served and filed October 16th.

[1, 2] Respondent contends that the order of August 28th, purporting to extend the time, was ineffective for the reason that appellant's time had then already expired and no right then remained in him which could be the subject of an extension, citing Clark v. Crane, 57 Cal. 629, 632, wherein it is said, speaking of an attempted extension of the time for a motion for a new trial after the time therefor had expired:

"The court or judge can extend the time under section 1054, above cited, but such extension must be granted within the period of ten days, or within such other period during which the right to give such notice is still alive. After the right to give such notice is gone, giving further time could not be called an extension of the time, but it would be in effect reviving a right which no longer exists. In other words, when such right to give notice is gone, there is really no period of time to extend."

The rules of court provide:

"Thirty days after the filing of the transcript the appellant shall file with the clerk his printed points and authorities. * * * The time above limited for filing points and authorities shall not be extended, except by order of the court, upon stipulation of the parties, or an affidavit showing good cause therefor." Rule 2, subd. 4; 119 Pac. x.

"If * * * appellant's points and authorities be not filed within the time prescribed, the appeal may be dismissed on motion upon notice given. If the * * * points and authorities, though not filed within the time prescribed, be on file at the time such notice is given, that fact shall be sufficient answer to the motion." Rule 5; 119 Pac. xi.

These rules of practice have the force of positive law, so far as the rights of the parties are concerned. Brooks v. Union Trust Co., 146 Cal. 134, 138, 79 Pac. 843. They have been uniformly held to "confer rights which may be enforced by litigants." McCabe v. Healey, 139 Cal. 30, 32, 72 Pac. 359; Headstrom v. Hellieson, 136 Cal. 498, 69 Pac. 148; White v. White, 112 Cal. 575, 580, 44 Pac. 1026; Bergin v. Hinckley, 123 Cal. 166, 169, 55 Pac. 896; Barnhart v. Conley, 17 Cal. App. 230, 119 Pac. 200.

Respondent's position, as we apprehend it, is that the "right" thus referred to is a vested right which cannot be ignored or interfered with by this court. We think, however, in view of the provision of rule 5, above quoted, that it is rather in the nature of an inchoate or contingent right which is perfected or becomes vested only in the event that the respondent gives notice of motion to dismiss before the points and authorities are filed.

It cannot be here said that to hold valid the order of August 28th "would be in effect reviving a right which no longer existed." On the day that order was made, even though appellant's time for filing brief had expired, he still had, with permission of the court, a right to file it on that day and on every day thereafter until respondent should give notice of a motion to dismiss. Therefore the effect of the order was to extend a right then existing, not to revive one which had elapsed.

The rules of court expressly recognize the power of the court to extend the time therein limited for filing briefs, and neither in the rules nor in the statutes do we find any provision which expressly or by necessary implication limits that power to those cases wherein the time so limited has not expired.

The instant case is readily distinguishable from those involving attempted extensions of time in proceedings for a new trial or in the perfection of an appeal. In those cases the steps prescribed by statute are jurisdictional, and a strict compliance therewith is a jurisdictional prerequisite to the power of the court to entertain the motion or consider the appeal. But the filing of appellant's points and authorities is in no sense jurisdictional. This court acquired jurisdiction of the appeal by the perfection of the appeal in the court below, even though no transcript had ever been filed herein. Smith v. Jaccard, 20 Cal. App. 280, 288, 128 Pac. 1023, 1026; Clemens v. Gregg, 34 Cal. App. 272, 279, 167 Pac. 299.

This motion must be determined by the facts existing at the time the notice of motion was given. McCabe v. Healey, supra; Barnhart v. Conley, supra. Concluding, as we do, that the order extending time was valid, it follows that appellant was not in default at the time this motion was noticed.

The motion is denied and leave is given to appellant to file his points and authorities heretofore tendered for that purpose.

SCHMIDT v. SANTA MONICA COMMERCIAL CO. and three other cases.
(Civ. 2588-2591.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — IMPROVEMENTS — LIEN — ASSIGNMENT — EVIDENCE.

In assignee's action to foreclose street improvement assessment lien, production in evidence of assessment roll, diagram, and certificate of city engineer, affidavit of demand and nonpayment and warrant signed by street superintendent, held to prima facie prove assignment, under Vrooman Act, § 12.

2. TRIAL — FINDINGS OF FACT — SUFFICIENCY.

Where there were no affirmative defenses contained in answer, findings of fact "that all of the allegations of the complaint are true" is a complete decision of all issues of fact in the case.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — STREET IMPROVEMENT — ASSESSMENT LIEN — FORECLOSURE — EVIDENCE.

In action to foreclose assessment lien under Vrooman Act, where defense was that assessment was void because contractor had not entered into written contract with superintendent of streets, as required by sections 5 and 6, or executed bond as required by section 6½, as added by St. 1899, p. 23, exclusion from evidence of purported contract, produced by city clerk from files of his office, and of testimony that contract and appended bond were not signed by contractor until after assessment, and that city clerk had drawn line through signature then made "when his back was turned," was prejudicial error.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENTS — IRREGULARITIES — APPEAL TO CITY COUNCIL.

Vrooman Act, § 53, as amended in 1911, providing that the exclusive remedy of a person affected by error or irregularity in improvement not affecting city council's jurisdiction, shall be by appeal to city council "as herein provided," does not add to the subjects of appeal as defined in section 11.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — DUE PROCESS — VOID ASSESSMENT.

In action to foreclose street improvement assessment lien under Vrooman Act, defense that assessment was invalid because work was done without contract was available, notwithstanding section 11, and section 53 as amended in 1911, such irregularity not being one which the city council might have remedied and avoided, for to deny defendant such defense would be to take property without due process of law.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Actions by Gilbert Schmidt against the Santa Monica Commercial Company, against the Patten & Davies Lumber Company, against the Los Angeles Pacific Land Company, and against Abraham S. Reel and others, respectively. Decrees for plaintiff and from orders granting motions for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Crouch & Crouch, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Tanner, Odell, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. It has been stipulated that the issues involved in these appeals are identical, and that the cases shall be considered together. Our statement of facts, therefore, will be made from the record in one case only—case No. 2588.

In this action the plaintiff seeks to foreclose liens claimed by him for unpaid assessments for work done by the plaintiff's assignor in the due performance of an alleged contract for street improvements on Elena avenue, a public street in the city of Venice. The proceedings in question are governed by the provisions of "An act to provide for work upon streets, lanes, alleys, courts, places, and sidewalks, and for the construction of sewers within municipalities," approved March 18, 1885, and the amendments thereto—commonly called the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147). The proceedings were commenced by a resolution of the board of trustees of the city, adopted on the 4th day of December, 1911.

A decree in this action was entered in favor of the plaintiff on the 24th day of December, 1914. Thereafter, a bill of exceptions having been duly settled and allowed, the defendant presented its motion for a new trial, and by order entered on the 25th day of March, 1915, the motion for a new trial was granted. The plaintiff's appeal is from that order.

The grounds upon which respondent claims to be entitled to a new trial are: (1) That the plaintiff did not, at the trial of this action, introduce any evidence tending to prove the assignment to him of the contractor's rights. (2) That the findings of fact were so defective and uncertain as to render the conclusions based thereon "a decision against law." (3) That the assessment on which the judgment was based was void, because no contract was entered into between the street superintendent and the plaintiff's assignor, and because no bond was executed for the performance of the work.

[1] 1. Under the terms hereinafter quoted from section 12 of the statute, the documents produced in evidence by the plaintiff were sufficient, prima facie, to prove the assignment. The provisions are that "the contractor or his assignee" may sue, and that those documents are prima facie evidence "of the right of the plaintiff to recover in the action."

[2] 2. The findings of fact in this case are "that all of the allegations of the complaint are true, and all of the allegations of the answer opposed thereto are untrue." In view of the fact that there are no affirmative defenses contained in the answer (and assuming without deciding that the objection is one which may be raised on motion for a new trial), the finding that all of the allegations of the complaint are true is a complete decision of all issues of fact in the case.

3. The plaintiff introduced in evidence the assessment roll, the diagram and certificate of the city engineer mentioned in the complaint, the affidavit of demand and nonpayment, and the warrant signed by the street superintendent. No objection is made concerning the form, sufficiency, regularity, or effect of said documents, and for that stated reason they were not set out in the bill of exceptions. Section 12 of the statute provides that "the contractor or his assignee may sue, in his own name," to recover the amount of an unpaid assessment, and that those documents "shall be held prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment and of the prior proceedings and acts of the superintendent of streets and city council upon which said warrants, assessment and diagram are based, and like evidence of the right of the plaintiff to recover in the action."

Section 6 provides that "the superintendent of streets is hereby authorized, in his official capacity, to make all written contracts * * * authorized by this act." Section 5 requires that the successful bidder, to whom the contract has been awarded, shall "enter into a written contract" for the work, and at the same time shall execute a bond, with two or more sureties, for the faithful performance of the contract. Section 6½, as added by St. 1899, p. 23, requires that the contractor, before executing the contract, shall file with the superintendent of streets a bond executed by the contractor, with at least two sureties, for the benefit of those who furnish materials to be used in the work, or who perform labor thereon.

At the trial, Charles S. Thatcher, city clerk of the city of Venice, and H. B. Eakins, superintendent of streets, were witnesses for the defendant. Eakins testified that he had made search in his office for any contract between Mr. Mayer (the alleged assignor of plaintiff) and Mr. Beemer as superintendent of streets; that he had not in his office any original records of the proceedings, or any copy of contract or instrument purporting to be a contract between Mayer and Beemer; that he knew of no contract other than the one concerning which Thatcher testified. Beemer was the superintendent of streets in office at the time when the contract is alleged to have been made.

Thatcher, at the date of the trial on December 14, 1914, was city clerk and had been in office during the preceding three years. He identified a document purporting to be a street contract dated February 5, 1912, between Mayer and the street superintendent for street work on Elena avenue. Thatcher testified that this document was a file in his office, and was the only contract or instrument, purporting to be a contract between said parties, that he had seen, or of which he had any knowledge. By stated questions, and by offers duly made, the defendant's attorney endeavored to introduce testimony of the witness, to the effect that the said document was never signed by the contractor until October, 1912, after the assessment was made up, and after the warrant was issued; that on the 3d day of October, 1912, the said document and the form of bond appended thereto, were for the first time signed by the contractor; that on the same day Mr. Thatcher, on discovering these facts, drew a line through the signature of Mayer upon the bond and made indelible pencil indorsements upon the contract and upon the bond, to the effect that said signatures were made "when his back was turned," October 3, 1912, 9:40 a. m.; that Mr. Beemer died before this case came on for trial. The defendant offered said document in evidence in connection with the testimony offered. To all of this evidence the plaintiff objected, and the objections were sustained.

[3] The order granting a new trial should be affirmed, if the court erred in rejecting this evidence. We are satisfied that it was error, and very prejudicial error. Counsel for appellant state in their brief that by section 6 of the statute the street superintendent is made the custodian of the contract and is required to keep a book in which the contracts are recorded, and that therefore it was incumbent upon respondent to produce the original record, or make proof of its contents, and that this the respondent did not do, or offer to do. Section 6 does not contain any such provisions, and we have not found them elsewhere in the statute. While contracts for street work might very reasonably be retained in his office by the street superintendent, yet in the absence of specific statutory direction no reason appears why they may not (at least by consent of the street superintendent) be kept in the office of the city clerk, who by virtue of his office is the keeper of records of the board of trustees, by whose authorization street work contracts are made. The evidence offered had a clear tendency to prove that the contract relied upon by appellant was the same document produced by the city clerk, and that it was not signed by the contractor before the work was done; and the same observation applies to the bond.

Appellant tacitly recognizes, as he must, that it is essential to the creation of a valid contract that the contractor must within due time affix his signature thereto. He claims, however, that respondent having failed to appeal to the board of trustees, within 30 days after the date of the warrant, and thereby having failed to make any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment, is in this action estopped from making the objection that the contract was not signed by the contractor within the proper time.

[4, 5] Section 53 of the statute, as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 634), provides that "no error, irregularity, informality, * * * which does not directly affect the jurisdiction of the city council to order the work or improvement, shall avoid or invalidate such proceeding or any assessment for the cost of work done thereunder. The exclusive remedy of any person affected or aggrieved thereby shall be by appeal to the city council as herein provided." The cases in which an appeal to the city council may be taken are provided for by section 11 of the same statute. That section says that "the owners whether named in the assessment or not, the contractor, or his assigns, and all other persons directly interested in any work provided for in this act, or in the assessment, feeling aggrieved by any act or determination of the superintendent of streets in relation thereto, or who claim that the work has not been performed according to the contract in a good and substantial manner, or having or making any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment or other act, determination, or proceedings of the superintendent of streets," may appeal to the city council within 30 days after the date of the warrant. After notice duly given a hearing shall be had before the city council, which is given very complete authority to remedy and correct errors or informalities in the proceedings. It is then provided that "all the decisions and determinations of said city council, upon notice and hearing as aforesaid, shall be final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal under the provisions of this section, as to all errors, informalities, and irregularities which said city council might have remedied and avoided."

In Manning v. Den, 90 Cal. 610, 27 Pac. 435, the defendant in an action to foreclose the lien of a street assessment under this act, offered evidence tending to show that the contract was one which the street superintendent attempted to execute at a time when he had not yet acquired power to enter into such contract. It was held that this evidence should have been received by the court, and that any objections to the correctness of the proceedings by reason of the defect above stated were not waived by the failure of the defendant to appeal to the city council. Section 11 was there relied upon by the plaintiff, but the court determined that the defect in question could not have been remedied or avoided by the city council upon any appeal from the assessment. "The provision, in the latter part of section 11, that 'no assessment shall be held invalid except upon appeal to the city council,' etc., has no application to a case in which an appeal is not authorized." The decision in Manning v. Den, supra, has been referred to with approval in subsequent cases, such as Chase v. City Treasurer, 122 Cal. 540, 55 Pac. 414; MacLaughlin v. Knobloch, 161 Cal. 676, 682, 120 Pac. 27; Imperial Land Co. v. Imperial Irrigation Dist., 173 Cal. 660, 663, 161 Pac. 113. We are of the opinion that section 53 of this act does not add to the subjects of appeal to the city council as defined in section 11. It follows that if the defendant in this case is not permitted to introduce evidence for the purpose of showing that the work was done without any contract therefor, it will be deprived of its property without a hearing before any authorized tribunal, and therefore without due process of law.

1. HIGHWAYS — 211—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Evidence held to show that automobile driver injured by driving into pit and dirt embankment knew that road was being reconstructed, was unfit for travel, and that his destination could have been reached by another road which was safe.

2. HIGHWAYS — 197(3)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Automobile driver, who used road knowing that it was being reconstructed and was unfit for use and that he could have used another road in condition for travel, was negligent.

3. HIGHWAYS — 197(6) — ACCIDENT—DIRT EMBANKMENT—LIGHTS AND BARRIERS.

When automobile driver injured in driving into pit and dirt embankment knew that road was being reconstructed and that it was unsafe, it was immaterial that contractor failed to use barriers to prevent use of road or by lights or other warnings give notice of road's unfitness.

4. HIGHWAYS — 197(3)—INJURY—NOTICE OF DEFECT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

One who uses and is injured on defective highway knowing or having reason to know that it is in process of construction and not open to general use is guilty of negligence unless he uses such highway because it is necessary, and in such case he must exercise great care.

5. COUNTIES — 1—NATURE OF.

"Counties" are mere governmental agencies of the state vested with a variety of powers which the state itself may assume or resume and directly exercise.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, County.]

6. HIGHWAYS — 198—CONSTRUCTION — NEGLIGENCE OF CONTRACTOR—LIABILITY OF OFFICIALS.

St. 1911, p. 823, § 9, amending act passed in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 215), pursuant to Const. art. 4, § 36, creating department of engineering to have charge of public highways, does not make advisory board, consisting of members of the highway commission, and the state engineer under whose general direction state highway construction is carried on, liable for negligence of contractor in construction of highway.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT — 318(2) — INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—HIGHWAY CONTRACTOR.

Highway contractor having contract with advisory board of department of engineering and state engineer drawn in accordance with act of 1907 (St. 1907, p. 215) and amendatory act (St. 1911, p. 823), giving advisory board and state engineer right to determine whether contract is being performed and to require such performance, but giving them no control over employes or mode of doing work contracted for, is independent contractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; William T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action by Paul D. Buckingham against the Commary-Peterson Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Samuel Knight and F. E. Boland, both of San Francisco, and C. C. Carleton, of San Diego, for appellants.

Brantley W. Dobbins and H. M. Anthony, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries.

The complaint alleges that on or about the 8th day of June, 1914, the defendant Commary-Peterson Company, to which we shall hereinafter refer as the "corporation," entered into a written agreement with the state of California for the construction of a portion of the state highway in the county of Solano, between the town of Fairfield and the town of Vacaville, known as "Highway Division 3, Route 7, Section C"; that thereafter the corporation "and said defendant Austin B. Fletcher, the highway engineer named in said contract and defendants Darlington, Stern, and Blaney, the highway commission named in said contract, commenced each and all to construct the said portion * * * of said highway and entered into complete control and supervision of the said highway; that said portion of said highway was at all times herein mentioned and particularly on the date next hereinafter mentioned an open public road and highway and the public was permitted to and did travel over and along said highway by means of vehicles and otherwise." Then follow allegations that the defendants, while engaged in constructing said highway, opened and left open a certain culvert crossing under the traveled portion of said highway and placed and left on the same near said culvert a quantity of dirt and gravel in such manner as that it formed across the surface of said highway "a small and abrupt embankment about one foot in height above the surface of the traveled portion of the highway"; that the defendants negligently and carelessly failed and omitted to place at or upon the highway any sign, warning, light, or signal of any kind to warn or give notice to persons traveling on and along said highway, "and approaching the said pit, of the danger of running upon and into the same, or of the condition thereof as hereinabove alleged"; that on the night of November 3, 1914, the plaintiff was carefully proceeding upon and along said highway in an automobile, traveling from the town of Vacaville southerly towards the town of Fairfield, and that by reason of the negligence of the defendants and each of them, as above indicated, he was unable to see the said pit and to know the danger thereof to persons traveling on said highway, and ran the automobile into said pit and said embankment of dirt and gravel, causing the machine "to vault and jump in such manner as to violently throw plaintiff out of the same onto the ground, causing a compound fracture of the left leg." The effect of plaintiff's injury upon his capacity to perform his usual or accustomed duties is then alleged, and the prayer is for judgment in the aggregate sum of $7,284.

The several defendants interposed answers, in which they specifically deny each and all of the material averments of the complaint.

A trial by jury resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff and against all the defendants for damages in the sum of $5,284. Judgment was entered upon the verdict in the sum so awarded.

The appeal is by all the defendants from said judgment.

Two points principally relied upon by the appellants are: (1) That the plaintiff himself was guilty of negligence which contributed to the accident and the injuries which he sustained as a consequence thereof; (2) that the corporation was an independent contractor, and consequently the state engineer and the members of the highway commission, named and joined as defendants with the corporation, are not chargeable with any negligence on the part of the corporation which might have been the direct cause of the injuries received by the plaintiff.

1. The facts disclosed by the evidence are as follows: Pursuant to the contract referred to in the complaint and to which we have alluded above, the contractor commenced work on the highway in question, beginning at the town of Fairfield and working northerly toward Vacaville. At the time of the accident complained of the concrete base of the highway had been laid for a distance of five miles north of Fairfield to a point variously called "Titel's," "White Caps," and "Halfway House." For a distance of two miles further, to what is called in the record "Nelson's Ranch," the roadbed had been graded, cement had been poured, and "checks," formed by throwing up dirt to a height of a few inches, had been placed on the concrete to hold the water used to set the concrete. Beyond the Nelson ranch, toward Vacaville, was a ranch owned by T. H. Buckingham, father of the plaintiff. For some time previous to the time of the accident the plaintiff had been operating a pumping plant, located at the side of the road in front of his father's property, supplying water to the mixer used in making the concrete which was poured onto the roadbed.

About one-half mile south of Titel's, and at Nelson's ranch, about 2½ miles further north, are roads running at right angles to the highway and connecting, at a point several miles to the east, with a road paralleling the highway under construction. The accident occurred at a point near Titel's about 225 yards south of the road first above mentioned, which is known as the "Cement Road," the other being spoken of as the "Nelson Road." At this point there was a break in the highway about 5 feet wide and an excavation 5 feet deep, it being the intention later to place therein a concrete culvert. Dirt had been thrown up to a height of about 3 feet, lying across the highway from side to side on both sides of the excavation.

A general election was held in the state of California on the 3d day of November, 1914, and plaintiff, at that time 23 years of age, was engaged during the day in conveying voters to the polls at Vacaville. At about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 4th of November, plaintiff entered the election booth at Vacaville "to see how the count was," and there met S. P. Dobbins, Jr., a young man 21 years of age. Plaintiff remarked that he would like to know "how it is coming out in Suisun," to which Dobbins replied that he would like to go himself and that he had a machine in the garage. He got the automobile, and, at some time between 2:30 and 3 o'clock in the morning, the two started for Suisun. It was a bright moonlight night. Plaintiff testified:

"We left right straight out the highway, as I always do when I go home, and then it was pretty rough in spots, and in order to cut out some of the rough spots I went through the ranch, and I also wanted to get a robe, so I stopped in at the ranch, and by going through the ranch I cut off about half a mile or so of this bad road, or three-quarters. * * * From Vacaville to my father's place we could go right on top. * * * We proceeded on down the road. There is where the rough road commenced. We had to go on the low gear and intermediate gears; it was so rough you could not do anything else. We proceeded along the highway until we got to the concrete. As I remember it, the concrete had a small break in it there about the Swanson place, the other side of White Caps. * * * We went over a little knoll and slowed up at this road that turns off for Cement. This was a road after I got on this concrete. I knew that I did not know the road; and we slowed up at this point to see if there was anything to tell us, any barriers to stop. There did not seem to be anything noticeable there that we could see. I had raised up in my seat. I could not see any lantern; I could not see any sign. There had been one there once, that I knew. * * * I just told Mr. Dobbins: 'I guess she is open, I don't see anything.' * * * Driving along, the next thing I know I think we saw a pile of dirt there, and the accident occurred, and I was knocked unconscious, and I don't remember anything much about it. * * * All I can remember is seeing this little pile of dirt, I should judge a foot and a half or 20 inches high."

The witness stated that he did not remember seeing any boards on top of the concrete next to the opening or any lights, and said:

"We came over some pretty horrible roads before we got there and seemed to see all turns and so forth."

He testified that he was familiar with the road as far down as the Halfway House; that while he was pumping water he would jump on auto trucks loaded with rock and ride up to the mixer where they were laying the concrete, "so that I was familiar with all the turns of the road." At that time the mixer was in front of the Nelson ranch. Asked if he knew whether the road was completed from the point where the mixer was to Fairfield, he replied:

"That seemed to be the general public report, that was the news that was buzzing around, that they had scraped the dirt off the road from the Halfway House to Fairfield, and that you could use it. The general information was, you could hear people say, 'You can travel the road now from the Halfway House to Suisun.'"

On cross-examination plaintiff testified that after the polls closed he went to his home and returned to Vacaville at about 8 o'clock. At 8:15, a party of three or four, including plaintiff, drove to a roadhouse about six miles above Vacaville (which town was "dry") "and had a glass of beer and left." They returned to Vacaville at about 10 o'clock. Plaintiff went to a hall where a dance was in progress, stayed there a few minutes, and then went to the polling place. The same parties again drove to the roadhouse at about 11 o'clock, stayed there a few minutes, "had a glass of beer," and returned to Vacaville. He said that when he and Dobbins went to the Buckingham ranch they each "had a very small drink of whisky." The witness testified:

That he "recalled" that they passed three barriers between Vacaville and the place where the accident occurred and that at the first road they passed there was a sign reading, "Turn here." That he saw such signs "lots of times, but not on that particular night. I had seen them there before as I had driven down that road weeks before. Q. At the corner of that road (Nelson's) was there not a sign saying, 'Road closed, turn here'? A. Yes, sir. Q. On this particular night? A. Yes, sir. Q. You saw that, did you not? A. I took no particular notice of it. Q. You knew it was there from being there formerly? A. Yes, sir."

He said that he knew of the crossroad between Titel's place and the point where the accident occurred and which turned off about 225 yards from where the automobile struck the dirt pile. As to the speed at which they were traveling, plaintiff said that they traveled in first and second gears up to the concrete and then went into third, and "were going somewhere between 20 and 30 miles an hour." When he stood up to look ahead, they had slowed down to 10 or 15 miles, and then started ahead at 25 or 30 miles an hour; he thought probably 25 or 26 miles.

S. P. Dobbins, Jr., testified: That he was playing pool all the evening of election day until about half past 2 in the morning, when he went to the polls and there met plaintiff. He drove the machine in which they left Vacaville, and he said that after leaving the Nelson ranch he saw no barriers or lights on the highway. At the Nelson road "there was a barrier there that had been a barrier, the sides of the road were fenced up, but the middle of the highway was open. From there to White Caps the road had been graded and before we got there, and was all cut up in big clods; it was high in the middle and the sides were in ditches. Had to run in the ditches, sometimes on the top and sometimes clear across to the other ditch. In fact, we were all over the road." The witness described the accident as happening in about the same manner as testified to by plaintiff. On cross-examination he stated that he did not take a drink at Buckingham's; that he did not get out of the machine; and that plaintiff did not bring him one, but that at 11:30 of the night before he had gone to the same roadhouse mentioned by plaintiff and had one glass of beer.

The testimony shows that the barriers maintained consisted of posts, two by four, with two by four rails placed on them and wired. The barriers extended clear across the right of way, from one fence to the other. There was a traveled way along the side of the material, and the barriers, were left in such manner that persons passing might take them down; people traveling to the ranches along the highway would have to use the highway to get to their places of abode; the concrete having checks of dirt upon it, people would have to use the side of the road.

[1, 2] There was testimony given by other witnesses, introduced by the plaintiff, that there were neither lights nor barriers where and at the time the accident occurred. On the other hand, the defense presented witnesses who testified that there were barriers at certain points on the highway and a light placed at the point where the automobile struck the dirt pile. It is not necessary, however, to reproduce herein any of said testimony; nor do we consider it important, in the decision of this case, definitely to know whether there were barriers at any points on the highway or a light at the obstruction with which the automobile collided. It may, indeed, be conceded that, at the time of the accident, there were no barriers extending completely across the road anywhere and that there was no light at the point where the accident occurred, and still we are constrained to the conclusion, from the plaintiff's own testimony as well as from that of his companion, Dobbins, that he, by his own inexcusable and culpable negligence, contributed to the damage sustained by him as a consequence of the collision of the automobile in which he was riding with the dirt pile. In other words, we think it is plainly manifest from his own admissions that but for his own negligence the accident would never have occurred. He had for many years resided in the community through which the road passes and had for some time been employed at a place situated in near proximity to the road. He knew that the road was being reconstructed under the authority of the state and that the character of highway construction being prosecuted by the state was such as to require the old roadbed and culverts crossing it to be torn up and removed so that the highway was wholly unfit for use by the traveling public. He knew that barriers had all along been maintained on the highway to prevent its use while under reconstruction and knew that at a certain point between Vacaville and the place where the accident happened, a crossroad leading to Suisun, the place of destination of himself and companion on the night of the mishap, turned away from the road under construction and over which he was traveling, and he further knew that there was maintained at the point where said crossroad so turned off a sign, warning people traveling over the road under construction to take the crossroad. He, in brief, at all times knew the general conditions existing in and upon the road under construction. Neither the plaintiff nor his companion, Dobbins, testified that he had any positive or definite information that the highway, on the night of the accident, was in a condition to be used by the traveling public. In fact, the plaintiff himself testified that all the information he had on the subject was that whose source was a vague, indefinite rumor in the neighborhood that the highway was completed and available for use, or, as he himself expressed it, "that the news was buzzing around that they had scraped the dirt off the road from the Halfway House to Fairfield, and that you could use it." It is very clear, therefore, that, while he was familiar with the fact that the highway was under process of reconstruction and had, down to the time of the accident, knowledge of the conditions which had existed with respect to the highway, and knew that, unless the dirt had been scraped from the road and other obstructions necessitated by reason of the work of construction had been removed, it was not safe to attempt to pass over the road with an automobile in the nighttime, he never had taken the pains to ascertain definitely or with certainty for himself whether the report of its completion which was "buzzing around" was correct or not. That both he and Dobbins were in grave doubt as to the safety of the road is plainly shown by the fact that, just prior to reaching the point at which the accident occurred, the plaintiff arose from his seat in the automobile and, standing erect for a moment, thus took a survey of the situation before him to determine whether the road was or was not perfectly safe to proceed on at the rate of speed—25 or 30 miles an hour—at which they had previously been traveling. Furthermore, according to the testimony of Dobbins, he was required to drive the machine, before reaching the dirt pile, "in the ditches, sometimes on the top and sometimes clear across to the other ditch—in fact all over the road." This itself ought to have been sufficient warning that the greatest care was required of them to get the machine over the highway with safety to themselves. Both the plaintiff and his companion knew of the crossroad above referred to, knew that it would take them, if used by them, to the place where they proposed going, and knew that, although not a modern highway, it was in a good and safe condition for use by the traveling public.

[3] With the knowledge which the plaintiff had of the condition of the highway over which he attempted to make his way to Suisun, it is, as above stated, a matter of no material importance whether the barriers were maintained across the road or lights kept at points where there were obstructions caused by the tearing up of the road or the piling thereon of materials to be used in the work of construction. Barriers and lights and other such warnings placed on streets or highways which are undergoing construction or improvement are for those of the traveling public who have no knowledge or previous notice of the conditions which render the thoroughfare unsafe for use. Therefore, those having actual knowledge of the existence of such unsafe conditions, or who, having had such knowledge, attempt to use the street or highway without first informing themselves as to whether such conditions have been removed and the highway thus made suitable and safe for general use, do so at their own peril.

There are innumerable cases the facts of which are strikingly similar to those disclosed by this record and in which the courts have with unbroken uniformity held that the injuries complained of were entirely and directly imputable to those complaining. To some of those cases we will now refer.

In Compton v. Revere, 179 Mass. 413, 60 N. E. 931, a Massachusetts case, the plaintiff complained of injuries sustained in slipping and falling on a highway. It appears that the grade of the highway was being changed; but, the winter season coming on before the work was completed, further work thereon was abandoned and postponed until better weather returned, the defendants leaving the road in a rough and unsafe condition for use. The plaintiff testified that he was and had been familiar with the fact that the same condition of the highway had existed for a month, and that there was another way of reaching the place where he was going when hurt, but that it was not so convenient a way of getting there. The defendants requested an instructed verdict, which was refused. The court, holding that the request of the defendants should have been granted, said:

"It is obvious that the plaintiff knew all that there was to know about the condition of things, and, in attempting to use the street, did it at his peril. The case cannot be distinguished from Jones v. Collins, 177 Mass. 444, 59 N. E. 64, unless the question of a want of barriers makes a difference. There was a conflict of evidence on the point whether barriers had ever been placed on Beach street. But we do not regard the question as material in this case. The object of a barrier is to notify the public that it is unsafe to proceed; but, where the condition of the street is such as is shown by the evidence in this case, the condition itself is as strong a notice as any that could be given. Nor do we regard it as material that prior to the accident some wagons were driven over the street. There are always persons who take risks, if a short cut can be made, and who will go over a street even if it is obviously not open to public travel."

In Jones v. Collins, 177 Mass. 444, 59 N. E. 64, referred to in the above-cited case of Compton v. Revere, the action was for injuries sustained by the plaintiff while in the act of passing along a new street, which was then undergoing construction under proceedings duly inaugurated by the public authorities. There was evidence to the effect that, although barriers with proper signs had been placed and were maintained across each end of the new street and across the ends of the streets leading into it, the plaintiff was not aware of the fact that the street was in process of construction. It seems, though, that the barriers did not extend across the entire space at the end of the street, a sufficient space being left open at each side to enable pedestrians to pass by. The plaintiff secured a verdict, and, in granting a new trial on appeal, the Massachusetts Supreme Court, among other things said:

"It is not essential that such notice shall be brought to the actual knowledge of all persons; and it is immaterial to the duty of the defendants to the plaintiff in the present case whether she had actual knowledge that the street had been closed for travel. The barriers and signs which were in fact up, and had been so for many days, were enough to fix the right of the defendants to control the place, without being under obligation to keep it in any condition other than that resulting from the legitimate prosecution of the work of construction in accordance with the order under which they worked. In the opinion of a majority of the court, the verdict should be set aside, and a new trial granted."

In the instant case, as has been shown, the plaintiff knew of another road which he could have taken to Suisun—a road which had been generally used and which was perfectly safe for use. In Hill v. Tionesta, 146 Pa. 11, 20, 23 Atl. 204, 205, decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, the court said:

"It was proved by undisputed testimony on both sides that there was another road, somewhat longer, over which the hauling could be done, and as to a few of the earlier loads was done, without incurring the risks which were so very manifest on this road. The case is plainly brought within a long line of the decisions which established as an inference of law the contributory negligence of the plaintiff."

In the West Virginia case of Shriver v. Marion County Court, 66 W. Va. 685, 690, 66 S. E. 1062, 1064 (26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 377), the plaintiff was driving a team hitched to a wagon loaded with merchandise over a street which was plainly and conspicuously defective. The wheels of the wagon went into a deep mud hole in the street, with the result that the vehicle was tipped over and the plaintiff thrown with violence to the ground, whereby he sustained a fractured leg. The serious question in the case was whether there was another way which the plaintiff could have taken, and as to that the evidence was not certain or clear. The court said:

"The liberty, right, and power of the citizen in respect to the use of highways being very broad, it is neither unreasonable nor unjust to require him to avail himself of his wide latitude of choice, impose upon him the duty to exercise reasonable care and prudence, and hold him guilty of contributory negligence when, by reason of his omission thereof, injury results to him or his property. As in all other cases arising under the law of negligence, his voluntary and unnecessary encountering of danger amounts to an assumption of risk and bars recovery, if he had knowledge of the danger, or, by reason of its obviousness, he was bound to know it. [Italics ours.] This principle has been uniformly adhered to in the decisions of this court. We do not recall an instance in which a recovery for injury occasioned by a known or obvious defect has ever been allowed, and some of our decisions go so far as to intimate that under no circumstances can there be a recovery for such an injury, if the defect by which it is occasioned was so open and apparent that the traveler, exercising reasonable care and prudence for his safety, ought to have detected and avoided it."

Again, the court in that case further said:

"Another principle, asserted by the courts generally, though correct, has a tendency to mislead. It is that the use of a road by a traveler with knowledge of its bad condition is not per se negligence. On its face this principle seems to be inconsistent with preclusion from recovery by assumption of risk. It seems necessarily to imply a right to use in a careful manner a bad road and recover in case of injury, but this is not necessarily true. Rightly interpreted, the expression means no more than that the citizen may use such a road with knowledge of its condition and still recover for injury, if the circumstances were such as to justify the assumption of risk, on the ground of necessity, and he exercised care, and also when the injury was caused, not by the open and apparent defects of which the plaintiff had knowledge, but by another latent, hidden defect in the same street or walk of which he had no knowledge, as in the case of Moore v. Huntington." Chapman v. Milton, 31 W. Va. 384, 7 S. E. 22.

[4] By the foregoing authorities it is clearly and unquestionably established that any person who uses and is injured on a defective highway, knowing, or having reason to know, that it is then in process of construction, and for that reason is not open to general use by the public, is himself guilty of negligence, unless he has used such highway because it was necessary to do so, and that even in such case he must exercise great care. There seems to be no reason for doubting that the facts of the present case bring it clearly within the principles enunciated and applied in the cases above considered. Indeed, in our opinion, there is such a marked similarity between the facts of this case and those of the cited cases, that nothing more need be said of the case before us upon the question of contributory negligence, than what has been reproduced above from the cases referred to.

While the conclusion thus arrived at is, of course, decisive of the case, yet, in view of the fact that the state is a party to the contract in question here, and of the further fact that it is probable, if, indeed, not certain, that similar contracts will, in the future, be made by the state, we feel that it is no more than right and proper that the public officers, upon whom the law imposes the duty of inaugurating and prosecuting state highway construction, should know what their legal status is with respect to such contracts. Therefore we deem it only just to them, since the question is here put squarely before us, to consider and decide whether, under such circumstances as are present in this case, the state engineer and the members of the highway commission, in whom is vested by law the authority to inaugurate and supervise the construction of state highways, can be held liable for any damage to third persons which may follow from acts of negligence by the contractor, committed in the performance of his contract. This question, in the form in which it arises and is presented here, is whether the corporation defendant was an independent contractor, and is alone responsible and liable for the damage of which complaint is herein made.

In the year 1902, the people adopted section 36 of article 4 of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"The Legislature shall have power to establish a system of state highways or to declare any road a state highway, and to pass all laws necessary or proper to construct * * * the same, and to extend aid for the construction and maintenance in whole or in part of any county highway."

[5] Whether, in view of the fact that, prior to the adoption of that section into the Constitution, the counties, which are mere governmental agencies of the state, vested with a variety of powers which the state itself may assume or resume and directly exercise, were given, by the Legislature, full and plenary power over the matter of constructing and maintaining highways within their respective limits, the Legislature has, by said section, been given power which it had not theretofore possessed, is a question wholly foreign to the present discussion. It is enough, for present purposes, to know that thus the state has expressly taken to itself the right to establish and maintain a system of state highways, and to give aid in the construction of county highways, and that, in pursuance of said section, the Legislature of 1907, and by a subsequent amendatory act (Stats. 1911, p. 823 et seq.), has established the machinery whereby the terms of the constitutional provision referred to should be, and is being, carried out. By section 9 of said act it is provided:

"The department of engineering shall take full possession and control of all roads which have been declared state highways, * * * and all other state highways which may hereafter be constructed and all public work being done or now completed by the department of highways. All expenditures by the state for highway purposes except as otherwise hereafter provided by law shall be under the full charge of the department of engineering. * * *

"It shall have power to alter or change the route of a road and shall do all things necessary, and obtain all tools and implements required to properly care for and manage the roads under the charge of the department. * * *

"Whenever under any statutes of this state the performance of any duty or obligation is imposed upon the department of highways, the same shall be assumed by and the performance of the same shall devolve upon the department of engineering."

Counsel for the respondent argue that, under the foregoing provisions of the act creating the department of engineering, the officers appointed to execute the duties thereof, being responsible and legally liable for the negligent performance of their duties as such officers, are also likewise liable for any damage resulting from any negligence characterizing the performance by the contractors of contracts for highway construction inaugurated and prosecuted under said act, where injury or damage to person or property has directly followed from such negligence. In other words, as we understand the contention of the respondent, it is that the provisions of the act in question, ex proprio vigore, make the advisory board, consisting of the members of the highway commission, and the state engineer, under whose general direction and superintendence all state highway construction must be carried on, responsible and liable for any damage which directly results from negligence occurring in the actual execution by the contractor of a contract for the construction of a state highway.

There must always be existent in all public, as well as private, transactions, such as that involved here, the power to compel compliance with the terms of contracts made with reference thereto. If there existed no such power, then, obviously, contractors would be at liberty to, and could, change the terms of their contracts according to their own free will and caprices, to the great detriment of the principal or the other contracting party. The man who builds a house upon his land always has the right, whether expressly reserved or not, to see that the contractor performs the contract of construction according to the adopted plans and specifications, and to compel the performance of the contract as the contractor has agreed to do the work. And all that the law establishing the department of engineering, and vesting in it the power to establish a system of state highways, attempts or pretends to do in that regard is to clothe the officers of that department with the power to let contracts for highway construction and to supervise the work of construction of the highways for the purpose only of seeing that the work is done, in all particulars, agreeably to the terms of the contract and the plans and specifications. The act really does no more than directly and expressly authorize the state, through its duly appointed and constituted officers, to exercise the same power with respect to the construction and maintenance of public highways as has always been vested in and exercised by counties through their duly constituted authorities. The power thus conferred upon the state is, in a general sense, the same as that vested in municipalities by the general street improvement act (Stats. 1911, p. 733), under the provisions of which the improvement of streets in cities and towns may be coerced at the expense of property owners according to plans and specifications duly prepared for and adopted by the local legislative body and the work carried on under the direction of the superintendent of streets, who is also empowered by section 18 of said act, in his official capacity, to make written contracts for such work and to receive bonds for the faithful performance thereof. The street superintendent, under the law, has a general supervisory control over all such contracts for the purpose only of seeing that the work is performed in conformity with the plans and specifications, in accordance with which the contractor has agreed and bound himself to do the work. Further than that, the superintendent has absolutely nothing to do with the contract. He has no voice or choice as to the particular means which the contractor may adopt for performing the contract, and neither he, nor the municipality, can legally be held, merely by reason of the powers and duties they are authorized to exercise and required to perform under the provisions of the street law, responsible or liable for the consequences of any negligent acts, resulting in damage to others, committed by the contractor in the course of the performance of the contract. So it is true as to the case at bar. The law gives to the members of the highway commission and the state engineer only such power over, and control of, contracts which the state is authorized to make for state highway construction as is absolutely necessary to enable them to discharge the duty with which they, as such officers, are charged, to wit, to make such contracts on behalf of the state and to compel the contractors for such work of construction to perform their contracts in accordance with their terms and the plans and specifications in conformity to which they have agreed to do the work of construction. This states the limit of their connection and concern with such contracts, and it therefore results that the law itself cannot justly be so construed as to justify the confirmation of the contention of the respondent that by the very terms of the law themselves the members of the advisory board and the engineer may be compelled to respond in damages for injuries which may follow from the negligent execution of such contracts by the contractors.

So much for the law prescribing and fixing the duties and responsibilities of the state highway commission and the state engineer with respect to state highway construction.

They were authorized to make alterations in, deviations or omissions from, or additions to, the contract. But they had no right of control as to the mode of doing the work contracted for; that is, neither the board nor the engineer had any say or discretion, under the contract, as to the particular manner in which, or the means by which, the contractor should carry on and complete the work. Neither had they any control over the employees engaged in assisting the contractor, nor could they authoritatively interfere in the matter of determining who should be employed by the contractor to aid him in consummating the contract. The highway, upon the making of the contract, was to be and was turned over entirely to the contractor, and it allowed to proceed in its own way to accomplish the desired result. Neither the state nor its agents, charged with the duty of letting the contract, were authorized to interfere in the matter of maintaining warning signs and barriers interdicting or cautioning the public against any attempted use of the highway while it was in the course of construction, or to say or determine at what point on the highway such warning signs should be maintained. They were wholly without authority to interfere with the contractor's determination of where, on the highway, it would be the more convenient for the purposes of the work to place and maintain the materials necessary to be used in the work of construction. They, indeed, had absolutely nothing to do with the contract, or the means employed by the contractor for the accomplishment of the work he had agreed to perform, except, as before stated, to compel the contractor, as the superintendent of streets may do in the case of street improvements, or the owner in the case of the erection of a house on his land by a contractor may do, to do the work in all respects according to the terms of the contract; that is to say, to use the specified materials and to make the road that the contract called for.

If the foregoing considerations do not plainly show that the corporation defendant was an independent contractor, we are at a loss to know what would. "An independent contractor," says the Supreme Court, in Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 99, 78 Pac. 337, 339, "is one who, in rendering services, exercises an independent employment or occupation, and represents his employer only as to the results of his work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished. * * * The chief consideration which determines one to be an independent contractor is the fact that the employer has no right of control as to the mode of doing the work contracted for." 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 187. The fact that the work is to be done under the supervision of an architect, or that the employer has the right to make alterations, deviations, additions, and omissions from the contract, does not change the relation from that of an independent contractor to that of a mere servant. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 187; Frassi v. McDonald, 122 Cal. 402 [55 Pac. 139, 772]. We cite the following cases as in support of the foregoing description of an independent contractor, and as confirming our conclusion that the facts of the transaction involved herein bring the defendant corporation clearly within the category of independent contractors: Bennett v. Truebody, 86 Cal. 509, 6 Pac. 329, 59 Am. Rep. 117; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017; Louthan v. Hewes, 138 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 1065; Johnson v. Helbing, 6 Cal. App. 424, 92 Pac. 360.

There is no force in the point sought to be extracted from the proposition that the defendants Darlington, Stern, Blaney, and Fletcher are sued as individuals, and that the verdict is against them as such, and not as state officers. Conceding that they were sued individually, and not as state officers, and that therefore the verdict affects them only as individuals, yet it is obvious that that fact would not make the corporation any the less an independent contractor, solely responsible for any ill consequences resulting to third parties from any negligence of which it might be guilty in performing its obligations under the contract.

For the various reasons herein set forth, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

WHITNEY v. NORTHWESTERN PAC. R. CO. (Civ. 2596; S. F. 8346.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 12, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, Jan. 4, 1919. On Application for Hearing by Supreme Court in Bank, Feb. 10, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 933(1)—REVIEW—MEMORANDUM NOT PART OF THE RECORD.

An alleged memorandum, given to the clerk of the trial court and stating a ground for order granting defendant new trial, is not a part of the record on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 854(1)—REVIEW—ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL—MEASUREMENT BY TERMS.

Order of trial court entered upon its minutes is only evidence of action of court in granting new trial, and such order is to be measured by its terms, and not by reasons which court may give for it.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 533(1)—REVIEW—PERSONAL LETTER FROM JUDGE AS PART OF RECORD.

Personal letter from trial judge to plaintiff's attorney, written subsequently to order granting defendant's motion for new trial, and stating single ground of contributory negligence was considered in making ruling, constitutes no part of record on appeal.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 933(4)—PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING COURT BELOW—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

If any grounds specified in defendant's notice of motion for new trial are sufficient to sustain trial court's order, appellate court is compelled to assume, in favor of order appealed from, that motion was granted upon such ground.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 979(2)—NEW TRIAL 71—CONFLICTING TESTIMONY—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where there was much conflict in the testimony, which was voluminous, order granting defendant new trial was wholly within discretion of trial court, and cannot be disturbed, in absence of abuse of discretion.

6. RAILROADS 350(13)—INJURY AT CROSSING—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action against railroad for death of plaintiff's decedent, struck by freight train on highway crossing, question of decedent's contributory negligence held for jury.

On Petition for Rehearing.

7. RAILROADS 335(5)—INJURIES AT CROSSING—FAILURE TO STOP, LOOK, AND LISTEN—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

If decedent, who drove his automobile along a highway crossing a railroad track, could not have seen or heard a freight train from any point where he might have stopped in safety, after he started up hill toward the crossing, his failure to stop, look, and listen was not the proximate cause of his death.

8. RAILROADS 346(5)—INJURIES AT CROSSING—PRESUMPTION OF DUE CARE.

There is a presumption that decedent, who drove an automobile along a highway to a railroad crossing, where he was struck by a train and killed, acted with proper regard to his own safety.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR 996—REVIEW—PROVINCE OF JURY—DEDUCTIONS FROM EVIDENCE.

It is province of jury, not of appellate court on appeal, from order granting defendant new trial, to make deductions from evidence in order to arrive at ultimate facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

Action by Valerie Sinclair Whitney, administratrix of the estate of Oliver Willard Sinclair, deceased, substituted in the place of W. B. Cook, administrator, etc., against the Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company. There was judgment for plaintiff, and from an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Pierce H. Ryan, of Eureka, for appellant.
Stanley Moore and F. A. Cutler, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order granting a new trial. The action is one for damages, and is brought by the administrator of the estate of O. W. Sinclair, deceased, for the death of Sinclair in an accident in which an automobile which was being driven by the deceased was struck by a train of respondent at a public road crossing in Humboldt county. Judgment was rendered on a verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff for $25,000. The defendant regularly made a motion for a new trial on practically all the grounds authorized by statute, including that of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict.

[1, 2] The trial court disposed of this motion by making a general order granting the same. The appellant urges that this order should be considered as made upon the sole ground that the evidence showed deceased guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law which would prevent a recovery; and in support of this claim, it is alleged in appellant's brief that at the time the order was made a memorandum was given to the clerk stating such ground for the order. No such memorandum is a part of the record, and therefore cannot be considered by this court. It has, however, been repeatedly held that any limitation of such a general order, to be effectual, must be specified in the order. The order of the court entered upon its minutes is the only evidence of the action of the court in granting the new trial, and such order is to be measured by its terms, and not by the reasons which the court may give for it. Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, 141 Cal. 619, 75 Pac. 332; Newman v. Overland Pac. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 73, 64 Pac. 110; Weisser v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 Pac. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636.

[3] Appellant also sets out in his brief a personal letter from the trial judge to appellant's attorney, written subsequent to the order, stating that only one ground was considered in making the ruling complained of, namely, that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. This is attempted to be used as a limitation of the general order. This letter constitutes no part of the record on appeal. Hanna v. De Garmo, 140 Cal. 172, 73 Pac. 830. An exactly similar question has been decided in the case of Weisser v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co., supra.

[4] If any of the grounds specified in the notice of motion for a new trial are sufficient to sustain the order, we think this court is compelled to assume, in favor of the order appealed from, that the motion was granted upon that ground. Ben Lomond Wine Co. v. Sladky, supra.

[5] Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict was one of the grounds specified in such notice of motion. There is a voluminous record in the case, and an examination of it discloses much conflict in the testimony. Under these circumstances, the order granting a new trial was wholly within the discretion of the trial court. The record affords no basis for a claim that there was any abuse of discretion, and the ruling of the trial court cannot be disturbed. Newman v. Overland Pac. Ry. Co., supra.

[6] While it is unnecessary, for the purposes of this appeal, to consider any of the other points made in support of the order, the question as to whether deceased was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, thereby barring a recovery against defendant, has been carefully briefed by counsel for both appellant and respondent, and its determination may be necessary for the purposes of a new trial.

From the evidence it appears that the deceased was driving his automobile from his home in Eureka to Dyerville. The top of the machine was up. At about 5 o'clock in the afternoon he crossed Eel river on a pontoon bridge, and proceeded thence along a winding road up a steep grade, traveling slowly, to the top of the river bank, along which was the railroad track, across which the highway ran. While crossing the railroad track, the automobile was struck by defendant's freight train, and deceased sustained injuries from which he died. It is conceded that the testimony shows that the view of the railroad track was obstructed by trees and weeds, and that a steel bridge was being erected across the river, and the noises incident to its construction would make it difficult for a traveler to hear an approaching train. The testimony is to the effect that the deceased did not stop his automobile from the time he started up the hill until he was struck by the train. The testimony is conflicting as to when the train started to blow a warning whistle. The defendant, however, contends that it was the duty of the deceased to stop his automobile and look and listen for an approaching train before crossing a steam railroad track, where the view of the track was obstructed, and that, failing to do so, he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

The plaintiff contends that the peculiar facts of this case place it outside of this rule, for the reason that there was no place of safety in which the defendant could stop after he had reached a point where, by stopping and looking, he might have seen the train. There is some testimony to the effect that, until the deceased had passed the last obstruction, he could not have seen the train, and that, when the last obstruction was passed, deceased was so close to the track that, had he stopped his car, he would have been struck by the overhang of the engine. Even according to defendant's contention, deceased had but 1.9 feet clearance after passing the last obstruction, within which to stop. Clearly, then, deceased could not have stopped his automobile in a place of safety, where he could have seen the train, and at least some of the evidence is to the effect that he could not have heard the train if he had stopped, on account of the noise of the work of constructing the bridge. Under the circumstances, was it the duty of deceased to have stopped his machine before passing the obstructions, and to have proceeded ahead on foot, if necessary, in order to ascertain if there was any danger before crossing the track?

We think the case of Murray v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co. (Sup.) 169 Pac. 675, relied upon by defendant, does not lay down the rule of law as broadly as contended for by defendant. In that case the Supreme Court takes particular care to point out that it is not the rule of law in this state that a driver of a motor vehicle, approaching a steam railroad crossing, is negligent if, his vision being obstructed, he does not stop his vehicle, leave it, and go forward for the purpose of observation. The Supreme Court, in adopting the decision of the Court of Appeal, points out that the discussion therein is addressed to the motion for a nonsuit under the particular facts of that case. As said in that case, it is only when but one conclusion can reasonably be reached from the evidence on the question of contributory negligence that the question is one of law for the court, and that, even where there is no conflict in the evidence, contributory negligence is a mixed question of law and fact for the jury, if different conclusions upon the matter can rationally be drawn from the evidence. Fernandes v. Sacramento, etc., R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 45; McKeever v. Market St. R. R. Co., 59 Cal. 294; Chidester v. Consolidated Ditch Co., 59 Cal. 197; House v. Meyer, 100 Cal. 592, 35 Pac. 308.

In the case at bar it would seem that the question of negligence was one for the jury. To reach a conclusion on this question involves several deductive processes. First, it seems the jury would have to decide from the evidence whether or not deceased knew of the location of the crossing, and that he was approaching it, for, until they had decided that matter, they could not decide whether or not, under all the circumstances, deceased was negligent in not stopping to look and listen. As said by the court in the case of Murray v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co., supra, there is no absolute duty on a driver to stop before crossing a railroad track. Negligence is measured by the conduct of a reasonably prudent man, and cannot be determined until all the facts surrounding the incident are determined. All of the decisions cited by respondent, which set out the duty of plaintiff to stop and look and listen upon approaching a crossing, assume that the location of the crossing was known to the plaintiff, and that by stopping, looking and listening before reaching the track, the approach of the train could be discovered. These are all disputed facts in the case at bar, upon which the evidence is conflicting.

We think the question of the contributory negligence of the deceased in this case is a question for the jury, under proper instructions from the court.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

Pierce H. Ryan and C. A. Tuttle, both of Eureka, for appellant.

F. A. Cutler, Stanley Moore, and Gillett & Cutler, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. A petition for rehearing having been filed in this case, this supplemental opinion is filed in reply thereto.

[7] In our review of the evidence in this case, in the opinion filed herein, it will be observed that we stated:

"In the case at bar it would seem that the question of negligence was one for the jury. To reach a conclusion on this question involves several deductive processes. First, it seems, the jury would have to decide from the evidence whether or not deceased knew of the location of the crossing and that he was approaching it, for until they had decided that matter, they could not decide whether or not, under all the circumstances, deceased was negligent in not stopping to look and listen."

It is not a question of conflict—it is a question of drawing an inference from testimony. As indicated in the above-quoted portion of the opinion, there were other circumstances also from which the jury would have to draw further inferences. For under our view of the law it was not only necessary for the jury to draw an inference from the testimony upon the subject of deceased's knowledge of the location of the track, but it was also necessary for them to decide from the testimony before them (which was conflicting on these points) whether, if the deceased had stopped and looked and listened, it would have been possible for him to have discovered the train approaching, in view of the obstructions and of the noises incident to the construction of the new bridge. For it seems to us that if he could not have seen or heard the train from any point where he might have stopped in safety, after he started up the hill, then his failure to so stop and look and listen was not the proximate cause of his death.

[8] From the nature of the case it was impossible to have any direct evidence upon the question of whether or not the exact location of this railroad track was known to the deceased. The evidence relied upon by the defendant, and strongly urged in his petition for rehearing, is to the effect that deceased had been over the road before. Some of it does not even necessarily warrant that conclusion, for it is that deceased was at a hospital in Scotia on several occasions—but there is no evidence that he passed over this road to get there, or that he came to Scotia from Eureka upon the occasions in question. It was our opinion, and it is now our opinion, that the conclusions to be drawn from this evidence should be drawn by the jury, in view of the presumption of the law that the defendant acted with proper regard to his own safety. The jury would have to believe from the evidence offered to the effect that the deceased had on former occasions passed over this road—that at the time of the accident he knew the location of the track. Certainly defendant will not argue that there is any legal duty upon the deceased to remember the location of a railroad upon a road over which he may have previously traveled. There being no conclusive presumption of this fact, the jury should be permitted to draw its own inference from the testimony, and that inference would naturally depend upon what the evidence showed as to the number of occasions upon which deceased had traveled the road and at how long a time prior to the accident.

And it is further our opinion that, even if it were conceded that the evidence is direct and positive and unconflicting upon the question of the deceased's knowledge of the location of the track, nevertheless, in view of the fact that the evidence is plainly conflicting as to whether deceased could have heard the approach of the train if he had stopped, after passing the last obstruction to his view, on account of the noise of riveting, etc., on the new bridge, and in view of the fact that the evidence is conflicting as to whether it was possible for the deceased to have stopped in a place of safety after reaching a point where the last obstruction to his view had been passed, the question was one of fact for the jury. In other words, it is our view that, in order to reach a conclusion upon the question of contributory negligence in this case, it is necessary first for a conclusion to be reached by the jury as to whether defendant could have stopped in a safe place where he could have seen the train, after passing the obstructions to his view, whether he could have heard the train if he had stopped, and whether he was aware at the time of the location of the railroad track. All of these matters would have bearing either upon the questions of reasonable care or proximate cause.

[9] This court has carefully read the 1,206 pages of transcript of testimony in this case, and we think, as said before, that it is the province of the jury to make deductions from evidence in order to arrive at ultimate facts. In the case of Murray v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co. (Sup.) 169 Pac. 675, it is said that, even where there is no conflict in the evidence, contributory negligence is a mixed question of law and fact for the jury, if different conclusions upon the matter can rationally be drawn from the evidence (citing Fernandes v. Sacramento, etc., R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 45; McKeever v. Market St. R. R. Co., 59 Cal. 294; Chidester v. Consolidated Ditch Co., 59 Cal. 197; House v. Meyer, 100 Cal. 592, 35 Pac. 308). This case was cited by the defendant in its brief. We have carefully read, not only every authority cited by appellants and respondents, but we have also read the authorities referred to in such cited cases. The language of some of these cases at times seems to lay a more positive obligation upon plaintiff, but it is our opinion that a careful examination of such cases indicates that they are expressly confined to the peculiar facts of the case under discussion, and that, upon the whole, there is no set formula by which the matter can be measured in all cases. It is true that in some cases the evidence is such that it becomes plainly apparent that it was the imperative duty of the injured person to stop, look, and listen under all the circumstances, for by so doing he could have avoided the accident. In the present case we think that may or may not have been the case, but it is not a question about which there could be but one opinion and the matter should be left to the jury.

The defendant points to the evidence of the companion of deceased, who was in the automobile at the time of the accident, to the effect that deceased had said: "Well, I know the way to Scotia." Also respondent urges that the testimony shows that the deceased was an old resident of Humboldt county, that he had been at a hospital in Scotia on several occasions, that the uncle of deceased formerly was the superintendent of a mill near the scene of the accident, and that deceased visited him in former years. These matters are susceptible of the deduction which respondent draws from them to the effect that the location of the track was known to deceased, and yet they are nothing more than premises upon which counsel for respondent bases his conclusion.

The respondent also urges that from the photographic exhibits it appears that a railroad crossing sign confronted deceased about 100 feet away from the track. The evidence upon the question of whether or not this sign was visible to one in the position of the deceased as he approached the scene of the accident was conflicting.

The facts of this case, we think, do not bring it within the rule of Larrabee v. Western Pac. Ry. Co., 173 Cal. 743, 161 Pac. 750. The facts in that case, as stated by the court, were:

"That the man was driving in a slow-moving wagon, in broad daylight, was approaching a crossing with which he was perfectly familiar, and approaching it under circumstances where he could with perfect safety have stopped his progress and looked back to see whether or not the train was approaching him from behind. His view of that train was unobstructed for at least 1,500 feet."

The question of negligence was submitted to the jury under an instruction that the speed of the train did not relieve the deceased from the duty of stopping, looking, and listening, and if he failed so to do, and such failure contributed directly and proximately to the accident then, regardless of said speed, the verdict must be for the defendant. The appellate court reversed the judgment for the plaintiff, because it found that the verdict was against law, having ignored completely the above-mentioned instruction. Under that instruction, the question of proximate cause was the ultimate question before the jury.

If, therefore, under the evidence in the case at bar, the jury should find that the deceased knew the location of the track, and did not stop to look or listen, yet it seems to us that, if they also found that the deceased could not have heard or seen the train if he had stopped, they would be forced to the conclusion that his failure to stop to look and listen was not the proximate cause of the accident. And this, to our minds, is an additional reason why, in the present case, the question of contributory negligence is one for the jury under proper instructions.

In the case of Green v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 138 Cal. 1, 70 Pac. 926, also cited by defendant, it appears conclusively that if the plaintiffs had stopped to look and listen they could have seen the train and therefore the question of the proximate cause of the injury was beyond dispute.

In the case of Koch v. Southern Cal. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 84 Pac. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795, the court said that according to the map or plat of the locality found in the record, as well as according to the undisputed evidence of the witnesses, the buildings in the vicinity of the accident were so disposed that, if the plaintiff had been on the alert and driving with reasonable caution, he might have caught sight of the approaching train in ample time to have avoided the accident. This is one of the matters which, in our opinion, the jury should decide in the case at bar. It is a necessary step toward the conclusion contended for by defendant that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, and the evidence upon it is conflicting.

In the case of Griffin v. San Pedro Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 Pac. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842, it is stated in the opinion "that the plaintiff * * * Griffin unquestionably could have seen the train if he had stopped at a point only a few feet from that at which he did pause." In that case the court recognized the doctrine announced in the opinion in the case of Eaton v. Southern Pacific Co., 22 Cal. App. 461, 134 Pac. 801, where it was held:

"That plaintiffs were bound to stop upon coming out from between the box cars only in case they had time and space within which to do so. Negligence cannot be imputed to them by reason of their failure to do an impossible act."

The court in the case of Griffin v. San Pedro, supra, also recognized the doctrine announced in Vance v. Santa Fé, 9 Cal. App. 20, 98 Pac. 41, wherein the court, while asserting the duty of a traveler to look and listen when near a railroad crossing held that the obligation to look is only enjoined when, by its exercise, the approaching train could have been discovered. And while recognizing the doctrine in these two last-cited cases, the court, in the said case of Griffin v. San Pedro Co., expressly differentiated that case by the fact that in it the plaintiff unquestionably could have seen the train if he had stopped at the proper place.

We see no reason to change our views as announced in the former opinion in this case, and therefore the petition for a rehearing is denied.

2. INSURANCE ⇨151(2) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—WARRANTIES IN APPLICATION—FAILURE OF INSURED TO SIGN.

Fact that application for policy of accident insurance was not signed by insured, it being a paper attached to the policy, therefore a part of the contract under it, held immaterial on matter of insurer's nonliability because statements in application, expressly declared to be warranties, were not true.

3. INSURANCE ⇨136(2) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—FALSE STATEMENTS IN APPLICATION—POSSESSION OF POLICY BY INSURED.

Possession of accident insurance policy by insured's broker, who had procured it at request of insured, was as effectual as possession by insured himself to render him bound by false statements contained in application attached.

4. INSURANCE ⇨136(5) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—ACCEPTANCE AND RETENTION OF POLICY—BINDING FORCE OF TERMS.

By accepting and retaining accident policy without objection, insured became bound by its terms, and beneficiary claiming thereunder cannot be heard to state insured did not read policy or any of its provisions.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Flossie Kahn against the Royal Indemnity Company. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

James Alva Watt, Rolla B. Watt and Watt, Miller, Thornton & Watt, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wise & O'Connor, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff brought this action as beneficiary under a policy of accident insurance issued by the defendant company to one Frank G. Kahn, her husband, to recover $7,500, the principal sum named therein.

The insured died suddenly after having partaken of a hearty meal. A post mortem examination was held, and the coroner's jury found that death was caused by acute dilation of the heart, following chronic myocarditis, an affliction of the muscles of the heart, and a disease of the liver. It was the claim of the defendant at the trial that death was caused by heart failure, due to heavy and excessive eating. Plaintiff, on the other hand, contended that death was the result of ptomaine poisoning. The finding upon the cause of death was in favor of the plaintiff's theory; and it is conceded by the attorney for defendant and appellant that this finding is conclusive against him. The case was tried by a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and from the judgment thereon defendant appeals.

As grounds for reversal, appellant claims that the trial court erred in overruling the demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint, and further erred in refusing to instruct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant.

The questions involved upon the demurrer are: (1) Is ptomaine poisoning a bodily injury? (2) Is death which is caused thereby death by external and accidental means, as those terms are used in the policy?

It is defendant's claim that ptomaine poisoning is not a bodily injury in any sense that will permit a recovery under the policy, but rather that it is a disease, the same as any other caused by bacteria or germ infection, such as typhoid or scarlet fever; and that to include such cases within an accident policy is virtually to make a life insurance policy out of one merely intended to have a limited application. Interesting as is this subject, we do not consider a discussion of it necessary, for the reason that we are of the opinion that the second point relied upon for reversal, namely, that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, presents a legal barrier against any recovery upon the policy, irrespective of the cause of death.

The question presented upon this motion involves the breaches of certain warranties contained in the policy. The facts which appellant claims constitute said breaches are admitted. The policy here sued upon was issued upon a written application made on behalf of the insured, which application is attached and made a part of the policy, and from which it appears that the insured stated at the time of his application for insurance, among other things, that he had no accident, health, or benefit insurance, nor any application for such, pending elsewhere, except a policy for $5,000 about to expire, and which was to be replaced by the policy here involved. The application further recites that the insured had not obtained medical or surgical advice regarding any illness or injury during the past seven years preceding his application, except medical attention for a sprained back. These statements were admittedly untrue, the insured having, at the time of the application, another policy of accident insurance, and he had undergone, within the time specified, an operation for a mastoid. The policy contains a warranty clause as follows:

"I hereby warrant that the above statements are in every respect complete and true, and I apply for a maximum disability insurance policy, which shall be based upon such statements, and which policy I agree to accept subject to all its terms and conditions."

The policy further provides that it is issued in consideration of the premium, and of the statements contained in the application for the policy.

[1] Where, as here, there is a distinct agreement that an application for insurance is a part of the contract, and the statements in the application are expressly declared to be warranties, they are to be treated as such, and not merely as representations, and must be strictly true or the policy will not take effect.

[2] Respondent concedes this to be true, but contends that inasmuch as the application in question was not signed by the insured, and that the policy never came into his personal possession, the statements contained therein were mere representations, and not warranties, and, further, that the application was not intended by the company to constitute a warranty unless signed by the insured.

It is admitted by the respondent that the circumstances under which the application was received are somewhat vague and uncertain, but it is true, as claimed, that it was never signed by the deceased. The policy further provides, however, that:

"This policy with a copy of the application therefor signed by the insured, and such other papers as may be attached to or endorsed hereon, shall constitute the entire contract between the company and the insured. * * *

As urged by the appellant, the policy gives no support, therefore, to the contention of counsel for respondent, for whether the application was signed by the insured or not, it is a paper attached to the policy, and therefore constitutes a part of the contract between the company and the insured, under the provisions of which the insured agreed to accept the policy subject to all the terms and conditions contained in the application. And the fact that it was not signed is immaterial. Madsen v. Maryland, 168 Cal. 204, 142 Pac. 51; Solomon v. Federal, 167 Pac. 859.

[3] As to the claim that the policy was never delivered to the insured, and that because of that fact plaintiff should not be bound by the statements contained in the application attached thereto, it is sufficient to say that the policy was delivered to one Siegel, who had procured the policy at the instance and request, and as the broker, of deceased. The possession of the policy by his broker was as effectual as possession by the insured.

[4] Nor is there any merit in the further claim that the provisions of the policy cannot be enforced against plaintiff for the reason that the insured did not read it and was unfamiliar with its provisions. By accepting and retaining the policy without objection, the insured was bound by its terms; and plaintiff claiming thereunder cannot be heard to state that the insured did not read the policy or any of its provisions. Madsen v. Maryland, supra. And the same may be said with respect to the claim that, even assuming the involved statements to be warranties, their effect was waived by the general agent of the appellant. There is no evidence in the record warranting this contention.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

McLAREN v. HARDS et al. (Civ. 2614.)

APPEAL AND ERROR — 757(1) — REVIEW — RECORD.

Where the record on appeal is prepared under the alternative method as to typewritten transcripts, appellant should, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, print in his brief or in a supplement thereto such portions of the record as it is desired to call to the attention of the appellate court, and, if the appellant fails to print sufficient to illustrate the points made, the respondent need not supplement the record, but may rely on it as printed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Action by A. R. McLaren against J. Fred Hards and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph W. Mowell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles L. Evans, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant informs us in his brief that this was a creditor's suit under sections 3439,

The reporter's transcript covers 133 typewritten pages. The only portion thereof printed in the brief is the following:

"Hards testified on direct examination as follows: Q. What was the consideration of the transfer (to Mrs. Slatter)? A. There was none. Q. What was the property conveyed from Mrs. Slatter to Mrs. Beatrice E. Hards for? What was the consideration for that? A. There was no consideration. Q. Well now, by no consideration, do you mean what? A. No monetary consideration. (Rep. Tr., p. 66, l. 8.)

"Mrs. Hards, on cross-examination, testified as follows: Q. Did Mrs. Slatter pay you or Mr. Hards anything for that property? A. No, sir. Q. Did you pay her anything for the deed to the San Pedro lot? A. No, sir. (Rep. Tr., p. 99, l. 14.)"

It is apparent that there is nothing here which is necessarily inconsistent with a finding in favor of the defendants upon the question of a valuable consideration, if such an issue was framed and such finding made.

The law with respect to appeals under this method expressly requires that—

"In filing briefs on said appeal the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

This court and the Supreme Court have frequently pointed out that they cannot be expected to and will not search through typewritten transcripts for matter which parties have neglected to print in their briefs, as this section requires them to do. See California Savings Bank v. Canne, 34 Cal. App. 768, 770, 169 Pac. 395, 396, and cases there cited. "The law requires * * * that enough must be printed to illustrate the points made and to enable the court to determine those points." Id. The appellant here has wholly failed to comply with that requirement of the law.

It seems that the Legislature in providing for the so-called "alternative method" of appeal contemplated that the parties should print in their briefs (or in a supplement thereto) so much of the record as under the old method would have been embodied in a bill of exceptions, one difference being that under the new method respondent's amendments to such "bill of exceptions" are not presented until he files his brief. It follows from this that, if appellant fails to present a record which would justify a reversal of the judgment or order appealed from, respondent is not called upon to supplement it by additions thereto, but may stand upon the record so presented, which is apparently what respondent in this case has elected to do.

For this court to depart from its rule of conduct, as indicated in the case above referred to and in many others which might be cited, would be in effect to repeal the code provision above quoted.

There is no record here presented in the manner prescribed by law upon which this court can consider the merits of this appeal.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. CONTRACTS $\S$ 54(3)—COMPROMISE—CONSIDERATION.

An agreement, whereby defendant, president and director of a corporation, promised to be primarily liable for the payment of $6,000 to settle a claim of $20,000 against corporation, held based upon a sufficient consideration.

2. CONTRACTS $\S$ 68—COMPROMISE OF DOUBTFUL CLAIM.

The compromise of even a doubtful right is a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay money.

3. CONTRACTS $\S$ 53 — CONSIDERATION — AMOUNT.

Where there is a valid consideration, the law will not attempt to measure the amount thereof.

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF $\S$ 33(3)—PROMISE TO ANSWER FOR OBLIGATION OF ANOTHER.

An agreement, whereby defendant, president and director of a fire insurance company, promised to be primarily liable for the payment of $6,000 to settle a claim of $20,000 against company, was not required to be in writing, since it came within Civ. Code, § 2794, subd. 3, making promise original in case of consideration beneficial to promisor.

5. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF $\S$ 158(4)—EVIDENCE OF WRITING—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to warrant finding that defendant, president and director of a fire insurance company, agreed "in writing" to pay plaintiff a certain sum in compromise of a claim against the company.

6. CONTRACTS — 170(1)—CONSTRUCTION.

The conduct of the parties is a circumstance of moment, where the written contract is of doubtful meaning.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Leon H. Fairchild against George W. Cartwright. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Inman and W. T. Phipps, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Charles B. Harris and L. M. Shelley, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of the county of Sacramento, sitting without a jury, in favor of plaintiff and respondent for the sum of $2,100, with interest from June 1, 1913, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, amounting to $502.25, and for costs in the sum of $42.

Appellant specifies as causes for said appeal that the evidence adduced at said trial does not justify the said findings of fact and conclusions of law in four particulars, namely:

First, that said alleged agreement to pay is in contravention of the statute of frauds;

Second, that said alleged agreement to pay is without consideration and void;

Third, that said alleged agreement to pay was canceled and rescinded by mutual consent of the parties thereto; and Fourth, that defendant's counterclaim should have been allowed in full.

A brief summary of the salient facts will suffice to show the nature of the controversy. It appears generally that an insurance corporation, known as the Pacific National Fire Insurance Company, was organized, having as an adjunct another corporation, called the Pacific States Holding Company. While the relation of these two companies does not very clearly appear from the record, it is reasonable to assume from the evidence that the purpose of the former corporation was the transaction of a general fire insurance business, while the function of the latter, as evidenced by its name, was the holding and handling of the corporate shares of the fire insurance company.

Preliminarily, we may say that plaintiff sustained certain relations to said Pacific States Holding Company, either as its agent or employé, but such relations are not clearly indicated in the record. He further appears from the evidence to have been a promoter, stock salesman, and broker of corporate securities, and at various times engaged in interesting investors in the purchase of such collateral. Indeed, his resourcefulness in such capacity is evidenced from the correspondence with the defendant, wherein he communicates the various "deals" he is on the verge of consummating and, possibly, might have succeeded in effecting but for the failure to receive from defendant the unpaid balance, sued upon and made the basis of this action. However, no claim is made for such remote and speculative profits.

We may add that defendant, during the years 1912 and 1913, was president and director of said Pacific National Fire Insurance Company, and it is admitted by appellant in his brief that the parent corporation and its holding company had some business relations. It also appears from the evidence that said defendant was a man well and favorably known in state and financial circles, and that he intended to lend his recognized ability and financial resources to quite an extent in the promotion, and we may easily infer, to the salvation of the insurance company's affairs, which were threatened with disaster. In the early part of defendant's administration of the affairs of the insurance company the prospects seemed roseate and alluring, and in his exuberant expectation of success appellant resolved to make the business of the company his life work. At this time he was apparently willing to become personally responsible for the payment of plaintiff's claim. Afterward, as the business declined, his attitude toward plaintiff's claim naturally changed.

There is sufficient evidence in the record to justify the conclusion that respondent had a contract with the holding company for the payment of a large sum of money, which the directors of the insurance company considered themselves obligated to pay; that it was agreed that this contract should be rescinded, and said directors would give respondent a written contract for the payment of some $7,000 and guaranteeing him the privilege of selling for many years the stock of the company on a percentage basis; that the said directors declined to carry out their agreement, and respondent insisted that his old agreement was still in force; that to compromise and settle this claim appellant promised to pay respondent the sum of $6,000, $3,000 down and the balance in 60 or 90 days, and that respondent accepted the agreement in satisfaction of all claims against the company or its directors.

There can be no doubt as to the sufficiency of the showing that appellant promised to be primarily responsible for the payment of said sum. Mr. Clarence E. Peters, an attorney at law, and apparently a disinterested witness, testified that he was present when the matter was discussed by the parties, and "Senator Cartwright said that he had been up in Humboldt county, soliciting stock subscriptions for the company, and that in exchange for stock subscriptions he had taken a number of promissory notes in payment of stock, but that these notes would not be paid until fall or about the 1st of November, and that some time in November, or early, or before the middle of November, the money would come in, the money owed him; he would then receive it, and he would pay Mr. Fairchild in November, which was about six or seven weeks subsequent to the time.

* * * He said that he had invested his entire private fortune, in the sum of about $80,000, in the company, that he was president of the company and desired to see it a success, and that he was giving it his entire attention and intended to make it his life work. * * * He said that he was under no legal obligation to the company to pay this debt, but he desired to see the company a success; therefore he had personally assumed the obligation to pay Mr. Fairchild, and desired to see it paid." It may be added that plaintiff testified that defendant promised unequivocally to pay the money.

[1, 2] As to the law of the case there would seem to be no obstacle to the enforcement of the contract. The appellant wanted to avoid trouble, lawsuits, and unenviable notoriety in reference to the company in which he had such an interest, and the consideration was therefore beneficial to him. Burr v. Cross, 3 Cal. App. 416, 86 Pac. 824. The compromise of even a doubtful right is a sufficient foundation for a promise to pay money. Gardner v. Watson, 170 Cal. 575, 150 Pac. 994.

[3] Where there is a valid consideration the law will not attempt to measure the amount thereof. Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 64 Pac. 560.

The credit of a corporation, especially one dealing in matters of such public concern as fire insurance, is exceedingly sensitive to criticism of its management, and is likely to be greatly affected by the exposition of the inner secrets of its creation, such as the agreement among the directors and promoters to collect and divide among themselves a large portion of the amount subscribed by the stockholders, and it may be that appellant had this in mind when he promised to pay $6,000 for an asserted claim of some $20,000. At any rate, there was sufficient consideration to support the promise.

[4] It is also true that such contract is not required to be in writing, as it comes within the terms of subdivision 3 of section 2794 of the Civil Code providing:

"A promise to answer for the obligation of another, in any of the following cases, is deemed an original obligation of the promisor and need not be in writing: * * * 3. Where the promise, being for an antecedent obligation of another, is made upon the consideration that the party receiving it cancels the antecedent obligation, accepting the new promise as a substitute therefor; * * * or upon a consideration beneficial to the promisor, whether moving from either party to the antecedent obligation, or from another person."

[5] However, respondent alleged in his complaint that the defendant "promised and agreed in writing to pay plaintiff the sum of $6,000." The finding of the court was, also, that he so agreed to pay the said amount, and that there was no such verbal agreement. It becomes important, therefore, to inquire as to the alleged written agreement. As to the fact itself we may first observe that there was no specific denial in the answer that a written promise was made by appellant to pay said sum. The only denial was that he made such promise "for a valuable or for any consideration." For a further defense, appellant alleged:

"That heretofore, to wit, on or about February 25, 1913, said defendant, without any consideration to him moving from plaintiff, promised and guaranteed that he, defendant, would pay to plaintiff the sum of $6,000 as the amount of an indebtedness which plaintiff then claimed had long since been due and owing to him from persons other than plaintiff, and of which defendant owed no part; and thereafter, to wit, on or about the — day of —, 1913, said defendant, in pursuance of said promise and attempted guaranty, paid to plaintiff the sum of $3,900, to be applied on account of said $6,000 indebtedness."

Plaintiff might well have relied upon the admission as to the contract being in writing, but the trial seems to have proceeded upon the theory that there was such an issue, and the correspondence of the parties and certain parol evidence in reference to the claim were admitted without objection. As to this, however, it may be added that, since appellant among his four specified grounds of the insufficiency of the evidence has not claimed or designated a failure to prove that a written promise was made by him, we would probably be justified in paying no further attention to said correspondence. Nevertheless, we have read carefully the letters, and while they might reasonably be construed as embodying a conditional promise to pay the money or to guarantee its payment, dependent upon collection from subscriptions to stock, or upon the ratification of the promise by the directors of the company, yet there are expressions therein clearly indicating the intention of appellant to be personally responsible for the payment of the claim; and, since it was so understood and acted upon by respondent, it is rather late to indulge in refinement as to the exact significance of certain somewhat indefinite phrases in the letters. At any rate, we think it not an unreasonable contention that thereby appellant promised to answer for the claim.

[6] We may add that the conduct of the parties—which is, of course, a circumstance of moment where the written contract is of doubtful meaning—was strongly corroborative of respondent's position. In this connection we may refer to the fact that in part payment of the debt appellant gave his personal check for $2,100 to respondent, upon the lower left-hand corner of which was written these words: "Compromise Agreement." Appellant also gave his personal check for $900 and his promissory note for a certain sum to Mr. Meredith in part payment of the claim. In this correspondence in reference to the cancellation of the supposed contract between the plaintiff and defendant, there seems to be also on the part of appellant a recognition of his personal obligation.

Upon a consideration of the whole record, we think it cannot be said that there is no substantial support for the finding against appellant upon this issue. The other findings, including the questions of rescission and counterclaim, are supported, and we think the judgment should be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

Contract whereby plaintiff advanced money to defendant, hotel proprietor, to be repaid from net profits of business, plaintiff to manage the hotel on a salary, with option to buy an interest within a year, any of the advancement not repaid to be applied on purchase price in case of exercise of option, with right, in case option was not exercised, to manage hotel another year on salary, does not limit the fund, from which repayment is to be made, to profits of first year.

2. CONTRACTS 266(1)—RESCISSION—RESTORATION OF BENEFITS.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Roy G. Mitchell and another against Louis T. Samuels. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lloyd S. Ackerman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank J. Murphy, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action for money had and received. The complaint consists of several alternative counts. In the first the facts constituting the cause of action are set out. The second and other counts are stated in the form of a suit for money had and received, and judgment is prayed for in the sum of $3,350, being the sum of $2,500 advanced at one time, and $850 at another, and for further minor sums laid out and expended. The amounts sued for were received by defendant under a contract the execution of which is admitted by the pleadings. The undisputed facts show that defendant was in the possession of the Hotel Minster, situated at the northeast corner of Mason and O'Farrell streets in San Francisco, under a lease for the term of five years from November 1, 1913, and was the owner of the hotel business conducted therein, together with the furniture thereof. Plaintiffs agreed to manage the hotel for the defendant for a salary and share of the profits, with an option to purchase a one-half interest therein for the sum of $7,000. The parties entered into a written contract covering their agreement which is somewhat lengthy, the substance of which, however, is as follows:

After reciting the lease that the defendant had in the premises, it provided that plaintiffs should advance to defendant all the money received by them from the sale of a certain piece of property owned by the plaintiff Lena Mitchell, said money to be applied by defendant in the payment, from the date of its receipt, of the rent and operating expenses of said hotel to the extent of the sum received. No interest was to be paid by defendant on the amount so advanced, but provision was made for the repayment of the principal as hereinafter recited. The agreement also provided that the plaintiffs were to have the control and management of the hotel, but were not to make any purchases of furniture or furnishings, or incur any obligations thereunder in excess of the existing charges without the consent of defendant. Plaintiffs agreed to use their best efforts and devote such of their time and attention as might be necessary for the proper discharge of their duties, and to conduct the said hotel in a first-class manner, and to accept as and for their joint compensation for the services so to be rendered by them the sum of $150 per month for a period of 12 months, unless they sooner exercised the privilege of the option of purchase. With reference to the payment of the money advanced by plaintiffs, the agreement provided that it should be made out of the net profits, if any, derived from the conduct and operation of the hotel each month until the full amount should have been paid. In the event that the gross income from the hotel for any month was insufficient to pay the operating expenses, including the salary of plaintiffs, provision was made by which the defendant was to make up the deficiency on his personal account.

Relative to the option of purchase it was agreed that plaintiffs should have the right at any time within 12 months from the date of the agreement to purchase an undivided one-half interest in the hotel and lease for the sum of $7,000; it being further provided in this behalf that upon plaintiffs' exercise of the option they should be credited with any sum unpaid to them on the money they had advanced through the sale of the land as above mentioned. The agreement further provided that, until plaintiffs elected to exercise the privilege of the option granted, the relation of employer and employé should exist between the parties, and not that of partnership.

Further provision was made against the transfer or assignment by defendant of any interest in the property during the life of the agreement without the consent of the plaintiffs. And, finally, the agreement provided that, in the event that plaintiffs failed to exercise the privilege of the option within the time specified, they should still have the privilege of retaining the control and management of the hotel for a period of one year from the date of the expiration of the option at the monthly salary of $150, together with 20 per cent. of the net profits, determined monthly, from the conduct and operation of the hotel.

After the execution of this agreement plaintiffs borrowed the sum of $2,500 on the real property referred to and paid the same to defendant. Later they sold the property for the sum of $3,400, out of which sum they paid defendant $850, making a total of $3,350 paid by them. Plaintiffs never exercised their option of purchase, but they managed the hotel from March 3, 1914, the date of their agreement, to April 17, 1915, regularly receiving their salary of $150 per month. The business proved to be unprofitable, and defendant, being desirous of ending his business relations with the plaintiffs, advised them by letter that he was losing money and did not wish to continue to do so; that he had an offer for the purchase of the hotel, and was willing to return to plaintiffs such sums of money as they had advanced, if they would agree to cancel their agreement with him. This the plaintiffs refused to do, whereupon defendant attempted to oust them. Plaintiffs then sought, but were refused, an injunction preventing their removal, whereupon they treated the contract as being rescinded, and brought this action to recover the sum of $3,350, the amount paid by them upon the contract as above recited.

Judgment was had against defendant for the amount sued for, and this appeal is from such judgment.

[1] As grounds for reversal appellant claims that neither under the contract nor pleadings is a right of action shown in favor of plaintiffs. This claim is based upon the construction which appellant placed upon the contract. It is his contention that the contract provides two distinct periods, and contains separate and distinct provisions for each of such periods; the first being one for a salary and a year's option to purchase a one-half interest in the hotel, and the other a period during which plaintiffs were to receive $150 per month salary and 20 per cent. of the net profits. Under this construction it is argued that the provisions relative to the first year were fully performed and ended when plaintiffs failed to exercise their option of purchase, and that, even conceding there was a breach by defendant of the covenants of the contract relative to the second period under which the contract was to continue, it afforded no ground for a rescission of the first year's severable provision, or for a recovery of the money paid for the privilege of purchase which plaintiffs failed to avail themselves of. Under this construction it is argued that plaintiffs' only remedy, if any they have, is an action for damages. As a further and distinct defense it is claimed that as the contract provides that the sums received by defendant should be used by him in the payment of the rent and operating expenses of the hotel, and were to be repaid only out of the net profits, and there were none, the express condition under which the money was to become payable never came into existence, and therefore no action lies for its recovery.

We are of the opinion that these defenses are based upon an improper construction of the terms of the contract. Though loosely drawn the agreement between the parties called for the performance of not one but several covenants, which were dependent upon each other, and supported by a single consideration. The sum paid by plaintiffs not only entitled them to the right of exercising the option of purchase, but it also conferred upon them additional privileges. Under the agreement they had the right to manage the hotel, and to receive a salary therefor, with the additional right of participation in the profits for the entire term, together with the privilege of having the sums so advanced by them repaid out of the net profits. The contract contains no express provision limiting the repayment of the sums advanced by plaintiffs to the net profits of the first year, nor is there any circumstance from which such an inference can be drawn.

On the contrary, the parties having determined of what the net profits should consist, provided without limitation that such profits should be applied to the satisfaction of the money advanced until it was repaid in full. These different covenants running as they do to the entire contract show that the parties had in contemplation the execution of one indivisible contract, and negative the theory of appellant that the contract was divisible. To the claim of defendant that he has a right to retain the money for the reason that it was used for the purpose for which it was given, and was not to be returned except out of the profits, it is sufficient to say that defendant by his acts prevented plaintiffs from the enjoyment of the full term of their contract during which they might have recouped themselves. The suggestion of counsel for the respondents in this behalf that the contract was repudiated by defendant during the Exposition year, when the hotel business was profitable, by reason of which fact plaintiffs could have been repaid, requires no discussion.

[2] Appellant's further contention that plaintiffs are not entitled to a rescission for the reason that there is no allegation, proof, or finding that they ever surrendered or offered to surrender the benefits they had received under the contract, is without merit. The only benefit received by plaintiffs was their salary. This they were entitled to in any event, and they were not required to return it (Richards v. Fraser, 122 Cal. 457, 55 Pac. 246).

The conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiffs had in all respects fully performed their contract and that defendant had abandoned and repudiated his, is fully supported by the evidence. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs were entitled to sue for money had and received and to recover the sums paid under the contract.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. GIBSON. (Cr. 740.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡759(5)—FLIGHT—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where there was evidence that defendant fled after commission of the crime of which he was accused, an instruction on the weight to be given such flight was proper, though defendant's evidence was that he did not flee because of the accusation, but left for other reasons.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡822(4)—FLIGHT—INSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

An instruction on defendant's flight after commission of the crime of which he was accused held not an instruction on the evidence, when considered as a whole.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡560, 782(12) — INSTRUCTIONS—DEGREE OF PROOF.

A cautionary instruction, which, in addition to telling the difficulty of defending against the charge, told the jury that before convicting they should be satisfied, not by the mere preponderance of the evidence, but by evidence entirely convincing, was properly refused, for the law only requires that the jury be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⚡199—JURY ⚡84—ELIGIBILITY—WOMEN—EX POST FACTO LAW.

The question of what citizens shall sit on juries is merely one of procedure, and a law qualifying women to serve, though it did not go into effect until after the crime was committed, is not ex post facto as to defendant.

Charles E. Gibson was convicted of felony, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Stetson, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Alameda county by which the defendant was convicted of a felony. The chief point made in the appeal is that the court erred in instructing the jury upon the subject of flight.

The appellant contends that the sole direct testimony upon which the conviction is based is that of the prosecuting witness, Thelma Lee, who is alleged to have been his victim. This testimony is sufficient to sustain the verdict, if believed by the jury to be true. It is admitted to be a fact that the defendant left the town in which the crime is alleged to have been committed on the evening of the day on which it was alleged to have been committed, and remained away for some months. His flight was explained by himself and his mother as not being prompted by consciousness of guilt, but rather because of an unfortunate previous experience, when he was falsely accused of grand larceny, and, notwithstanding his innocence, he was compelled to "lay in jail" for several weeks before being finally discharged.

[1, 2] Upon this record, and other facts not necessary to recite, the trial court gave certain instructions to the jury upon the subject of appellant's flight, and it is now contended that these instructions were erroneously given. In support of this contention, the appellant invokes the authority of the case of People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 67 Pac. 694, claiming that it was decided in that case that where a defendant, having fled after the commission of the crime, offers evidence explaining his flight, no instruction whatever upon the question of flight should be given to the jury. The language quoted by counsel in his brief simply characterized an instruction there given on this subject as an instruction upon the facts, and was intended rather to caution the court as to the necessity of being careful in stating evidence not to give an instruction upon the facts. The explanation of his flight, given by and on behalf of appellant at his trial, might have been true or false, and the question whether it was true or false was a question for the jury, and therefore the instruction upon the subject of flight was quite proper.

Counsel also attacks this instruction as erroneous, upon the ground that it was an instruction upon the evidence. The instruction was abstract in form. "You are instructed," said the court, "that the flight of a person immediately after the commission of a crime of which he knows he is accused is a circumstance to be weighed by the jury as tending in some degree to prove a consciousness of guilt, and is entitled to more or less weight according to the circumstances of the particular case." There was more in the instruction to the same effect, and some of the language was put in concrete form and referred to the immediate case before the court. But it seems to us that, taken as a whole, the instruction could not have been misunderstood by the jury as intimating any view that the trial judge may have had of the case.

[3] It is also contended that the court erred in refusing to give a certain cautionary instruction, the substance of which was to impress upon the minds of the jurors that a charge of the nature of that upon which the defendant was being tried was particularly hard for him to defend against. The instruction is argumentative in certain particulars, namely, where the jury were instructed that, before they could convict the defendant, they must be satisfied, not by the mere preponderance of the evidence, but by evidence entirely convincing to themselves that the defendant was guilty, because it was beyond the law, which only requires that the jury be convinced of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

[4] Defendant committed this crime—if he committed it at all—four days before the law qualifying women to serve upon juries went into effect. He contends now that this law, as to him, was ex post facto, and that his trial by a jury partly of women was therefore an invasion of his constitutional rights; it being contended that women, under the circumstances, were more willing to convict than men. This contention seems to us to be a false quantity in this case. The question of whom among the citizens of the state should comprise a jury is a question of procedure, and a statutory change in the qualifications of jurors after a crime has been committed is not obnoxious to the constitutional provision against ex post facto laws.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Samuel Storrow against G. G. Green. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. J. Willett and A. G. Allen, both of Pasadena, and Leonard B. Slosson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lynn Helm, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought by complaint filed in October, 1912, to secure a decree determining that the plaintiff possessed an interest of a right of way in and over a strip of land 50 feet in width, and to enjoin defendant from interfering with the plaintiff in the enjoyment of its use. The judgment of the court was in favor of the plaintiff, and defendant has appealed therefrom and also from an order denying him a new trial.

In February, 1891, defendant acquired by purchase a parcel of land having its westerly frontage along Raymond avenue in the city of Pasadena. Along the northerly line of this property was a hotel building owned by the defendant, and along the westerly line was a fence. Immediately after making this purchase the defendant sold to one Swales, since deceased, the southerly 140 feet of the land, measured along the Raymond avenue side. This left title remaining in defendant to the 50-foot strip intervening between the hotel property and the northerly line of the property so sold to Swales. In the deed to Swales, however, in addition to granting title to the southerly 140 feet of the land, the defendant granted the right to use the 50-foot intervening strip, the term of the deed making the grant (excepting the particular description of the property) reading as follows:

"Together with a right of way for all purposes over that certain parcel of land described.

Swales having died, his heirs in 1905 conveyed the property in question, together with the right of way interest, to this plaintiff. The defendant admitted in this action that the instruments of conveyance had passed as we have stated. He asserted in defense the affirmative claim that he had acquired by adverse user all interest of the plaintiff in the 50-foot strip, and further that all right of way privileges granted under the deed to Swales, had been lost by non-user or abandoned.

[1] It is hardly necessary to suggest that, in considering the evidence upon which the trial judge made up his findings, we must take all of such evidence favorable to the plaintiff in its strongest effect. In other words, as it is often said in the decisions, if we find any substantial evidence which may be used to support all the material findings of the court, the judgment must be sustained. Therefore, in such statement of the evidence as we are about to append, no consideration is given to evidence introduced by the defendant the effect of which is merely to contradict the evidence offered by the plaintiff.

[2, 3] It appears from the transcript of the testimony that, when defendant purchased the 190 feet of ground first mentioned, it had upon it a fence along the entire Raymond avenue frontage. This fence was still there when defendant transferred the south 140 feet to Swales. The defendant replaced the fence shortly after the purchase made by him, and it appears that he replaced the entire fence at that time, both that along the 50 feet immediately adjoining the hotel and along the 140 feet which he had transferred to Swales. At any rate, the fence was standing along that entire line in the year 1900, although we cannot determine from any of the testimony definitely as to how long it remained standing thereafter. It seems quite clear that the fence, long after the date of the purchase by the plaintiff, still stood along the Raymond avenue line for more than the 50 feet next south of the hotel. At the time defendant Green purchased the property it was an uncultivated lot. After he acquired the ownership of it and after he made his sale to Swales, he began to improve the ground, particularly the 50 feet immediately adjoining the hotel, being the 50 feet over which he had granted to Swales right of way privileges. This 50-foot strip was parked by Green, and his manager at the hotel obtained permission to use Swales' 140 feet for purposes of placing thereon tennis and croquet courts. Some of the gardeners of the defendant planted grass and trees upon the 50-foot strip and even across on the land of Swales, and the land of Swales was used, under permission obtained from its owner, by the guests of the hotel, for tennis and croquet games. A rental of $50 was paid to Swales for that use for at least one year. Later it is not shown that any rental was collected, but defendant continued to use the ground for the purposes mentioned thereafter and up to at least the year 1909. At this time defendant built a fence along the line dividing the 50-foot strip from the property of plaintiff, the latter having in the meantime acquired title to the south 140 feet which has been hereinbefore referred to. Such were the circumstances and conditions surrounding the use to which the land was put, up to the year 1909. That there could have been no abandonment of the right of way admits of little argument under the facts stated. Where an interest in land is acquired through user only, it is very plain that the right so acquired may be abandoned by non-user. Not so, however, with an interest in real property obtained by grant, and there is no difference in the resulting legal situation between the nonuser of a right of way acquired by grant and the non-user of any other quality of interest in real property acquired by the same means. This, of course, assuming an unqualified and unconditional grant, such as the one expressed in the deeds here made. If the right of way had been conditional upon use, then the condition should have been expressed; not being expressed, the right acquired will be taken to be what the deed purports to make it—an unlimited, unrestricted right. It seems so plain to us that mere nonuse will not forfeit a right acquired by deed as to make unnecessary the citing of authorities to sustain that proposition. The evidence shows no formal relinquishment of the right of way; neither does it show (assuming that such would be sufficient) acts on the part of the plaintiff or his predecessor in interest which would estop plaintiff from further asserting the right. There is no doubt, either, but that at a considerable time prior to the commencement of this action the defendant did assert a claim adverse to any right of way being possessed by the plaintiff. As has been before stated, the acquiring of the whole 190 feet and the selling of the 140 feet were practically simultaneous acts. The land was then fenced on the Raymond street side, and the defendant continued to keep it so fenced, and by an arrangement with Swales acquired the right to use the 140 feet sold by him to the latter. Having established the relation of landlord and tenant between himself and Swales, and having entered into possession of the Swales property by reason of the privileges acquired as such tenant, defendant would be presumed to be in occupancy thereafter of the Swales ground as a licensee or by permission, regardless of whether he continued to pay rental for it and until by some unequivocal act he gave notice of a change in his attitude from that of peaceful to hostile possessor.

"To perfect an easement by occupancy for five years, the enjoyment must be adverse, continuous, open, peaceable. It must be adverse, and under claim of a legal right so to do, and not by the consent, permission, or indulgence merely of the owner of the alleged servient estate. This is quite obvious in cases where the consent, permission, or license is expressly given. But it is no less true where the permission or license is implied, as it may well be from the facts and circumstances under which the use was enjoyed. * * * The question is one for the jury, or for a court sitting as such, to determine as a fact in the light of the relations between the parties and all the surrounding circumstances." Thomas v. England, 71 Cal. 456, 12 Pac. 491.

See, also, Abbott v. Pond, 142 Cal. 394, 76 Pac. 60; Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 670, 66 Pac. 10; Reed v. Smith, 125 Cal. 491, 58 Pac. 139.

[4] In his testimony given at the trial the plaintiff stated that he first became apprised of the hostile attitude of the defendant with respect to the right of way in 1908, less than five years prior to the commencement of the action. In a deposition taken prior to the trial this witness had made statements somewhat inconsistent with his statement at the trial with reference to this important date; but it was for the trial court to determine as to when it was that defendant gave notice of a hostile claim, and, under any contradictory state of the evidence, that determination is conclusive upon this court.

[5] Taking the testimony of the plaintiff as last given, we must conclude that the possession of the defendant did not become hostile until about four years prior to the commencement of the action. For the lack of a contrary claim, evidenced by word or unequivocal action, made more than five years before this action was commenced, defendant's possession must be held not to have been adverse for the period prescribed by the statute. The mere fact that plaintiff made no attempt to use the right of way indicates no acknowledgment of hostile possession in the defendant. The land of plaintiff had not been built upon and was not being used by him in any way other than as he permitted the defendant to use it; he had no occasion to go across the 50-foot strip, but he had allowed the defendant to use it for the purposes before mentioned. The right of way granted is not one that was open to use by the public, but was a right of way simply in the owner of the south 140 feet of the land to pass across the 50-foot strip and to and from his own property. Until he desired to make such use of it, there was no occasion for his expressing an objection to the maintenance of the fence on the Raymond avenue side. As indicated by what has been stated, we find in the record sufficient evidence to sustain the findings of the court upon the issues presented.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by Leon Bloomberg against Julius Laventhal. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order refusing new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. J. K. MacGowen, Ernest C. Griffith, and Denis & Loewenthal, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles (J. D. Taggart, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages alleged to have been caused by a blow struck upon the side of his head by defendant's fist. A verdict was given against defendant in the sum of $5,000, and judgment was entered accordingly. From said judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

[1] The first contention made by defendant's counsel in their brief is that the verdict was grossly excessive, and that it was not supported by the evidence. It is true that there was a decided conflict in the testimony offered by plaintiff and that on behalf of the defendant; but, if the jurors believed plaintiff and his witnesses, there was ample support for the conclusions reached by the jury regarding both the fact and the seriousness of the injury.

The essential circumstances developed by the testimony on the part of plaintiff, and the witnesses called in his behalf, were that Mr. Bloomberg was a clerk in the employ of Mr. Laventhal in the latter's store; that they had a difference regarding some merchandise which a customer returned pursuant to an arrangement with Bloomberg that he might do so if dissatisfied with the goods; that on January 26, 1912, the employer said to the clerk, "You are pretty low"; that this evoked a retort to the effect that Laventhal had collected and kept $4 witness fees belonging to Bloomberg; that the employer then exclaimed, "If you know what is good for your eyes and face, you had better keep your mouth closed"; that, apprehending an attack, plaintiff tried to get away, exclaiming, "If you strike me, I will have you arrested"; but that before he could turn around defendant struck him on the temple "with his full force, full weight." Plaintiff testified that after the blow he was in a dazed condition, but that he found his way in some manner to the office of a friend, Mr. Hirsch. In the days and months following, according to his testimony, plaintiff suffered great pain, loss of memory, insomnia, and other physical discomforts; whereas, he had always been in perfect health prior to the assault.

Mr. Hirsch corroborated plaintiff regarding the fact of the latter's visit to his office. At that time Mr. Bloomberg seemed to the witness to be irrational, and Mr. Hirsch took plaintiff home. His family physician, Dr. Quint (who was also a neighbor), was called in, and, as he testified at the trial, he found his patient suffering from concussion of the brain, with quite a large welt or bump on the left side of the head, just above the temple. He complained of headache. His eyes were twitching; he talked irrationally; and he seemed bewildered. The patient was put to bed, was given a dose of bromide and had an ice pack put upon his head. About 4 o'clock on the following morning he appeared at Dr. Quint's home. He was partially clad and talked and acted in a bewildered manner. Later in the day he was taken to a hospital, where he remained about a week, when he was sent home because he had become irritable and hard to manage. Afterwards he became melancholy, depressed, and was easily discouraged, was more nervous than he had been before the injury, and was troubled with an apparently involuntary "batting" or blinking of the eyes. About two years after the assault he suffered a relapse. Dr. Quint also testified that the welt on the side of Mr. Bloomberg's head could have been produced by a blow from a fist.

Dr. Ross Moore, a specialist to whom Dr. Quint sent Mr. Bloomberg, testified that the patient exhibited symptoms due to concussion of the brain. The confused condition in which the doctor found Mr. Bloomberg continued up to the period of the last examination before the trial, which was more than two years after the alleged assault. Other facts and circumstances which we need not be at pains to describe in detail were brought out by the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses. The showing made in plaintiff's behalf was amply sufficient to support the verdict and justify the amount of the award. It is true that defendant, under oath, stoutly protested that he had struck no blow, and he even denied any controversy with the clerk; but, upon the latter subject he was contradicted by his own witness.

[2] Appellant's counsel assert that prejudicial error was committed by the court in allowing witness Hirsch to relate statements which he said had been made to him by plaintiff to the effect that the latter had pains in the head and that he could not sleep. It appears from the record that these were complaints regarding, and were the usual concomitants of, existing discomforts, and not narratives of past miseries. Such statements may be properly admitted in evidence. Lange v. Schoettler, 115 Cal. 388, 47 Pac. 139; Green v. Pacific Lumber Co., 130 Cal. 435, 62 Pac. 747; Evarts v. Santa Barbara Ry. Co., 3 Cal. App. 712, 86 Pac. 830.

It is true that after describing the appearance of Mr. Bloomberg when he visited Mr. Hirsch's office, and saying that "his eyes were starey and he was very much disturbed," Mr. Hirsch volunteered the statement: "So I asked him what happened, and he said Mr. Laventhal had struck him." Instantly the court admonished the witness: "Refrain from stating what he said to you." No motion was made by defendant to strike out the improper testimony, perhaps because counsel thought, as we do, that the court's prompt admonition removed any bad effect which this hearsay testimony, volunteered by the witness, may have had upon the jury.

It is contended that the testimony of witnesses Hirsch and Riva Bloomberg that plaintiff appeared at times "irrational" related to plaintiff's soundness of mind itself, and not to any outward manifestation or observed facts; but an examination of the record (including the rulings of the court and the discussion in which the court declared that a witness may testify whether a person "acted" rationally or irrationally) convinces us that witnesses were describing appearances and not seeking to speak regarding the sanity or insanity of Mr. Bloomberg. In other words, this testimony was within the rule declared in such cases as People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 Pac. 177.

[3] Appellant's counsel complain because the court did not give the jury a form of verdict which would segregate the amounts, if any, which might be awarded respectively for compensation and for punitive damages. The conclusive answer to this contention by respondent's counsel is that no request was made for a form of verdict suitable for such segregation, and that therefore appellant may not justly complain. This position is fully sustained by Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 256, 71 Pac. 165, 75 Pac. 842, 100 Am. St. Rep. 123, and by Murphy v. Stelling, 8 Cal. App. 702, 97 Pac. 672.

[4, 5] There is no force in appellant's contention that the court erred in giving any instruction relating to exemplary damages because the assault was one provoked by plaintiff and made in the sudden heat of passion. The description of the occurrence in defendant's place of business, as given by plaintiff, showed a deliberate seeking of a quarrel by Mr. Laventhal, followed by threats of personal violence soon succeeded by the striking of a blow. This, if believed by the jury, would support a conclusion that actual malice existed. It is a fact, also, that defendant did not request the giving of any instruction which would eliminate the matter of exemplary damages. On the contrary, he offered an instruction, which was given, that left to the jury the duty of determining whether or not defendant was actuated by malice towards plaintiff and informing the jurors that exemplary damages might not be awarded if defendant committed the battery "in a sudden heat of passion and not maliciously."

[6] The court properly refused to give an instruction to the effect that, if the jurors found that plaintiff was suffering from a catarrhal disease of the head, they could only award damages for conditions which were the direct result of the battery, and that suffering and injury should be distinguished from the catarrhal affliction. The jury was elsewhere instructed that damages could only be given for injuries which were the proximate result of the battery, if any were proven. There was neither pleading nor proof justifying the giving of the part of the instruction relating to a catarrhal affliction as a producing cause of any of the described conditions of plaintiff's health after the striking of the blow by defendant.

Other instructions were offered by defendant and refused, but the material matters contained in them were given to the jury, substantially, in other parts of the very full and fair charge. We see no necessity for reviewing these proposed instructions in detail. Judgment and order affirmed.

Under Civ. 2. GIFTS ⇨28(1)—GIFTS INTER VIVOS—REQUISITES—CHOSE IN ACTION.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendant, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The complaint states a cause of action against the defendant, in favor of the decedent, Thomas Prather, upon an indebtedness alleged to be the sum of $112,965.84. The defendant in its answer denied the existence of any indebtedness from it to said Thomas Prather at the time of his death, and on information and belief alleged that prior to his death said Thomas Prather made a gift of said indebtedness, due from the plaintiff to Thomas Prather, to one Samuel D. Prather, and that said Samuel then became and ever since has been the owner of said indebtedness.

The court found that during the last sickness of Thomas Prather, to wit, on April 17, 1913, said Thomas Prather made a gift to his brother Samuel D. Prather, of all of the indebtedness due from the defendant to said Thomas, being the indebtedness sued for by the plaintiff herein. That at that time Samuel was the president, the general manager, and a member of the board of directors of the defendant, said defendant being a corporation, and Thomas Prather knew that Samuel held said offices and by reason thereof had full and exclusive charge and control of defendant's books of account, including power to make or direct the making of entries and transfers in said books, and knew that by reason thereof Samuel D. Prather had the means of obtaining possession and control of the said indebtedness so given to him. The court further stated that by reason of the fact that Thomas Prather had this knowledge at the time he gave the indebtedness to Samuel, he therefore at that time gave to said Samuel the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing given, that is, of the said indebtedness. This last statement is, of course, a mere conclusion from the facts previously stated. The appellant contends that the transaction as stated in the findings did not constitute a valid gift of the indebtedness in question, and that the finding, so far as it states the ultimate fact of such gift, is contrary to the evidence.

It is conceded that at the time of the asserted gift Thomas Prather knew that Samuel D. Prather held the offices above mentioned, and that it was within his official power by reason thereof to make sufficient changes upon the books of account of the defendant to make them show that the said indebtedness had been transferred by Thomas Prather to Samuel D. Prather, and was owing by the defendant to Samuel D. Prather, instead of Thomas Prather. It is admitted that the asserted gift was made during the last sickness of Samuel Prather, two days before his death, which event occurred on April 19, 1913, and was therefore a gift in view of death. Civ. Code, § 1150. It is also admitted that no change was made upon the books of the defendant regarding said indebtedness, up to the time of the trial of this action, and that when the action was begun the account books of the defendant showed it to be indebted to the said Thomas Prather in the sum claimed in the complaint. The only evidence of the gift asserted in the answer is found in the testimony of Samuel D. Prather, and is as follows:

"In talking business matters my brother said to me, 'Now, in reference to the account of Thomas Prather in the Merced Stone Company, I want to give you that account, all that is due me from that account. I don't know just how to do this, but I give it to you.' * * * A little further in the conversation my brother said to me, 'I give you the keys to my office, the combination of my safe and keys to my desk, and with these I give you all accounts, books, papers, letters, documents, furnishings, pictures, everything that belongs to me in that office. It is yours.'"

This he said occurred on April 17, 1913.

[1] The case depends upon the meaning and effect of section 1147 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"A verbal gift is not valid, unless the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, nor, if it is capable of delivery, unless there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to the donee."

The contention of the respondent is that this section is complied with in every case of gift of a chose in action where, at the time the donor makes such gift, he knows that the donee has it within his power to secure the possession and control of the thing given, and that in such a case no delivery or transmission from the donor to the donee of the means of obtaining possession and control of the subject of the gift is necessary. We do not think this is the correct construction of the section quoted. It contemplates that the donor shall do something at the time of making the gift which has the effect of placing in the hands of the donee the means of obtaining the control and possession of the thing given. That the fact that the thing was already in possession of the donee at the time of declaring the gift is not enough, is well settled by the authorities. Denigan v. Hibernian, etc., Society, 127 Cal. 141, 59 Pac. 389; Smith v. Zumbro, 41 W. Va. 623, 24 S. E. 653; Drew v. Hagerty, 81 Me. 231, 17 Atl. 63, 3 L. R. A. 230, 10 Am. St. Rep. 255;

Allen v. Allen, 75 Minn. 116, 77 N. W. 567, 74 Am. St. Rep. 442.

In order to comply with the section the "means" must be "given." In the connection in which these words occur the effect is that such means must be given by the donor to the donee. This giving of the means is authorized, where the thing given is not capable of delivery, as a substitute for the actual or symbolical delivery of the thing by the donor to the donee required in cases where such thing is capable of delivery. No good reason can be given for supposing that a transmission or delivery by the donor to the donee of the means was not intended to be as essential in the case of intangible property, as the delivery, actual or symbolical, of the thing itself, where it is tangible.

[2] In the case of a chose in action not evidenced by a written instrument, the only means of obtaining control that is recognized by the authorities is an assignment in writing, or some equivalent thereof.

"According to the weight of authority, in order to make a valid gift inter vivos of a chose in action not evidenced by a written instrument, there must be a written assignment, or some equivalent instrument." 20 Cyc. 1202.

"A written assignment of the demand by the donor to the donee is essential to complete the delivery" in the case of gifts causa mortis. 20 Cyc. 1237; 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1022.

"If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion of the property. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment, or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be actually executed." 2 Kent Com. *p. 439.

This passage from Kent was quoted and approved in Driscoll v. Driscoll, 143 Cal. 534, 77 Pac. 471, and in Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 657, 40 Pac. 8.

In Cook v. Lum, 55 N. J. Law, 373, 26 Atl. 803, the court said that the test of an effectual gift was this:

"That the transfer was such that, in conjunction with the donative intention, it completely stripped the donor of his dominion of the thing given, whether that thing was a tangible chattel or a chose in action."

To the same effect was Ewing v. Ewing, 2 Leigh (Va.) 344; Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183, 129 N. W. 201; McMahon v. Newton, 67 Conn. 79, 34 Atl. 709, and many other cases. That section 1147 was not intended to change the law respecting the necessity of an assignment, or its equivalent, to make a valid gift of a chose in action, not itself evidenced by a writing, is shown by the fact that in the annotated edition of the Code, edited by the committee that prepared it, there is cited to support the section Hunter v. Hunter, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 631, in which case the above passage from Kent is quoted and approved.

[3] In the present case it is true that Samuel D. Prather was possessed of the physical power and of the official authority, by reason of his relation to the defendant, to make the necessary changes on its books to show that the indebtedness was due to him and not to the decedent. But this power did not emanate from the decedent. Samuel possessed it before the asserted gift as well as after. The decedent did not even authorize him to make such changes, nor suggest that the gift might be effected in that way. It was not shown that such method was in the mind of the donor. The fact that it was a book account, or that a change might be made in the name of the debtor, was not even mentioned in the conversation. The law intends something more than a mere power to make physical entries in the books of the debtor in such a case. The authority to make the change, or cause it to be made, must be vested in the debtor by reason of some act or direction of the creditor. If verbal gifts could be made in such loose manner as this it would open the door to innumerable frauds and perjuries. For this reason the authorities hold that something more than mere physical power is necessary; something more than the previous possession of the property or of the means of obtaining it; something emanating from the donor which operates to give to the donee the means of obtaining such possession and control.

The case is not different in principle from Pullen v. Placer County Bank, 138 Cal. 170, 66 Pac. 740, 71 Pac. 83, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19. In that case a father gave to his son a check for $1,000 upon the bank, with the intention of making to him a gift of that amount of money. After delivering the check to the son the father stated that he wished he would not present it until after his death. The son awaited his death and then presented the check, which the bank refused to pay, on the ground that the death of the father revoked it. The court said:

"In the present case the gift was verbal, and the property which the father intended to give to his son was money on deposit in the bank. The check was not itself the property which the father intended to give, but was merely a direction to the defendant to pay $1,000 to the son. It indicated the amount to be given and the place at which the money was to be delivered. The check was not a symbolic delivery of the money, but it was a delivery of the means by which the son could obtain possession of the money. It was, however, subject to revocation by the father at any time before its presentation to the bank, and was in fact revoked by his death. The request of the father that the son would not present the check until after his death did not affect the sufficiency of the gift. If the gift were complete by his delivery of the check, such subsequent request would not destroy its validity, and if not then complete, this request would not have the effect to dispense with its presentation for the purpose of making it complete. By the failure of the son to present the check, there was no delivery of the money during the lifetime of the father, and the gift was therefore not complete."

The mere delivery of an order for the payment of a debt is therefore not sufficient to make a complete gift thereof. In the present case there was not even the delivery of an order, nor any suggestion thereof. All that was done was to declare the present intention to give the indebtedness to Samuel D. Prather. No means whatever were delivered by the donor to the donee by which the latter could obtain payment of the indebtedness. The fact that Samuel D. Prather was the managing officer of the defendant and had power to change its books did not make the gift effectual. The indebtedness was due from the defendant and not from Samuel D. Prather, and it was necessary that the defendant should have some authority from Thomas Prather before it could legally make a change upon the books of the company to show the change in the indebtedness. Thomas Prather gave no such authority to his brother or to any other person.

The conclusion of the court below upon the facts found was not in accordance with the law, and its finding of the ultimate fact that Thomas Prather transferred the debt to Samuel D. Prather by way of a verbal gift is not supported by the evidence. Consequently the judgment and order cannot be upheld.

The judgment and order are reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment upon the findings in favor of the plaintiff for the amount prayed for.

SMITH v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO. et al. (L. A. 4374.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1064(1)—RESTRICTING EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

Conceding that provision in contract of employment barring suit if plaintiff fail to make claim for injuries within 30 days was valid and should have been received in evidence, unrestricted by instruction that it was not a bar, where evidence subsequently introduced without objection showed that defendant had waived the provision, defendant was not prejudiced by ruling assuming it was erroneous.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT $\hookrightarrow$ 252—AGREEMENT TO GIVE NOTICE OF INJURY—WAIVER.

In action by brakeman for injuries, evidence held to show that defendant waived provision in contract of employment requiring notice of injuries within 30 days.

3. DAMAGES $\hookrightarrow$ 170—NUMBER AND AGES OF PLAINTIFF'S CHILDREN.

In action for personal injuries, the court erred in admitting evidence as to the number and ages of plaintiff's children.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1052(5)—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action by brakeman for injuries, error in admitting evidence as to number and ages of his children held not prejudicial; the verdict having been reduced from $15,000 to $8,000.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Seamer S. Smith against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

U. T. Clotfelter, M. W. Reed, Paul Burks, and Robert Brennan, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This appeal was originally taken to this court and was by it assigned to the District Court of Appeal for the Second District. The justices of that court being unable to agree, it has been transferred to this court for hearing and determination. As to all of the points presented upon this appeal, with one exception, the opinion of Mr. Victor E. Shaw, written while the case was before the District Court of Appeal, correctly determines them against the appellants' contention, and hence that portion of his said opinion, reading as follows, is hereby adopted as the decision of this court:

"Action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained as the result of defendants' negligence.

"Upon a verdict in favor of plaintiff, whereby his damage was fixed at $15,000, judgment therefor was entered against the defendants, the railway company and Ernest Howard, who was conductor in charge of the passenger train upon which plaintiff was a brakeman when injured. Thereafter, defendants moved for a new trial, which motion was by order of court denied upon condition, complied with, that plaintiff in writing remit $7,000 of the $15,000 judgment so entered. From this judgment and the order so made denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal.

[1] "As a separate defense, the answer of the railway company alleged that at the time when plaintiff entered its employ he executed a written document, designated in the record as 'Exhibit B,' which contained a provision that, as consideration for such employment, he agreed, among other things, that, if while in the service of said defendant he should sustain personal injury for which he should make claim against the company for damages, he would within 30 days after receiving such injury give notice in writing of such claim to the general claim agent or claims attorney of said defendant, wherein should be stated the time, place, manner, and cause of the injury, together with the nature and extent thereof and claim therefor, 'to the end that such injury may be fully, fairly and promptly investigated,' and that his failure so to do within the time so specified should be a bar to the institution of any suit on account of such injury. It was further alleged and admitted that he failed to give such notice within the time specified, or at all. At the trial and in support of said separate defense so alleged in the answer, the defendant railway company offered this document, Exhibit B, in evidence, to which an objection interposed was overruled, with the modification stated by the court that 'I think it is the duty of the court to give instructions with reference to it.' In accordance with which statement the jury was instructed that plaintiff's failure to give the notice did not constitute a bar or affect his right to recover in the action. Prejudicial error is predicated upon this ruling; appellants' contention being that the agreement so made requiring plaintiff as a condition of maintaining the action to give the notice within 30 days was a reasonable and lawful one, and, since it was conceded that he failed so to do, the action was barred.

"Plaintiff's injury occurred on January 12, 1913, and it appears that, prior to January 20th, Dr. Tyroler, who was assistant chief surgeon of the railway company, called upon plaintiff at defendant's hospital for the purpose of examining him and, after telling him the purpose of such examination, plaintiff said, 'You want to look me over and report to the Santa Fe Railroad Company what is the matter with me, but I have on my side of it looked after a lawyer, so fire ahead.' Thereupon said surgeon representing the railway company made a physical examination of him and made a report to the general claims attorney of said company. 'Mr. Smith,' says the witness, 'allowed me to examine him fully, repeatedly.' He further said that he did not ask plaintiff how he was hurt, for 'I knew that from the accident report that came in; I knew all about that from our records in the office.' On cross-examination of this witness, the report which he stated he had made to the general claims attorney was, without objection, introduced in evidence, which report, dated January 30, 1913, showed the place of accident, the history of the accident which, as stated, occurred in a head-end wreck, as per statement of plaintiff to surgeon, the nature and extent of the injury, together with other facts required in the making of such reports. It thus appears that, within a few days after the injury, defendant was by this report, which embodied information from plaintiff upon an examination of him by defendant's assistant chief surgeon and transmitted to the general claims attorney, fully informed and notified as to the time, place, manner, cause, and extent of plaintiff's injuries. Hence, conceding but not holding, as claimed by defendant, that the agreement purporting to be a waiver of any claim for injuries against defendant, unless within 30 days he notified defendant in writing thereof as provided in said document, was a reasonable and lawful one and therefore should have been received in evidence, unrestricted in effect by the instruction given, nevertheless, as held in Smith v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 82 Kan. 136, 107 Pac. 635, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1255, where a similar question arose upon a like agreement, the evidence so received constituted a waiver by the railway company of this provision of the contract. The purpose for which the agreement was enacted, viz., 'to the end that such injury may be fully, fairly and promptly investigated,' was as fully served by the examination made by defendant's surgeon and report to the general claims attorney as though plaintiff had given the notice.

[2] "Assuming the ruling to have been erroneous, defendant under the circumstances shown was not prejudiced by reason thereof. It follows from what is said on this point that the court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury, as requested by defendants, that the action was barred, nor to return a verdict for defendants."

[3] The only other point requiring discussion is that raised by the appellants' contention that the trial court was in error because of the following evidence and that the error was sufficiently prejudicial to require a reversal of the case, viz., while the plaintiff was upon the witness stand he was asked by his attorney: "How many children have you?" Objected to as irrelevant and immaterial. The court said, "I do not see the materiality," to which counsel for plaintiff replied:

"It is material for two reasons. It shows the man's condition, and if he had a helpless family how much more he would suffer in pain and mental anguish if he thought he was injured."

The court therefore overruled the objection, and the plaintiff was permitted to testify that he had two children, one a boy five years old and one a girl under three years of age. We are of the opinion that the court was in error in the admission of this evidence. While the authorities from other jurisdictions are not in harmony as to the admissibility of this sort of evidence in actions for damages for personal injuries, we think the weight of authority and of reason is against its admission. In the recent case of Steinberger v. California Electric Garage Co., 168 Pac. 570, it was held to be error to admit evidence as to the plaintiff's poverty in an action to recover damages for personal injuries. In so holding, this court not only approved the rule upon this subject laid down in the case of Green v. Southern Pac. Co., 122 Cal. 563, 55 Pac. 577, but also undertook to limit the general language employed in the case of Merrill v. Los Angeles G. & E. Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 Pac. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134, dealing with the subject of mental anguish for which recovery may be had in an action for personal injuries so as to confine the language of this latter decision to the facts of its particular case. The mental suffering which the plaintiff sought to prove and recover for in the instant case was that which, according to his counsel's statement to the court, the plaintiff would undergo from the thought that he had a helpless and dependent family. This necessarily implies that he would be entitled to follow up the inquiry as to the number and ages of his children with evidence that his state of poverty was such that on account of his injuries they had been rendered helpless and dependent by being deprived of his means of support. But since the plaintiff's situation as to wealth or poverty was held not to be a proper subject of inquiry in the Steinberger Case, it follows that such supporting proofs would not be admissible, and hence that the plaintiff's reason for educing proof as to the number and condition of his family would fail. The plaintiff's mental suffering due directly to his physical injuries was properly admissible in evidence under the rule set forth in the case of Merrill v. Los Angeles G. & E. Co., supra, and its supporting cases; but the rule ought not to be so far extended as to permit a recovery also for the mental suffering of the plaintiff's family arising out of the fact of his injuries. While we are therefore of the opinion that the trial court was in error in admission of this evidence as to the number and ages of the plaintiff's children, we are not inclined to adopt the appellant's view that the admission of this evidence was so far prejudicial as to compel a reversal of this case. A careful study of the record before us would rather lead to the contrary conclusion. The plaintiff and his wife were both witnesses upon the trial, and it was thus disclosed to the jury that so far at least the plaintiff was a man of family. Aside from the brief episode of the admission of this evidence above set forth, no special emphasis was given it either by the court in the instructions which it gave, or by the defendant in asking for any instructions embodying its contention that such evidence should not be considered by the jury. On the contrary, the instructions which the court actually gave upon the subject of the plaintiff's mental suffering stated what has long been the correct rule upon this subject, since by the terms of such instructions the jury was limited to "such reasonable sum as the jury shall award him on account of physical pain and mental anguish he has suffered by reason of his said injury." Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409.

[4] The record in this case further discloses that the plaintiff suffered very serious and permanent injuries sufficient to have justified a large verdict in his favor if the testimony of himself and his witnesses was to be believed; that the defendant substantially admitted its liability for such injuries as the plaintiff was actually shown to have suffered; that the jury brought in its verdict in the plaintiff's favor for the sum of $15,000, which sum the court upon motion for a new trial reduced to the sum of $8,000. The appellants neither upon new trial nor appeal specified any misconduct on the part of the jury or made any contention that its verdict was the result of passion or prejudice, except in so far as the single error above complained of might have produced such a result. Such being the state of the record in this case, we are unable to arrive at the conclusion that the error of the trial court in the admission of the foregoing evidence as to the number and ages of the plaintiff's children was sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal of this case.

Judgment affirmed.

1. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 114(2), 239—ASSIGNMENT BY CONTRACTOR OF SUMS TO BECOME DUE—EQUITIES—APPLICATION OF PAYMENT.

Where contractor assigned a certain payment to become due, and owner consented to and made payment to assignee, the right of the assignee was subject to the equities (Civ. Code, $\S\S$ 1458, 1459), and equity will apply payment to material of assignee used, and not to satisfaction of a general debt owed by contractor to assignee; Civ. Code, $\S$ 1140, relating to transfer of title not applying.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 281(4) — DIRECTION AS TO APPLICATION OF PAYMENT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that owner of property, in making payment to a materialman of an amount assigned by contractor to the latter, manifested intent to assignee materialman, within the meaning of Civ. Code, $\S$ 1479, that the money was to be applied to extinguishment of assignee's claim for materials, and not to satisfaction of a general debt owing by contractor to assignee.

MELVIN, J. Hammond Lumber Company, one of the plaintiffs in a consolidated action by lien claimants, being dissatisfied with the amount of the judgment entered in its favor, appeals therefrom and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

There is but one question in this appeal, depending for solution upon the construction to be given to a certain assignment. B. Fanta was the owner of real property upon which a building was being erected. J. M. Thomas was his contractor, and appellant was furnishing lumber not only for the house on Fanta's property, but for other buildings in course of construction by Thomas as a contractor. Before the fourth payment was due Thomas from Fanta under their contract, the former took to the latter an assignment written on paper bearing the letterhead of the Hammond Lumber Company. This was in the following words and figures:

"Sept. 13, 1912.

"For value received, I hereby assign all right and title to the fourth payment due on the B. Fanta job at 10th and Union to the Hammond Lumber Company, this payment being due on or about the first day of October, 1912.

"J. M. Thomas."

After conference with his architect Mr. Fanta signed upon the instrument a certain indorsement, which was then as follows:

"I hereby accept the above assignment, and agree to pay the money as assigned when due.

"B. Fanta."

The testimony of appellant's witnesses was to the effect that upon the strength and security of this assignment the corporation loaned to Mr. Thomas $2,000, taking his note for that sum. When the fourth payment on the building contract became due, Mr. Thomas and Mr. Anderson, the latter representing the Hammond Lumber Company, called upon Mr. Fanta, who, having the architect's certificate that the payment was due, gave his check in favor of the contractor for $2,000. This was immediately indorsed payable to the Hammond Lumber Company, and the assignment was surrendered to Mr. Fanta, with a receipt thereon signed by Hammond Lumber Company. Mr. Fanta testified that he never heard of the loan and the contractor's note until after the indorsement and transfer of his check, and that he signed his acceptance of the assignment of the fourth payment on the contract to the Hammond Lumber Company upon the contractor's assurance that it was made to cover delivery of lumber by the Hammond Lumber Company to be used in the construction of his building. In this he is contradicted by Mr. Thomas, but the conflict is not one which this court is entitled to resolve by a conclusion based upon belief in the testimony of one rather than the other witness. There is also a conflict upon another matter. When the assignment was exhibited in court it bore, in addition to the words "Paid 10/15. By ck. to J. M. Thomas and indorsed by Thomas to Hammond Lumber Co.," the words "Credit for lumber on 10th and Union Ave." and the signature of the lumber company by C. S. Anderson. He and Mr. Thomas both testified that the expression "Credit for lumber," etc., was not written on the instrument when it was signed, while Mr. Fanta swore that those words were there at the time.

The Hammond Lumber Company furnished lumber for the building found by the court to be of the reasonable value of $2,032.13. The court held that the $2,000 should have been applied towards the payment for materials furnished by appellant for the building, and not for the payment of the note given for the loan by appellant to the contractor. This finding the appellant attacks as not supported by the evidence.

Appellant insists that all of the conversations by and between Mr. Fanta, Mr. Thomas and the representative of the Hammond Lumber Company, by which it was sought to show on the part of defendants that the intention of the owner, the contractor, and the corporation furnishing material was that the amount of the fourth payment on the contract should be credited for lumber, was inadmissible. In this behalf it is argued that the title of Mr. Fanta to the fourth payment passed, not when the payment became due, but at the moment of his acceptance of the assignment (appellant citing section 1140, Civ. Code, and Potts Drug Co. v. Benedict, 156 Cal. 322, 104 Pac. 432); and that the assignment, being unequivocal, the money when paid might be applied by the contractor in any manner he desired, unhampered by the desires or understandings of the owner based upon conversations. Appellant takes the position that the case at bar comes within the rule announced by such authorities as Newport Wharf & Lumber Co. v. Drew, 125 Cal. 585, 58 Pac. 187, Long Beach School District v. Lutge, 129 Cal. 409, 62 Pac. 36, and Miles v. Ryan, 172 Cal. 205, 157 Pac. 5. These and similar authorities which might be cited (all applying to public buildings which are not lienable) state the rule that a garnishment pro tanto of the contract price may be had in effect by assignment. None of them holds that an assignment of part of the building fund, as against the owner's equities, may be had until after the money is due.

[1, 2] This case is not ruled by section 1140 of the Civil Code relating to a present sale of personal property, but the facts present a case of the transfer of a nonnegotiable obligation where the right of the transferee is subject to the equities (sections 1458 and 1459, Civ. Code), and equity will apply this payment to the material used in the building, and not to the satisfaction of a general debt owed by the contractor to the lumber company. The evidence justified the court in concluding that in making the payment Mr. Fanta intended that the money was to be applied to the extinguishment of appellant's claim for materials delivered to the contractor, and that such intention was made manifest at the time to the lumber company. Section 1479, Civ. Code; Ray v. Borgfeldt, 169 Cal. 253, 146 Pac. 679; Hanson v. Cordano, 96 Cal. 441, 31 Pac. 457.

[3] Appellant makes the suggestion in the briefs that there is a conflict in the findings, one of them being to the effect that $2,000 is due the corporation, and another that only $32.13 was payable at the time of suit; but counsel raises this point for the first time in this court. We need not, therefore, consider it. Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828. No other alleged errors require discussion. The judgment and order are affirmed.

KELLAR v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨724—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE—PROPRIETARY FUNCTIONS.

In absence of statute, municipality is not liable for injuries caused by its negligence unless in exercise of private and proprietary functions as distinguished from functions purely governmental in nature.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨734—TORTS—GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTION—CONDUCTING CHILDREN'S CAMP.

City, in conducting summer camp, under charter provisions, for maintaining health of children of city, held engaged in governmental function, though making small charge to help pay costs, so that it was not liable for negligence injuring boy at camp.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨734—GOVERNMENTAL OR PUBLIC FUNCTION—CONDUCT OF PARKS AND CHILDREN'S PLAYGROUNDS.

Children's playgrounds, maintained by city for general use, do not differ substantially from public park, in so far as question whether their conduct is governmental or proprietary activity of city is concerned, and maintenance of park for sole benefit of public, not for any profit to city, is a governmental function.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨58—CONDUCT OF SUMMER CAMP—PRIVATE ENTERPRISE—CHARTER.

City of Los Angeles, under its charter, art. 1, § 2, subd. 4, held not authorized to maintain children's summer camp in any proprietary or private capacity, as any substantial doubt concerning existence of power in such respect must be resolved against city.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by William Henry Kellar, guardian of the estate of Byron H. Kellar, a minor, against the City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. Ibeson Sweet, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Wm. P. Mealey and W. D. Spalding, Deputy City Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the defendants upon sustaining their demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint. The only question presented by the briefs is as to the liability of the city of Los Angeles upon the facts stated in the complaint. It was sought by the action to hold the city liable for injuries accruing to the minor, a boy 16 years of age, by reason of the alleged negligence of its officers and employes in the matter of caring for him after he had accidentally been injured while an inmate of a summer camp maintained by the city, through its board of playground commissioners, in the San Bernardino mountains, "for the purpose of giving any children of said city, at certain prescribed charges to be paid by said children to said city, a vacation, with care, board, and lodging at said camp." The boy had gone to the camp under an agreement by which, in consideration of $3.75 per week to be paid by him, he was to be received and cared for, boarded and lodged, for two consecutive weeks. While there he accidentally fell and broke his arm. The alleged negligence was a failure to provide necessary care and attention, in view of his injury, occasioning, it is alleged, very serious results.

[1] It is thoroughly settled in this state that, in the absence of a statute imposing the liability, a municipality is not liable on account of acts such as those here complained of, unless the negligence was in the matter of the exercise of functions private and proprietary in their nature as distinguished from functions purely governmental in nature. We have no statute imposing any such liability. There thus arises the question whether the city, in the operation of this summer camp, was acting in its governmental capacity, or in a private and proprietary capacity. The decisions, both of this court and of the courts of last resort in other jurisdictions, show that it is not always an easy matter to determine in which of these capacities a city is acting, and that it is extremely difficult, if indeed not impossible, to prescribe the test so exactly by general rule as to always clearly show to which class a particular activity of a municipality belongs.

The summer camp was conducted by the city under authorization of certain provisions of its charter. It is provided therein that the city shall have power "to provide * * * and to establish, own, equip, maintain, conduct and operate libraries, reading rooms, * * * parks, playgrounds, gymnasiums, baths, public toilets; * * * also any and all buildings, establishments, institutions and places, whether situated inside or outside of the city limits, which are necessary or convenient for the transaction of public business or for promoting the health, morals, education or welfare of the inhabitants of the city, or for their amusement, recreation, entertainment or benefit." Subd. 4, § 2, art. 1, Charter. In article 26 of the charter, entitled "Playground Department," we find section 263, establishing a department of government, to be known as the playground department, under the management and control of a board of five commissioners, to be known as the board of playground commissioners. Section 267, contained in this article, provides: "All children's playgrounds, recreation centers and summer camps now or hereafter owned or controlled by the city of Los Angeles, either within or without its limits, shall be under the exclusive control and management of the board of playground commissioners." Other sections of the article provide for the acceptance and use in acquiring, establishing, improving, and maintaining of playgrounds, which, of course, includes children's recreation centers and summer camps, donations, legacies, and bequests given for those purposes, and also that the city council may appropriate annually such amount as may be necessary therefor.

[2] It seems to us that the function in which the city was thus engaged was purely in the exercise of the governmental power and the discharge of the governmental duty of maintaining the health of the children of the city, and was therefore essentially governmental in nature. It will not be questioned that a city is charged with such a duty of sovereignty as that of maintaining the public health, and that in any measures it may adopt solely for that purpose, which are reasonably adapted to that end, it is acting strictly in a governmental capacity. In this connection certain language in the prevailing opinion in our recent decision in Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 487, 163 Pac. 670, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106, is in point. It was said:

"Nor is it difficult to set forth the definition of governmental functions as applied to a city. Under the theory of the common law, that the municipality is protected from liability only while exercising the delegated functions of sovereignty, the governmental powers of a city are those pertaining to the making and enforcing of police regulations, to prevent crime, to preserve the public health, to prevent fires, the caring for the poor, and the education of the young; and in the performance of these functions all buildings and instrumentalities connected therewith come under the application of the principle."

ciding the question, it is clear, as was held in Harper v. City of Topeka, 92 Kan. 11, 139 Pac. 1018, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032, that the maintenance of a park by a city for the sole benefit of the public, and not for any profit or benefit to the municipal corporation, is a governmental or public function. See, also, Hibbard v. City of Wichita, 98 Kan. 498, 159 Pac. 399, L. R. A. 1917A, 399; Board of Park Commissioners v. Prinz, 127 Ky. 460, 105 S. W. 948; Mayor, etc., v. Burns, 131 Tenn. 281, 174 S. W. 1111; Nelson v. City of Spokane (Wash.) 176 Pac. 149; Blair v. Grainger, 24 R. I. 17, 51 Atl. 1042. As said in Board of Park Commissioners v. Prinz, supra: "They are essentially public places, established for purely public purposes." In so far as any question here involved is concerned, there is no material difference between a children's playground, established and maintained by the city within the city limits, and the summer camp for the children of the city, established without the city limits in the mountain region some distance therefrom. It is substantially in the nature of a children's playground for the benefit of the children of the city, located, as it is, for the purpose of giving the children the advantages of recreation under different conditions from those existing in the city. By reason of its remoteness from the city it is essential to its enjoyment by the children that board and lodging be furnished to those enjoying the privileges thus afforded. This in no degree changes its nature. It rests on precisely the same basis as children's playgrounds and public parks within the city limits. It is conducted for the sole purpose of promoting the public interest by maintaining the public health, and has nothing of the character of a business enterprise. That a small charge is made upon those children going to and staying at the camp for the purpose of assisting in defraying the cost of maintenance of such children while at the camp does not change the situation. See Denning v. State of California, 123 Cal. 316, 55 Atl. 1000; Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 22, 53 Pac. 416; Blair v. Grainger, supra.

ters in the nature of business enterprises in which the city may engage shows the correctness of this construction. Where it was thought advisable to confer a power as to any such matter it was carefully and specifically prescribed. And in subdivision 50 of the section, added by amendment in 1913, conferring most sweeping general power as to such matters, it was expressly provided "that under the authorization of this subdivision the city of Los Angeles shall not engage in any purely commercial or industrial enterprise not now engaged in by the city, except on the approval of a majority of the electors voting thereon at an election." It is not suggested that there was any provision for a summer camp prior to the adoption of this provision, or that the electors have ever authorized the maintenance of any institution of the nature of this summer camp, except as the same is authorized as a governmental function by subdivision 4 of the section.

In view of what we have said, we are of the opinion that there is no liability on the part of the city of Los Angeles on account of the matters alleged in the complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

MICHELIN TIRE CO. OF CALIFORNIA
v. COLEMAN & BENTEL CO. et al.
(L. A. 4519.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1011(1)—FINDINGS OF FACT.

Where there is a substantial conflict in the testimony, the findings of the trial court will be upheld on appeal.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇐175—WAIVER OF BAR—STIPULATIONS.

In action on account, wherein it was stipulated that plaintiff corporation might file amended complaint and that objection that plaintiff was not owner of claim against defendant at time of commencement of action should be waived, defendant was held to have waived right to set up statute of limitations as to matter which would have become barred between filing of original and amended complaint.

3. STIPULATIONS ⇐16—ACCEPTING BENEFITS OF STIPULATION—EFFECT.

A party having accepted the benefits of a stipulation is bound by the fair and not reserved interpretation of its terms.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇐24(1)—CONTRACT—PLACE OF EXECUTION.

Where contract, containing provision that it should not be binding until accepted by a party in New Jersey, was prepared in California, signed by one of parties, and forwarded to New Jersey for acceptance, and New Jersey party made a substantial change, signed it, and returned it to California party with advices as to change, and California party approved change by letter, the contract was executed in California, and therefore not governed by the two-year limitations statute as a written instrument executed out of the state.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by the Michelin Tire Company of California, a corporation, against the Coleman & Bentel Company and George R. Bentel. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. C. Millsap, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ward Chapman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. Action to recover an indebtedness which arose out of the sale of automobile tires and accessories to the Coleman & Bentel Company under certain agency contracts, the defendant George R. Bentel having been included as a party defendant on account of his proportionate stockholders' liability to the extent of the stock owned by him in the defendant corporation. The action was begun January 17, 1912. The court made findings and rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff corporation for $17,749.14 and interest from January 17, 1912, and against George R. Bentel for $7,522.90 and interest, for his proportionate share of said indebtedness as a stockholder of defendant corporation.

In August, 1908, a contract was made between Coleman & Bentel and the Michelin Tire Company of New Jersey, whereby the former was given an exclusive agency for handling Michelin tires in Los Angeles county, and bound itself to keep a minimum stock on hand of the value of $5,000 and to purchase its supplies outright from the New Jersey corporation at its schedule of prices, with a five per cent. discount, and to make monthly settlements for all goods received. At the time this contract was entered into, the plaintiff was a branch subsidiary California corporation of the New Jersey corporation, which latter corporation held all its stock. Under the contract large quantities of goods were supplied, mostly from Milltown, N. J., but some also from the San Francisco branch. The appellants contended that this contract was executed in New Jersey, but the court found that it was executed in California. It was superseded about the 10th of August, 1909, by a new contract, executed by the plaintiff corporation, whereby the Coleman & Bentel Company was constituted the agent of said corporation for handling and distributing its goods upon consignment. Under these contracts and successive yearly contracts, large quantities of goods were supplied, either from Milltown, N. J., or through branches of the Michelin Tire Company, upon consignment, and, as the goods were sold or adjustments or replacements made, monthly statements thereof were required to be sent to the Milltown offices of the corporation with remittances to cover the indebtedness therefor, after deducting the discounts allowed. Remittances were sometimes made through the San Francisco offices. Business was conducted in substantially the same manner during the existence of the contracts and until the month of January, 1912. The controversy out of which this litigation arose was precipitated by a demand in the month of November, 1911, by the Michelin Tire Company for the payment of the balance shown to be due from defendant company by the books of the Michelin Tire Company, and culminated in January, 1912, by the removal from the possession of defendant company of all goods, wares, and merchandise in its possession under consignment from the Michelin Tire Company, and the bringing of suit on January 17, 1912, for the sum of $22,366.19, which is the amount of the judgment less $480.03 found by the court to be barred by the statute of limitations and the allowance of a credit of $2,888.80 claimed as a rebate by defendant company and disputed by plaintiff, and a further amount of $1,247.99 collected. In its answer the defendant company admits an indebtedness of $11,863.97. The court found that the defendant company had not accounted for or paid to plaintiff or its assignor, the Michelin Tire Company of New Jersey, the whole of the purchase price of goods shipped to defendant company under these contracts. It further found that there had never been an account stated between the parties.

As a foundation for the introduction of the ledger sheets showing the account between the Michelin Tire Company and the defendant company disclosed by the Michelin Tire Company's books, the business methods of the Michelin Tire Company, at its principal place of business in New Jersey and at its various branch houses, in its sales and accounting departments, was testified to in detail by the auditor of the Michelin Tire Company and the various steps followed in the handling of accounts from the initial order to the final entry in the Milltown ledger. This testimony was corroborated by the various managers and heads of the collection and credit, the order, the stock, the shipping, and the claim departments, as well as by the manager of the California branch and his subordinates; invoices of deliveries from the San Francisco and Los Angeles branches were produced, and authenticated copies of the house orders and invoices on file at the Milltown office were introduced and received in evidence as part of the foundation for the introduction of the ledger sheets of the account here involved. From the testimony as to the routine of checking, double checking, rechecking, comparing, and posting, it is fairly inferable that the business of the Michelin Tire Company and its branches was conducted with all the safeguards of modern business efficiency so as to reduce the possibility of error to a minimum. From these ledger sheets so introduced in evidence upon this foundation, Mr. Connolly, the auditor of the Michelin Tire Company, as he is permitted to do under subdivision 5 of section 1855 of the Code of Civil Procedure (People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486-496, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50; Wilson v. Asphalt Co., 142 Cal. 182-189, 75 Pac. 787), summarized as follows:

Total debits are	$185,286.06
Total credits are	167,056.89
Leaving a balance of	$ 18,229.17

Of this the court disallowed the item of $480.03, above referred to, leaving a balance for which judgment was rendered of $17,749.14. The disallowance of this item is not complained of.

[1] Upon the defendant company's side the court had before it evidence to the effect that Coleman & Bentel had been furnished with a bill of particulars as early as February, 1912, which contained a complete statement of the account and referred to certain duplicate entries of credit made by defendant company's bookkeeper in her account as rendered. No substantial criticism was raised as to the correctness of the Michelin Tire Company's account until the trial, and what criticism then and since made in the brief of appellant has been satisfactorily explained away by respondent's attorneys. The bookkeeper of defendant, Mrs. Edmond, apparently could not explain the duplication of credits in favor of the Coleman & Bentel Company above referred to, and the accounts she submitted were entered on sheets torn from several different permanent books; but the books themselves were not accounted for. The following indicates the condition at the time of the trial:

"Q. Where were those books? A. I don't know where they were. Q. Have you looked for them? A. No, I have not looked for them because I do not know where they are. Q. Would you not know where to look for them? A. No, I don't. Q. You kept also a private book called an adjustment book in the sales room? A. Yes. Q. Where is that book? A. I don't know. Q. Would you not know where to look for that either? A. No, I would not; it may be in the building, but I wouldn't say, because we have moved since then, and I couldn't say whether it was moved or not. * * * Q. Have you made any further search for any of the books of this corporation, journal, sales book, or adjustment book? A. No, sir. Q. Why not? You were served with a notice to produce them, were you not? A. I have no books in my possession. Q. Who has charge of them now? A. I don't know where they are."

Inasmuch as the whole question involved upon the facts was the correctness of the account, a conflict of evidence was presented to the court which it has decided in favor of the correctness of the books kept by the plaintiff corporation as against the very unsatisfactory testimony and showing of a foundation for the account contended to be correct by the defendant company. Where there is a substantial conflict in the testimony, this court must uphold the trial court in its findings.

[2, 3] The appellant filed an opening brief and the respondent filed an answer thereto. Instead of a reply brief, appellant has printed and filed his oral argument before this court in which he apparently abandons many of the points urged in his opening brief and urges this court to modify the judgment to the extent of $2,583.88 on the ground that on June 4, 1912, the date of the filing of the amended complaint, the amount due and unpaid the Michelin Tire Company was during the preceding two years $3,063.91, which reduced by $480.03 the amount the court found was barred by the statute of limitations, which allowance, although erroneous, is not complained of, makes the amount of $2,583.88. The contentions of appellant in this regard are: (1) That the action was not commenced until June 4, 1912, the date of the filing of the amended complaint; and (2) that the contract was executed in the state of New Jersey and not in California.

At the time of the filing of the original complaint on January 17, 1912, the plaintiff corporation had not been assigned the claim of the Michelin Tire Company of New Jersey. This assignment did not take place until April 2, 1912, and the filing of the amended complaint setting forth this assignment on June 4, 1912, was the pleading of a new cause of action, but in the meantime the defendant company had entered into a stipulation in consideration of "mutual stipulations," whereby it stipulated:

"That the Michelin Tire Company of California may file an amended complaint in the above-entitled action upon the assigned claim of the Michelin Tire Company of New Jersey, and that the objection 'that the Michelin Tire Company of California was not the owner and holder of said claim, or of any claim, against the defendants or either of them at the time of the commencement of the above-entitled action,' shall be for the purposes of the further prosecution of this action waived, in consideration of, and subject to the conditions hereinbefore expressed. That no objection to the prosecution of this action will be made by defendants, or either of them, on the ground that the Michelin Tire Company of California is not the owner and holder of said claim against the defendants, or either of them, at the time of the commencement of the above-entitled action."

The court in this regard found that the defendants had waived the objection:

"That the Michelin Tire Company of California was not the owner and holder of said claim or any claim against the defendants or either of them at the time of the commencement of this action."

In view of the fact that the Michelin Tire Company of California was but a subsidiary domestic corporation of the Michelin Tire Company of New Jersey, its stock being held by the New Jersey corporation, organized as a California branch for the better distribution of its wares; that all contracts save the original contract were entered into between the California corporation and Coleman & Bentel, and the latter company was being supplied in part and making settlements at times through this branch as well as with the parent corporation; and that we may assume that a desire for fair dealing and an equitable adjustment of the differences between the respective parties moved them—it is hard to believe that the stipulation was intended to mean anything else than what it says, and that the minds fairly met, and having accepted the benefits of the stipulation defendants are bound by the fair and not reserved interpretation of its terms. The trial court so held, and we will not disturb its finding in this regard. The fact that the action was instituted on January 17, 1912, coupled with the stipulation waiving whatever objection might have been made to the amendment of the cause of action originally pleaded and which plainly permitted the prosecution and defense of the action upon the amended pleading on the theory that the original cause of action was still extant and being litigated, suffices, we think, to toll the statute of limitations.

[4] The second contention of appellant is that the contract first entered into between the parties was executed in New Jersey instead of in California, and therefore the two-year bar of the statute of limitations applies. The contract in question was prepared in Los Angeles, signed by the defendant company there and forwarded to the Michelin Tire Company of New Jersey at Milltown for acceptance. It contained a provision that it should not be binding until accepted by the Michelin Tire Company. Upon receipt of the contract at Milltown, the Michelin Tire Company, after making a substantial change in one of the provisions of the contract, signed the same and returned it to the defendant company with advice as to the change. Until this change had been approved, it was not the contract between the parties. The defendant company upon receipt of the contract as modified, by letter dated November 5, 1908, and mailed from Los Angeles, advised the Michelin Tire Company that it accepted the contract as modified. Under the authorities the contract was clearly executed in California, where the last act in its execution was performed. Ivey v. Kern County Land Co., 115 Cal. 196, 46 Pac. 926; Bank of Yolo v. Sperry Flour Co., 141 Cal. 314, 74 Pac. 855, 65 L. R. A. 90. The trial court correctly found in this regard.

The judgment is affirmed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Contest of the will of Isaac J. Ross, also known as I. J. Ross, deceased, propounded by B. F. Van Dyke and others, by T. F. Ross and W. J. Ross. From judgment for proponents, contestants appeal. Reversed.

Mastick & Partridge and H. F. Chadbourne, all of San Francisco, and J. W. Dignan, of Oakland, for appellants.

Driver & Driver, of Sacramento, and John L. McNab, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of court upon verdict of a jury in favor of proponents in a contest of the will of Isaac J. Ross, deceased.

There was a former appeal, in which this court reversed a judgment entered after the sustaining of a motion for nonsuit. Estate of Ross, 173 Cal. 178, 159 Pac. 603. At the second trial the contestants introduced virtually the same testimony as that produced upon the previous hearing, and, as a summary thereof was given by Mr. Justice Henshaw in the opinion which appears in 173 California Reports, we refer to that opinion as containing a fair statement of the essential matters regarding which testimony was given for the contestants.

This testimony was opposed at the second trial by that of witnesses who stated their belief that Mr. Ross was of sound and disposing mind at the time of the testamentary act. Some of these witnesses were old friends who had known Mr. Ross long and intimately. Some of them visited him frequently during his last illness, and they testified that his mind was unusually bright and vigorous for one of his age, in spite of his great physical weakness. One witness was a nurse (not the one mentioned in the opinion on the former appeal), who gave it as her unqualified belief that before and at the time of the preparation and execution of the will her patient was of sound and disposing mind. Upon cross-examination, this witness (Mrs. Shinn) was asked about a written statement produced by counsel for contestants and purporting to have her signature at the end thereof. While admitting that she had signed a statement, she refused to admit without reservation that the name written on the document exhibited was her own, because, as she said, some of the letters did not look like her writing. She also expressed the belief that the statement shown to her in court contained more pages than the one to which her signature had been appended. Counsel who prepared the statement from Mrs. Shinn's dictation testified that the document offered by him was the very statement signed by the nurse. The last sentence of that writing, appearing just above the date and purported signature, was as follows:

"I do not believe that his mind was clear at all times, and he had spells when I do not think his mind was clear."

In an admittedly genuine letter written after the death of Mr. Ross, Mrs. Shinn (writing of her grandmother whom she was then nursing) used the following expression:

"Here is another such a case as Mr. Ross, only he seemed to have his right mind part of the time, and grandmother is entirely void of reason, which makes her case a great care."

In explanation of this statement, she testified:

"When I made reference in the letter that I wrote to Mr. Dignan to Mr. Ross not being right I thought Mr. Ross was in his right mind up to the last few days; I considered him of sound mind. The last two or three days he was kept under opiates. It was that time to which I alluded."

She also testified as follows:

"There was never any time there when I thought that his mind wandered at all, either night or day. I have never for an instant, either during the time that I was attending him or since his death, doubted at all the soundness of Mr. Ross's mind. I never expressed in conversation with anybody any doubt as to the soundness or unsoundness of Mr. Ross's mind. I often remarked how remarkable it was, how strong his mind was."

The testimony regarding the preparation of the will was given by Mrs. Shinn and by Mr. Van Dyke. From this it appears, in substance, that the testator, of his own motion, asked the nurse to send for Mr. Van Dyke, an attorney at law, who was a kinsman of Mr. Ross. She telephoned to Sacramento and left a message for the lawyer, and, in due course, in response to it, he came to San Leandro and to the home of the sick man. Mr. Ross indicated his wishes to the attorney, and told the nurse where to find certain of his notes, bonds, and other documents. On the first day the patient became very weary with the work of indicating his wishes to his counsel, and it became necessary to postpone further preparation of the testament until the next day, when the work was resumed. Testator did not express his wishes with reference to all of his property, nor did he desire the will to contain a residuary provision, but he stated his willingness to have that part of his estate not described in the will distributed according to statute, in the event that he should not dispose of it by codicil.

[1] From the foregoing, it will appear that the jury reached its verdict after considering sharply conflicting testimony, and a judgment based upon such a verdict will not be reversed unless we find substantial error of law in the trial. Numerous alleged errors are called to our attention, but we need consider only two, both relating to instructions. The court gave many instructions based upon decisions of this court in matters like the present, and these were in the main correct, although appellants assert that too great emphasis was devoted to the matter of the supposed inviolability of a will unless the incapacity of the testator should be well established.

[2-4] One of the instructions offered by contestants was the usual one relating to a witness who may have willfully testified falsely regarding any material fact and the jury's right to disregard the whole of the testimony of such a witness. This was refused, according to a note made upon it by the presiding judge, because the giving of it would be a repetition; yet the record does not disclose the giving of the same instruction, substantially or otherwise, at any place in the charge. This, appellants assert, in view of the contradictions in the testimony of Mrs. Shinn, was most serious error. Our attention is called to an unsuccessful effort made by proponents to show by suggested diminution of the record that the instruction or a similar one was given. Of course, we are bound by the record, and must hold that the omission asserted by appellants really occurred. It is settled law in California that the giving or refusing to give such an instruction does not constitute prejudicial error, unless injury is shown. People v. Russell, 19 Cal. App. 750, 127 Pac. 829; Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 242-245, 137 Pac. 1078; Poor v. W. P. Fuller & Co., 30 Cal. App. 650, 159 Pac. 233. In view of the fact that the testimony regarding the capacity or incapacity of the aged and bedridden testator was, for the most part, that of intimate acquaintances and relatives who radically differed upon the all-important question, and in view of the testimony of the nurse who attended him in his last illness (quotations from which we have made above), we think that the appellants were injured by the failure to give the instruction.

[5, 6] A serious error was committed by the court in giving the following instruction:

"The law requires that the person upon whom the burden of proving the insanity of a testator rests—in this case the contestant—shall prove it by a preponderance of evidence. By a preponderance of evidence is meant that amount of evidence which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, and only such evidence will justify a verdict that Isaac J. Ross was of unsound mind at the time he executed this instrument."

That the giving of a substantially identical instruction upon a similar issue was error this court held in People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 154 Pac. 468. That, to be sure, was a criminal case, but the reasoning applies to the case at bar, because, in effect, the jurors were told that they must uphold the probate of the will unless the ground of contest should be established to their satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt. See, also, Campbell v. Bradbury, 176 Pac. 685. It is argued that contestants themselves adopted the same false definition in the instructions which they proposed. For example, they requested the court to give an instruction to the effect that, if the jurors were "satisfied" that Isaac J. Ross was not of disposing mind when the will was executed, their verdict must be for the contestants. In other instructions offered, contestants used the expressions "believe and are satisfied, from and by the evidence," and "believe from the preponderance of the evidence." We do not think that these expressions amount to a concurrence in the definition as given. In other words, the rule announced in Ergo v. Merced Falls Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 334-340, 119 Pac. 101, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79, does not find proper application under the facts here disclosed. In that case the defendant had proposed and the court had given an instruction very much more injurious to its cause than the one to which it objected.

No other alleged errors require review or analysis.

The judgment is reversed.

DILLINGHAM et al. v. WELCH, County Tax Collector. (L. A. 5287.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1919.)

1. STATUTES ⇐184—CONSTRUCTION—PURPOSE OF LEGISLATURE.

A statute must be read in view of the evident purpose of its enactment.

2. HIGHWAYS ⇐107(1)—IMPROVEMENTS—PROCEEDINGS.

In proceedings under Road District Improvement Act of 1907, failure of specifications to establish grades of streets and avenues not to be improved did not, under section 2, providing that grades shall be specified for all roads, streets, etc., within district, deprive board of supervisors of jurisdiction to pass resolution of intention, in view of fact that specifications are to be for "work," and in view of the purpose of the act as expressed in title and section 1.

3. HIGHWAYS ⇐107(1)—CONSTRUCTION—DETAILS OF CONSTRUCTION—SPECIFICATION.

In proceedings under Road District Improvement Act of 1907, though as general rule specifications must definitely and with certainty describe the manner and extent of the work to be done, details of construction and cost ascertainable only by doing of work must be left to be adjusted by person or board supervising construction.

4. HIGHWAYS — 113(3) — CONSTRUCTION — VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

Contract for improvement of roads under Road District Improvement Act of 1907 was not invalid because of provision that "contractors must grade connections with intersecting roads to the satisfaction of the engineer employed by the commission;" such provision not rendering specifications defective because of indefiniteness.

5. HIGHWAYS — 113(3) — IMPROVEMENTS — NOTICE FOR BIDS.

In proceedings for improvements under Road District Improvement Act of 1907, where resolution of intention described work as "grading and oiling" of designated portions of certain streets and construction of cement sidewalks, etc., along sides of certain streets, notice inviting bids describing work as "grading, oiling and construction of cement sidewalks, curbs and gutters" along specified sides of certain streets, was not defective, particularly in view of reference therein to specifications on file.

6. HIGHWAYS — 113(4) — IMPROVEMENT — VALIDITY OF PROCEEDINGS — VERIFICATION OF DECLARATION — COMPLETION OF WORK.

In proceedings under Road District Improvement Act of 1907, the fact that the declaration of the completion of the work was not verified as required by section 10 was mere irregularity, not affecting jurisdiction of board of supervisors nor validity of assessment tax levied for purpose of meeting bonds issued.

7. HIGHWAYS — 99½, New, vol. 14 Key-No. Series — IMPROVEMENT — TRANSFER OF MONEY FROM COUNTY ROADS FUND.

In proceedings under Road District Improvement Act of 1907 the transfer of money from county road funds to special fund for payment of bonds was discretionary with board of supervisors, though it had announced its decision to do so in resolution of intention.

8. HIGHWAYS — 148 — IMPROVEMENT — ASSESSMENT — INJUNCTION.

In action to enjoin collection of special assessment tax levied to meet bonds issued under Road District Improvement Act of 1907, court will not interfere with board of supervisors' levy of assessment on ground that assessment is excessive, where it does not appear that plaintiff landowners were denied a hearing before board of supervisors.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by W. C. Dillingham and others against W. O. Welch, County Tax Collector of the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. J. Hill, County Counsel, and Edward T. Bishop, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles (Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Albert J. Sherer, Robert Young, and Hahn & Hahn, all of Los Angeles (Clarence J. Walker, of Los Angeles, of counsel), amici curiæ.

W. S. Knott and J. L. Fleming, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment whereby he is enjoined from collecting or enforcing a special assessment tax levied for the purpose of meeting bonds issued under the Road District Improvement Act of 1907.

The plaintiffs attacked upon several grounds the proceedings for the improvement of the roads which formed the basis and gave the alleged reason for the levy of the special assessment tax.

It was successfully contended by plaintiffs in the superior court that the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to pass the resolution of intention to do the work, because the specifications did not designate grades for all streets and avenues within the district. Section 2 of the Road District Improvement Act of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 807) provides as follows:

"Before passing any resolution of intention under this act, specifications for work substantially the same as that described in the resolution of intention and for a district substantially the same as that described in the resolution of intention shall be furnished by some competent person who shall have been designated by the board of supervisors for that purpose by a resolution to be entered by the clerk upon the minutes of said board, and, except where there is already an official grade thereof, as a part of such specifications, grades shall be specified for all roads, streets, avenues, boulevards, lanes and alleys within the described district so far as the same are within such district."

[1, 2] In the proceeding with which we are now concerned the specifications designated the grades of all roads within the district upon which work was to be done, but did not fix grades for other roads. This, according to the theory of respondents, was an omission fatal to the acquirement of jurisdiction by the board of supervisors. There is no merit in this contention, as will readily appear from a study of the statute. It will be noticed that the specifications are to be for "work" within the designated district. The fixing of the grades of streets to be improved (or if they had been previously fixed the ascertainment of their locations) would be a part of the work to be done. The establishing of the grades upon streets not to be improved under the proceedings would not be a part of the work. It is true that the statute does provide that as part of the specifications grades shall be designated for "all roads," etc., within the described district, but the statute, read as a whole, does not justify the interpretation which respondents seek to give to its language. The statute, like all statutes, must be read in view of the evident purpose of the Legislature in its enactment. That purpose was to insure the pre-existence of rational and proper grades when the physical work upon the roads to be improved should be actually undertaken. It was no part of the necessary work to fix or confirm grades upon roads not to be subject to the contemplated improvement. By the terms of the act itself, the establishment of grades is incidental to the work to be done. The title of the act of 1907, which we are here considering, is, in part, as follows:

"An act to provide for work upon public roads, streets, avenues, boulevards, lanes and alleys not within the territory of incorporated cities or towns; for the incidental establishment of grades thereof."

Section 1 vests in the board of supervisors power to do many acts for the improvement of roads; to establish districts; and "as incidental to the exercise" of these powers to establish official grades within said districts. The fixing of proper grades for streets or roads not contemplated in the work of improvement clearly would not be incidental to that work nor to the power of the board of supervisors in ordering it. A requirement for the fixing of grades for roads not to be improved would be utterly purposeless. The failure to establish such grades, therefore, did not deprive the board of supervisors of jurisdiction.

[3] Respondents insist that there is another defect disclosed by the record which is fatal to the validity of the proceedings. The specifications contain a provision that:

"The contractor shall without extra compensation grade according to the engineer's directions, a safe, proper and workmanlike connection with all intersecting public or private roads or driveways."

[4] It is contended that not only is this an unwarranted delegation of discretion by the board of supervisors to the engineer, but that it places him in a position to require a more onerous compliance with the specifications by one contractor than by another less favored. It is true that, as a general rule, specifications must definitely and with certainty describe the manner and extent of the work to be done. Such certainty is necessary for the benefit of the property owners in enabling them to determine whether or not they will themselves undertake the work, and also for the benefit of the bidders who, knowing just what may be required of them if successful, may compete intelligently for contracts. But the rule requiring definiteness of specification has an important exception

"There is a well-recognized exception to this rule in the case of details of construction which do not appear and cannot with reasonable diligence and cost be ascertained in advance, or which will be disclosed only by the doing of the work; or any contingency which reasonable care and consideration would not foresee. Such things may occur in every work of any considerable magnitude, and they must be left to be adjusted in accordance with general provisions of the contract, or by the discretion of the person or board supervising its performance. Examples of such details, and of lawful provisions for their determination, were considered in Haughwout v. Hubbard, 131 Cal. 679 (63 Pac. 1078), Belser v. Allman, 134 Cal. 400 (66 Pac. 492), Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 106 (65 Pac. 309); Haughwout v. Raymond, 148 Cal. 311 (83 Pac. 53), Chase v. Scheerer, 136 Cal. 251 (66 Pac. 768), and McCaleb v. Dreyfus, 156 Cal. 204 (103 Pac. 924). Of the provisions objected to in this case, the following come within this class and do not invalidate the contract. The contractor must grade the connections with intersecting roads to the satisfaction of the engineer employed by the commission."

This quoted exception well applies to the problem before us, and is a sufficient answer to the contention of respondents with reference to the specifications which they attack. In addition to the authorities cited in the above quotation, appellant aptly refers to Thoits v. Byxbee, 34 Cal. App. 226, 232, 167 Pac. 166; Stanwood v. Carson, 169 Cal. 640, 649, 147 Pac. 562; Burnham v. Abrahamson, 21 Cal. App. 248, 258, 131 Pac. 338.

[5] Respondents also assert that there was no sufficient notice inviting bids. This is based upon the fact that while the resolution of intention and the resolution ordering the work done described it as "grading and oiling" of designated portions of certain streets and "the construction of cement sidewalks five feet in width, cement curbs and cement gutters" along specified sides of certain streets, the notice inviting sealed bids described the contemplated work as "the grading, oiling and construction of cement sidewalks, curbs and gutters on certain streets near the town of Bairdstown." It is asserted that this notice limited the work to sidewalks, curbs, and gutters, did not embrace grading and oiling of streets, and, therefore, was misleading to intending bidders. Such construction of the notice involves a forced interpretation of its language, but any ambiguity that may have inhered in the language taken by itself would disappear in view of the facts that the notice specifically announced that the work was to be done "according to the specifications on file therefor," that said specifications were by reference made a part of the notice, and that they were on file at the office of the board and "open to inspection of bidders."

[6] Another of the contentions of the respondents was that the tax and bonds are invalid because the declaration of the completion of the work was not verified. Section 10 of the Road District Improvement Act of 1907 provides that as soon as it may be done in good faith, there shall be filed with the clerk of the board of supervisors a declaration that the work has been completed according to contract. There is a provision that this shall be signed and verified by the superintendent of the work, and by the contractor or by some person who knows the facts, signing on the latter's behalf. There is a further provision that:

"Either signer may except from his signature and verification any amount or item to which he does not assent."

While, of course, orderly procedure should have been followed, and while it is desirable that the superintendent and the contractor should be made to assume the responsibility of certifying to the facts, by verified writings, their failure so to do amounts to an irregularity which does not affect the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors, nor the substantial rights of the parties to this controversy. The very fact that under the law either may omit verification as to any item emphasizes the directory character of the provision. Cake v. City of Los Angeles, 164 Cal. 705, 130 Pac. 723. In Petaluma Rock Co. v. Smith, 23 Cal. App. 100, 137 Pac. 290, it was held that, under the more liberal rules now operating with reference to street work and similar public improvements, the fact that the superintendent of streets did not sign the assessment for street improvements did not deprive the contractor of his right to a lien. Upon like principles we are constrained to hold against the respondents on this point. There is nothing in the opinion in Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Costa, 171 Cal. 138, 152 Pac. 296, which conflicts with this conclusion. In that case it was held that as a condition precedent to the power of a bidder to enter into a contract he must attach to his bid an affidavit that it is not a sham offer, and that he intends no fraud nor collusion. In the case at bar there was nothing in the requirement for an affidavit which went at all to the jurisdiction of the board. The affidavit is not even made prima facie evidence at the hearing upon all matters regarding the work which follows the declaration of completion.

[7] Complaint is made that the board of supervisors failed to transfer any money from the county road funds to the special funds for the payment of the bonds, although in the resolution of intention the board had announced the decision so to do. Appellant aptly answers this complaint by saying that the bondholders cannot exercise the discretion of the board, and should not be made responsible for any failure to transfer funds. The transfer or failure to transfer money from the general road fund is purely within the board's discretion, because that body is given power and it is made the duty of said board "in any event" to levy a special tax to meet the principal and interest of the bonds. This contemplates a situation in which the board should, in the exercise of its judgment, decline to transfer moneys from the general road funds.

[8] Respondents assert that the assessment is so grossly excessive as to amount to confiscation of the property in the district. The contract for the work was let in 1911. The bonds were issued in November, 1914, and were payable in five years. It appears that the assessed value of the real property in the road district for 1915 was $28,420. The aggregate amount for which the bonds were issued was $24,258.43, and the argument is made that if the other roads in the district were improved at the same cost per linear foot the total indebtedness would far exceed the value of the land assessed. This argument goes into the realm of speculation whither we may not follow. The act of 1907 has been held to be constitutional. Under that act the right of the owners of real property to a hearing before the board of supervisors is protected. The ad valorem system of assessment is also upheld. Thomas v. Pridham, 171 Cal. 98, 153 Pac. 933. It is not shown by the pleadings or otherwise that a hearing was denied plaintiffs. Under the principles announced in Thomas v. Pridham, supra, and the authorities there cited, we may not interfere with the determination of the board of supervisors in the levying of the assessment.

No other alleged errors require discussion. The judgment is reversed.

ARMSTRONG v. SACRAMENTO VALLEY REALTY CO. et al. (QUATMAN, Intervener). (Sac. 2883, 2884.)

1. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT ¶2—CONTRACT.

A contract, purporting to be an arrangement whereby, in consideration of recognition and readjustment of the relative contractual rights and obligations, the pre-existing legal controversies involving such rights and obligations, and resulting in a judgment, are definitely settled, is one of compromise.

2. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT ¶20(1)—EFFECT OF PARTIAL PERFORMANCE.

Partial performance of an agreement of compromise makes the agreement an effective extinguishment of the antecedent obligation; the only thing remaining to be done being capable of performance and merely relating to an incidental provision as to appraisalment of land to be conveyed.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Glenn County; William M. Finch, Judge.

Action by W. S. Armstrong against the Sacramento Valley Realty Company and others, Letitia Barreta Quatman intervening. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants and intervener appeal. On motion to dismiss appeals. Appeals dismissed.

W. T. Belieu, of Willow, for appellants. Frank Freeman and George R. Freeman, both of Willow, for respondent.

LENNON, J. From the record before us upon two motions to dismiss pending and independent appeals of the defendants and intervener in the above-entitled action the following uncontroverted facts appear: By the action plaintiff sought and secured a judgment against the defendants in the sum of $827.20. The intervener claimed to have some interest in the money in suit, but the trial court found to the contrary, and entered judgment accordingly. The plaintiff's cause of action arose out of a written contract of purchase and sale, whereby the defendants, as parties of the first part, agreed to pay in designated installments to plaintiff, as party of the second part, certain moneys aggregating $25,000 as part payment of the purchase price of plaintiff's right, title, and interest in and to certain described real property situate in the counties of Glenn and Colusa. The action was one of 20 similar suits instituted against the defendants for the recovery of the several installments of the purchase price of the said property. The judgment appealed from was entered on the 8th day of October, 1915. The intervener and defendants gave their notices of appeal respectively on the 15th and 23d days of November, 1915. Thereafter, to wit, on April 27, 1917, and while proceedings for the settlement of a bill of exceptions were pending in the court below, the plaintiff, as the party of the first part, and the defendants and the intervener, as parties of the second part, entered into another contract in writing, which, after reciting the fact of the rendition and entry of the judgment appealed from, and that the parties thereto had agreed upon the sum of $17,796.01, to be paid to plaintiff in settlement of the controversy involved in the judgment and the other actions arising out of the original contract of purchase and sale, proceeded to provide, in consideration of such agreed settlement, that of the sum total agreed upon the defendants and intervener would pay the sum of $5,000 in cash immediately upon the execution by the plaintiff of the contract of settlement and the balance of $12,796.01 in land which was to be selected and taken from certain designated and described parcels of land. The contract further provided that within five days after the payment by the defendants of the $5,000 in cash the parties were to submit a list of the names of 15 persons from whom, according to a formula prescribed in the contract, three persons were to be selected as the appraisers of the land which was to be conveyed pursuant to the terms of the contract. The plaintiff executed the contract, and in keeping with its terms and within the time designated therein, the defendants made the $5,000 payment in cash. Subsequently, in keeping with the procedure provided in the contract, three appraisers were selected to value the lands which were to be conveyed in satisfaction of the remainder of the obligation due to the plaintiff. Ultimately, and before any appraisal was made or attempted, one of the appraisers refused to act, and it appears that since then the defendants and intervenor are unwilling to join with plaintiff in the selection of a third appraiser. Because of this halt in the making of the required appraisal, and the consequent failure to fully perform the contract, the plaintiff has instituted an action for the specific performance of the second agreement, and here urges as one of the grounds of the motion to dismiss the appeals that by the contract in controversy the pre-existing dispute involved in the judgments appealed from was superseded and extinguished, and that as a consequence no question remains in the pending appeals for determination by this court.

[1,2] We have not been furnished by any of the parties with points and authorities, but our own research satisfies us that the plaintiff's contention is well taken, and must result in a dismissal of the appeals on the grounds stated. The law favors and encourages compromises and settlements of controversies made in or out of court, and the contract in question here clearly comes within the definition of an agreement of compromise, for it plainly purports to be an arrangement whereby, in consideration of the recognition and readjustment of the relative contractual rights and obligations of the parties, the pre-existing legal controversy involving such rights and obligations and ultimately resulting in a judgment for the plaintiff was definitely settled. Flegal v. Hoover, 156 Pa. 276, 27 Atl. 162; Bandman v. Finn, 185 N. Y. 508, 78 N. E. 175, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1134. In other words, "It was a new contract (Civ. Code, secs. 1531, 1679) for which the original contract or the performance thereof by the defendants furnished the consideration (Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60 [15 Pac. 371]), and became in the absence of legal impeachment in itself an agreement conclusive upon both parties," and one which operated as a merger and bar of all included claims and pre-existing causes of action (Griswold v. Pieratt, 110 Cal. 259, 42 Pac. 820; Whipple v. Baker, 85 Ark. 441, 108 S. W. 830) and as a consequence settled and ended the previous dispute between the parties evidenced by and merged in the judgment appealed from. The agreement in question, being a voluntary settlement of the controversy made during the pendency of an appeal from a judgment embodying the controversy, it became as binding and effective upon all of the parties as the judgment itself would have been had it become final (Oglesby v. Attrill, 105 U. S. 605, 26 L. Ed. 1186; State ex rel., etc., v. Superior Court, 60 Wash. 187, 110 Pac. 808; Adle v. Prudhomme, 16 La. Ann. 343), and therefore it must be held that the agreement of compromise and settlement extinguished the judgment, and that any subsequent remedy of the parties with reference to the matters included therein must be based upon the compromise agreement alone. And this is so, notwithstanding the fact that the agreement in question was only partially performed by the defendants and intervenors. The partial performance of an agreement of compromise, which is an integral part of the agreement, will suffice to make the agreement an effective extinguishment of the antecedent obligation upon which it was founded, where, as here, the only thing remaining to be done is capable of performance and relates merely to an incidental provision of the agreement covering the appraisal of land designated in the agreement to be conveyed in keeping with the terms of the settlement. Cogswell et al. v. Cogswell, 70 Wash. 178, 126 Pac. 431. The appeals are dismissed.

1. MONOPOLIES §29 — OFFENSES — FIXING PRICE OF BREAD—"CONSPIRACY AGAINST TRADE."

It was a "conspiracy against trade" under St. 1907, p. 984, for wholesale bakers to enter into an agreement, whereby they fixed the retail price of bread to be sold by them to retailers, and agreed not to sell to any retailer who did not maintain such price.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Conspiracy against Trade.]

2. MONOPOLIES §31 — OFFENSES — INDICTMENT.

An indictment for conspiracy against trade under St. 1907, p. 984, as amended by St. 1909, p. 593, need not allege that a combination or agreement did not come within the permissive scope of the proviso in the amendment of 1909.

3. MONOPOLIES §31—OFFENSES—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In prosecution for conspiracy against trade under St. 1907, p. 984, as amended by St. 1909, p. 593, where state showed that defendants, wholesale bakers, had entered into agreement whereby they fixed retail price of bread to be sold by them to retailers and agreed that they would not sell bread to retailers who did not maintain such price, to come under the permissive clause of the proviso of 1909, the burden was on defendants to show that maintenance of a fixed retail price would have a tendency to so stabilize trade conditions as to better enable the wholesalers to realize a fair profit on their own transactions.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⚖️683(1)—EVIDENCE—REBUTTAL.

In a prosecution under St. 1907, p. 984, as amended by St. 1909, p. 593, against wholesale bakers for conspiracy against trade, where defendants introduced evidence to show the cost of manufacturing to excuse themselves under the proviso of the amendment of 1909, it was not error to permit the prosecution on rebuttal to show that the cost of production of other bakers under more or less parallel conditions was less than the figures shown by the defendant.

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⚖️396(1)—EVIDENCE MADE COMPETENT BY ADVERSARY'S EVIDENCE.

Where an accused introduced evidence as to an immaterial matter, he could not preclude the prosecution from meeting the showing voluntarily made.

The H. Jevne Company and others were convicted of a conspiracy against trade. From a judgment of conviction and an order denying their motion for new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

E. R. Young and Goodwin & Morgrage, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SLOSS, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment convicting them of a "conspiracy against trade," as defined by the statute of 1907, commonly known as the Cartwright Act. Stats. 1907, p. 984; amended, Stats. 1909, p. 593. They also appeal from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Section 1 of the act, as originally enacted, reads as follows:

"A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, or of any two or more of them for either, any or all of the following purposes:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"2. To limit or reduce the production, or increase or reduce the price of merchandise or of any commodity.

"3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or any commodity.

"4. To fix at any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer shall be in any manner controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state.

"5. To make or enter into or execute or carry out any contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they shall bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport any article or any commodity or any article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure, or fixed value, or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as to directly or indirectly preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, or any purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, or by which they shall agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests that they may have connected with the sale or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Every such trust as is defined herein is declared to be unlawful, against public policy and void."

The changes made by the amendment of 1909 included the addition to section 1 of the following:

"Provided that no agreement, combination or association shall be deemed to be unlawful or within the provisions of this act, the object and business of which are to conduct its operations at a reasonable profit or to market at a reasonable profit those products which cannot otherwise be so marketed."

The indictment was in three counts, by means of which the pleader undertook to set up different statements of the same offense. Briefly stated, the charge was that the defendants, who were severally engaged, in the business of baking bread and selling the same at wholesale to retail dealers in the county of Los Angeles, made and entered into a trust, combination, and conspiracy with each other and with other persons, to fix the price at which retail bread dealers should sell 24-ounce loaves of bread to consumers, such price being fixed at 15 cents per loaf, and to require and force the retail dealers to whom bread was sold by them to sell to the public at a price of not less than 15 cents for each 24-ounce loaf; and that said defendants further agreed that they would refuse to sell any bread to any retail dealer who refused to maintain said price. The indictment sets forth the commission of various acts in furtherance of such agreement.

The present appeals were first heard in the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District, and the judgment and order appealed from were there affirmed. An order was subsequently made transferring the cause to this court for hearing and determination.

In the argument before the Court of Appeal, counsel for the defendants directed their efforts, in large part, to an attack upon the constitutionality of the act under which the prosecution was had. That court gave full consideration to the points made in this regard, and answered them to such effect that the appellants, in seeking a hearing in this court, abandoned their former position and conceded the validity of the statute. We may therefore omit any discussion of this question, which was one of the principal points of contention on the earlier presentation of the appeal.

[1] It is also unnecessary, for the purposes of the present case, to follow counsel into another field of debate which is treated with some elaboration in the briefs. Much is there said regarding the proper construction of the act. But the act, however it be interpreted, does undoubtedly prohibit, subject, of course, to the provisos of the amendment of 1909, any combination of capital, skill, or acts by two or more persons for the purpose of increasing the price of any commodity (section 1, subd. 2), or fixing at any figure, whereby its price to the consumer shall be controlled, any article intended for sale or consumption (section 1, subd. 4), or to make or carry out any agreements by which they shall bind themselves to keep the price of such article at a fixed or graduated figure (section 1, subd. 5). Nor will it be doubted that all or, at least, some of these prohibitions are violated by an agreement between wholesale bakers, whereby they fix the retail price of bread to be sold by them to retailers at 15 cents per loaf, and agree that they will not sell bread to any retailer who does not maintain such price. The making and carrying out of such a combination was clearly and directly charged in the indictment, and it is not claimed that there was a lack of evidence to support the accusation.

With the elimination of the questions to which we have referred, little remains to be considered, except the effect of the above-quoted proviso added to section 1 by the amendment of 1909. That proviso declares that no agreement, combination, or association shall be deemed to be unlawful "the object and business of which are to conduct its operations at a reasonable profit or to market at a reasonable profit those products which cannot otherwise be so marketed."

[2] The appellants contend that the indictment was defective, and that their demurrer thereto should have been sustained, for the want of an allegation that the combination or agreement set forth did not come within the permissive scope of this proviso. There is no uncertainty in the law governing the necessity of alleging, in an indictment or information, that the accused does not come within exceptions or provisos contained in the statute authorizing the prosecution. As is frequently the case, the difficulty lies rather in the application than in the enunciation of the rule. The question was carefully considered, and clearly expounded, in Ex parte Hornef, 154 Cal. 355, 97 Pac. 891. It was there said:

"Such exceptions and provisos were to be negative in the pleading only where they are descriptive of the offense or define it, and that where they afford matter of excuse merely, they are to be relied on in defense."

Hornef had been prosecuted for practicing dentistry without the license required by the act of 1901. Stats. 1901, p. 564. By a proviso in section 1 of that act it was declared that the requirement of a license was not to apply to dentists who had the right to practice at the time of the passage of the act. The holding was that it was not necessary to allege in the complaint that the accused was not within the class so excepted. Similarly, it has been held that an indictment for bigamy need not negative the existence of facts making applicable a proviso that the statute shall not extend to a person marrying without knowledge that a former husband or wife, who has been absent from the state for a given number of years is still alive (State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60, 67 Am. Dec. 754; State v. Gallagher, 20 R. I. 266, 38 Atl. 655; People v. Priestley, 17 Cal. App. 171, 118 Pac. 965); that an indictment for unlawful sale of certain drugs need not negative an exception in favor of druggists selling on a physician's prescription (State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 50, 40 Am. Rep. 488); and that it is not necessary to exclude the exception in an accusation under a statute making it an offense to engage in labor on Sunday, with the proviso that the act shall not extend to those who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. Billigheimer v. State, 32 Ohio St. 435. These cases, and others of like purport, are cited and discussed in Ex parte Hornef, supra. On the other hand, it is essential, in a charge of rape, to allege that the female upon whom the act was accomplished was not the wife of the perpetrator (People v. Miles, 9 Cal. App. 312, 101 Pac. 525), or, in a charge of the offense described in section 288 of the Penal Code, to aver that the act was not one of those "constituting other crimes provided for in part two of this Code" (People v. Grinnell, 9 Cal. App. 238, 98 Pac. 681). In each of the last two cases the exception manifestly formed a part of the definition of the offense. Whether a particular accusation falls within this class or that illustrated by Ex parte Hornef is often a nice question. In the present instance, we agree with the District Court of Appeal in the view that the proviso under discussion does not go to the definition of the offense, but that it creates rather an exception, exempting from the operation of the general terms of the statute persons who have committed the prohibited act for a specified purpose. The existence of such purpose affords, therefore, "matter of excuse merely," and is to be relied on in defense.

[3] The appellants contend, further, that the evidence is insufficient to support the implied finding that the combination or agreement charged was not one of those excluded from the purview of the act by the proviso of 1909. This issue was presented to the jury under instructions directing them to return a verdict of not guilty if they should find that the combination or agreement charged had been made with one or the other of the objects specified in the amendment. The record shows that the defendants fixed a wholesale price of 12 cents per loaf. This left to the retailers, selling at 15 cents, a profit of 3 cents per loaf, or 20 per cent. of their selling price. Much evidence was presented by the defendants to show that this rate of profit is little, if at all, more than the actual expense of conducting the retail trade, and that the profit to the retailer could not, accordingly, have been an unreasonable one. If we assume, as the appellants contend, that the evidence on this point was without conflict, the showing still fails to meet the requirements of the case. It is to be remembered that the defendants are wholesale dealers in bread. They are charged with combining to fix, not the price which they, as such wholesalers, were to receive for their product, but that to be obtained from the ultimate consumer by the retailers to whom they sold. The proviso added to the statute authorizes an agreement or combination with the object of conducting its operations at a reasonable profit, or marketing certain products at a reasonable profit. This provision manifestly contemplates a profit sought by the persons entering into the combination, not the profit of their customers or vendees. As applied to the case at bar, the amendment goes no further than to authorize wholesale dealers in bread to combine for the purpose of realizing a reasonable profit in their own dealings. It does not assume to legalize a combination or agreement entered into by them with the object of securing a reasonable profit to the retailers who may buy from them. It may be that the maintenance of a fixed retail price will have a tendency to so stabilize trade conditions as to better enable the wholesalers to realize a fair profit on their own transactions. But if such an inference may be drawn, the evidence in this case does not compel it. It cannot be said that the testimony shows conclusively that the fixing of a retail price of 15 cents per loaf was a necessary or proper step in accomplishing the purpose of securing a reasonable profit to the wholesalers as such.

[4, 5] There is no occasion to consider whether the evidence warrants the conclusion that the price of 12 cents, fixed by the defendants as the charge to be made by them to retailers, afforded any more than a reasonable profit on their wholesale transactions. As we have pointed out, the indictment was not based upon the fixing of a price at which they were to sell at wholesale, but upon the establishment of a retail price of 15 cents to which their customers were to be compelled to conform. It may have been proper, however, for the defendants to show the cost of manufacture, as one of the elements which the jury might consider in determining the ultimate question of the purpose of the combination or agreement charged. The defendants went into this matter very fully in their defense. It was not error, therefore, to permit the prosecution, on rebuttal, to show that the cost of production of other bakers, under more or less parallel conditions, was less than the figure shown by the testimony of the defendants. If this inquiry was immaterial, it was opened up by the defendants themselves, and they could not preclude the prosecution from meeting the showing which they had voluntarily made. 4 C. J. 703, 704. At any rate, the rulings complained of could not, in view of the nature of the charge, have worked any substantial prejudice.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT $\S$ 106(8)—DEFAULT—FAILURE TO PLEAD.

Where plaintiff, an employé of a corporation, purchased stock from main stockholders, and gave his notes therefor, and later sued to recover part of stock paid for, an answer, designated as defense "by way of a counterclaim and cross-complaint," and setting up that all the stock purchased was to be held as security for payment of the notes, recovery on which was sought, was a counterclaim, and not a cross-complaint, and default was improperly entered against plaintiff, as he would be deemed to have denied the answer.

2. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 120 — TRANSFER OF SHARES—OPTION TO REPURCHASE.

Where the principal stockholders of a corporation sold shares to an employé under agreement that, if employé died or left the service, shares not paid for should revert to sellers, and that sellers should have the option to repur-chase shares paid for, the reversion took place on termination of employment without exercise of option.

3. CORPORATIONS — 116 — TRANSFER OF SHARES—PURCHASE PRICE OF STOCK.

Where a contract provided for the sale of 4,720 shares of stock at a price of $3,750, the price paid per share was 80 cents, notwithstanding that the par value was $1 a share, and that a former superseded agreement named a purchase price of $1 a share.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Frederick C. Hanson against Ellen S. Brininstool and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and from judgment and order denying new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

George W. McDill, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robt. T. Linney and Gordon L. Finley, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff brought this action to compel the defendants to transfer to him 2,096 shares of the capital stock of the Brininstool Company, a corporation, or to pay him their value, and to surrender two promissory notes executed by plaintiffs to defendants. We shall, for the purpose of simplifying the discussion, treat the defendants as jointly interested to the extent of the entire matter in controversy, although the complaint did not seek the same relief against each.

Prior to January, 1912, the defendants had been conducting business as partners. The plaintiff had been in the employ of the firm, receiving a salary and 5 per cent. of the net profits. It was decided to form a corporation to carry on the business, and an understanding was reached for the acquisition by plaintiff of an interest in the new corporation. Subsequently, the plaintiff and the defendants executed a written agreement, dated November 19, 1912, providing for the sale, by defendants to plaintiff, on terms which we shall have occasion to set forth hereinafter, of a number of shares of the capital stock of the Brininstool Company, a corporation to be organized. This agreement was superseded by a second one, dated January 31, 1913. This second contract, which is annexed to the complaint, and is made the basis of the present action, provided that the defendants should sell and the plaintiff buy 4,720 shares of the stock, at the agreed price of $3,750. The plaintiff was to pay to the defendants, by order upon the corporation, all moneys due and owing by the corporation to him on January 31, 1913, as part payment, and the balance was to be paid by all dividends earned and payable on said 4,720 shares, and by the payment of all salary, over and above $150 per month, paid to the plaintiff by the corporation. It was agreed that the 4,720 shares should be delivered to the defendants as security for the payment of the purchase price, and held by them until payment was made in full. But the agreement further provided that if Hanson should leave the service of the corporation, or should die, before the purchase price was fully paid, the defendants should have a 60 days' option to purchase such number of shares as might then have been fully paid for—

"at the inventory price * * * obtaining at the last fiscal period; and, further, that any and all stock not then fully paid for shall immediately revert to, and become the property of, the said second parties [defendants] * * * without cost or expense, and this agreement, ipso facto, shall then terminate, and there shall be no further claim against the said second parties; * * * it being understood * * * that part of the consideration for this agreement, during its existence, shall be the continuous and faithful performance of personal service to the corporation hereinbefore mentioned on the part of the said first party [the plaintiff] herein."

The complaint, to which a copy of this agreement was annexed, alleged that at the time the contract was made the plaintiff paid to the defendants on account of the purchase price the sum of $970 in the manner specified in the contract, and that, on February 15, 1913, he paid them in like manner the sum of $1,126. On the last-named date, he executed his promissory notes to the defendants for $2,624, which, it will be observed, was the difference between $3,750, the purchase price specified in the agreement, and $1,126, the amount of the payment made on February 15th. It was further alleged that the plaintiff had left the employment of the corporation, and that the defendants had not exercised their option to purchase the stock for which he had paid. He demanded of them the surrender of his notes and the transfer of 2,096 shares of stock, which demand was refused.

It will not be necessary to set forth the denials and averments made by the defendants in their pleading. The court made findings in substantial accord with the contentions of the plaintiff, and entered judgment, requiring the defendants to turn over to him 2,175 shares of the stock and the notes.

On motion for a new trial the court made a conditional order, pursuant to which the plaintiff consented to have the number of shares which he was to receive under the judgment reduced to 2,000. Thereupon the motion for a new trial was denied. The de-defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The appellants make a number of points, but the important questions are but two.

[1] First. The defendants argue that, under the terms of the agreement, they were entitled to hold all of the stock as security for the purchase price, and the plaintiff was not entitled to any shares until said price was paid in full. By two subdivisions of their pleading, each of which is designated as a further and separate defense "and by way of a counterclaim and cross-complaint," the defendants assert this position, and seek to recover on the notes given to them by the plaintiff. On this pleading the defendants had plaintiff's default entered. But we think the matter so pleaded was properly treated by the court as a counterclaim, and not as a cross-complaint. In this aspect its allegations were deemed denied, and the default had no effect.

[2] The right of the defendants to hold all of the stock as security turns upon the construction of the written agreement. On behalf of the defendants it is argued that the obligation to pay for all of the stock continued, notwithstanding the termination of plaintiff's connection with the corporation. They interpret the contract to mean that the provision that all stock not paid for should revert to and become the property of the defendants was to be applicable only in the event that defendants exercised their option to repurchase the shares which had been paid for. If this be the correct view, the plaintiff still remained bound to pay the balance due on the stock, and the defendants had a right to hold all the shares as security for such balance. But we do not so read the agreement. In the event of the termination of plaintiff's relations with the corporation, the contract gives to the defendants the option of acquiring "at inventory price" the shares already paid for by the plaintiff. The further provision that the shares not then paid for shall become the property of the defendants is absolute. It is not made dependent upon the exercise of any option. The whole agreement, and particularly the last clause quoted above, shows that one of the reasons for allowing the plaintiff to acquire the stock was the expectation and belief that he would continue in the service of the corporation. Accordingly, it was provided that if he should leave such service, or should die, he should not be entitled to receive any shares beyond those for which he had made payment, and that the defendants might, if they desired, repurchase even those. Their failure to exercise the option did not affect the independent provision that the plaintiff's right to acquire further shares should cease, and that the shares which he had contracted to buy, but had not yet paid for, should revert to the defendants. With such reversion, the obligation to pay the purchase price, of course, fell and the notes given for such unpaid purchase price ceased to be binding.

[3] Second. The other disputed question turns on the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings with reference to the amount which plaintiff had paid on the contract at the time he left the employ of the corporation. The plaintiff's theory, embodied in his complaint, was that the contract was for the purchase of 4,720 shares at the agreed price of $1 per share; that $970, due him at the time the contract was made, was then credited as a part payment, leaving a balance of $3,750 to be paid. It was conceded that $1,126, was paid thereafter. The defendants' claim, on the other hand, was that the contract was one for the sale of 4,720 shares at a total price of $3,750 (or about 80 cents per share), and that there was not any payment of $970, as alleged by the plaintiff and found by the court. The claim of the appellants seems to be in precise accord with the terms of the writing, which declares expressly that Hanson agrees to buy and the Brininstools agree to sell 4,720 shares at the agreed price of $3,750. Both the agreement of January 31, 1913, and the agreement of November, 1912, are vague and confused in phraseology. So, too, the evidence on which plaintiff relies is far from clear. Without undertaking to state or to analyze in detail the elaborate terms of the two contracts, we may summarize our understanding of the situation disclosed by the record, as follows: The plan of incorporating the business and giving Hanson an interest in it was first broached in 1911. No written contract was made at that time, but the understanding apparently was that a company should be formed at the beginning of 1912 with such number of shares, of the par value of $1 each, as would represent the actual value of the net assets. Hanson was to purchase 5 per cent. of such shares. For some reason, the consummation of the plan was delayed. The first written agreement was made in November, 1912, and the corporation was not formed until January, 1913. The first writing provided for the sale to Hanson of 3,750 shares, "more or less," and was based upon an estimated value of the corporate assets of $75,000, as of January 1, 1912. Five per cent. of this would be $3,750, and this represented the amount of the capital stock which Hanson was to receive. The corporation not having yet been formed, however, provision was made in the contract of November, 1912, for protecting Hanson's 5 per cent. interest in the profits of the partnership during the year elapsing before the incorporation. It was therefore provided that he was to receive, for the $3,750, such additional number of shares as would be represented by 5 per cent. of the net profits of the corporation during the year 1912. These profits were not divided, but were turned over to the corporation when formed, as a part of its capital. Its net capital at the time of its organization in January, 1913, amounted to some $98,000. The corporation was formed with a capital stock of 100,000 shares, of the par value of $1 each. The second agreement gave to Hanson the right to purchase 4,720 shares, which, assuming the stock to be worth par, represented, approximately, a 5 per cent. interest in the corporation, as it stood on January 1, 1913. This interest he was still to purchase for $3,750, so that the second agreement followed out, substantially, the plan of the first, the only difference being that while the first prescribed the method for determining the additional number of shares which should come to him by reason of the profits of the year 1912, the second agreement was made after these profits had been ascertained, and it had thus become possible to determine and specify the number of shares. The first agreement states that the stock is to be bought at $1 per share. The second does not contain this provision. But, in fact, neither agreement, when all its terms are considered, contemplates a purchase at that price. Each provides for a purchase of such number of shares as shall represent a 5 per cent. interest in the property of the corporation on January 1, 1913, for the sum of $3,750. In so far, then, as any profits were turned over to the corporation as a part of its capital, and remained undivided among the stockholders, Hanson obtained his interest in them by being permitted to purchase an additional number of shares in the corporation without further payment of money. Under the second agreement, payment for the stock was to be made to the defendants out of dividends payable on the 4,720 shares, and from the salary of Hanson, by orders on the corporation. It is not claimed that the $970 in dispute was ever paid to defendants. It remained in the corporation as a part of its assets. We are unable to see, therefore, how a finding that anything had been paid on the stock, except the $1,126 above referred to, can be upheld. This being so, there is no sufficient foundation for the original judgment, awarding to plaintiff 2,175 shares, nor yet for the modified judgment for 2,000 shares. It also follows from the foregoing discussion that finding 4, to the effect that plaintiff purchased these shares of the defendants at the agreed price of $1 per share, cannot stand.

The other points made by the appellants are of minor importance, and do not affect the substantial merits of the controversy.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

1. PUBLIC LANDS 117 — PATENTS — COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Defendant in action to quiet title cannot set up as a defense the invalidity of a patent under which plaintiff claimed, as patents to land can be attacked only on direct proceeding.

2. PLEADING 349—JUDGMENT ON PLEADINGS—ADMISSIONS.

In action to quiet title, since the invalidity of a patent could not be set up as a defense, judgment was properly rendered for plaintiffs on the pleadings, where a specific denial of plaintiffs' ownership was accompanied in the same answer by admissions and allegations which made it plain that if a patent set up by plaintiffs was valid, they were the owners of the property in question.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action by Josephine M. Hamman and others against Charles Milne and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Stutsman & Stutsman, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Wm. A. Barnhill, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an action to quiet title. The appeal, based on the judgment roll alone, is from a judgment on the pleadings in plaintiffs' favor after an order sustaining plaintiffs' demurrer to defendants' amended answer without leave to amend further. The action involved certain lands in Orange county, plaintiffs' title to which, it was alleged in the second count of the complaint, was deraigned from patents issued by the state of California in 1882 and 1887 to one Shanklin, wherein the lands are declared to be non-mineral. Appellants by their answer make no attack on the validity of plaintiffs' title as deraigned from the Shanklin grant. They sought rather to defeat it by an assault on the validity of the patents themselves, alleging that the lands at the time of the grants were known to be mineral lands within the limits of a mining district, and that therefore they were not subject to selection as lieu lands. With the alleged invalidity of the patents as a basis the answer further pleaded a purported defense framed upon the theory that the lands in suit were still open to entry, and that the appellants had acquired a mining title thereto by virtue of an alleged mining location under the mining laws of the United States.

[1] The lower court upon demurrer correctly held defendants' allegations, in the particulars stated, to be unavailing as a defense, in that they sought singly and collectively to collaterally attack the patents, and that the patents were not rightfully subject to such an attack, and could be attacked only on direct proceedings and by proper parties. The reasons behind and supporting this view are clearly set forth in the case of Burke v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 234 U. S. 669, 34 Sup. Ct. 907, 58 L. Ed. 1527.

[2] Although the sufficiency of the pleaded defense was asserted and attempted to be upheld in the briefs filed upon behalf of appellants, still when the appeal came on for oral argument it was conceded by counsel for appellants that the case of Burke v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra, which was decided subsequent to the institution of the action and the interposition of the answer, finally foreclosed all doubt and discussion of the correctness of the trial court's ruling upon the demurrer. This being so, there remains for discussion and decision the point which counsel for appellants at the oral argument expressly stated was the only one which could be urged in support of the appeal, viz. "that the court erred in sustaining the motion for judgment upon the pleadings." In this behalf appellants contend that a material issue was raised by their answer to the first count of the plaintiffs' complaint which precluded a judgment on the pleadings. This contention is rested upon the assumption that such answer unqualifiedly denied the allegation of the first count of the plaintiffs' complaint which, in the formula usual in actions to quiet title, averred that the plaintiffs for a long time prior to and at the time of the commencement of the action, through a common source of title, were the owners of and collectively in the possession of the entire tract of land in suit. Respondents, on the other hand, insist, and we think correctly, that the effect of the defendants' general denial of the plaintiffs' allegations of ownership and possession as set forth in the answer to the first count of the complaint was nullified by the fact that subsequent averments of the defendants' answer to the first count of the plaintiffs' complaint admits the plaintiffs' ownership of and title to the land in suit. In this behalf it will be noted that the plaintiffs' chain of title was specifically pleaded in the second count of the complaint, which chain of title commenced with the sovereign source of the title and ran to and rested in the plaintiffs at the time of the commencement of the action. It is affirmatively alleged, however, in each answer to the two counts of the complaint that the selection of the land in question by the state of California as lieu lands and the issuance of a patent therefor was void for the reason that the land was mineral land and known to be such by the state and government officials making and consenting to such selection. Upon this hypothesis it was further alleged in the answer to the first count of the complaint that the patent in question was void. Defendants further set up the fact in the same answer that they had located the land in question as mineral land, and were proceeding with development work with a view to discovering petroleum upon the premises in question. It is true that in the answer to the first count of the complaint there is a specific denial of plaintiffs' ownership, but this denial is accompanied in the same answer by admissions and allegations which make it plain that if the patent in question is valid plaintiffs are the owners of the property in question. Without attempting to analyze in detail the various allegations and admissions, express and implied, in the answer, we may take as a fair construction of that answer a statement by appellants in their opening brief as follows:

"A careful reading of the amended answer interposed by the defendants will disclose * * * that this is not an effort to defeat a grant covered by patent because of conditions subsequently arising. Under the issues presented by the pleadings, defendants offered to show that the patents themselves were void, not voidable. * * * It will appear from a reading of the amended answer that the claim of the defendants rests upon the theory that the land involved is now and always has been public mineral land of the United States, and was not within the limits of the grant by Congress of the United States to the state of California."

Taking as we do appellants' statement of the substance and effect of their answer to be correct, it is clear that if they are not in any event in a position to attack the patent upon which plaintiffs' title was based, their answer is without merit, and presents no issue. A fair analysis of the two counts of the complaint and their respective answers leads solely to the conclusion that the only issue attempted to be raised between the parties by the answer concerned merely the validity of the basic patents upon which plaintiffs' title rested, and inasmuch as this was not an issuable fact, there was nothing for the court to try, and therefore judgment on the pleadings was not only warranted but proper. In other words, considering the admitted fact that the defendants cannot attack the validity of the patents in question, and that their allegations of invalidity must be disregarded, we have the defendants in their answer to the first count, admitting the issuance of a patent to public lands which they must concede for the purposes of this case to be valid, and which, therefore, as a matter of law, vested title in the patentee, and a conveyance of the right of the patentee to the plaintiffs, which would make them the owners of the land in question. The answer to the second count is merely a restatement by reference of the facts stated in the answer to the first count, and is therefore a new and express admission of the issuance of the patent and the acquisition of the rights of the patentees by mesne conveyances by the plaintiffs. It is therefore apparent that the only issue between the parties presented by the pleadings was the validity of the patent which it is conceded defendants cannot successfully raise and avail themselves of in this action. The judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1919.
Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1919.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §315(6)
—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—EFFECT—MUNIMENT OF TITLE.

Where a decree of partial distribution became final prior to commencement of partition, and fixed and determined the rights of the distributees thereunder, such decree was, in absence of fraud, available as a muniment of title.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §315(6)
—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION — VALIDITY — FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

In a partition action, evidence held sufficient to show that a decree of partial distribution of an estate upon which the respective rights of the parties were based was obtained without fraud, upon hearings after due notice to all concerned.

3. TRIAL §391—FINDING—NECESSITY—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

Whether a partition action was prematurely brought, depending upon whether a decree of partial distribution of an estate upon which the rights of the parties were based had become final, was a question involving a conclusion of law, unnecessary, immaterial, and improper to be found as a fact.

4. COSTS §57—ATTORNEYS' FEES—FINDINGS
—FINAL JUDGMENT.

The finding of attorneys' fees has no proper place in an interlocutory decree, since the subject of fees and costs must be left to be determined by the final findings and judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 796).

5. LIS PENDENS §17—PARTITION §51 —
SUMMONS — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY — STATUTES.

The statutory direction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 755, 756), that the summons in partition shall contain "a description of the property sought to be partitioned" and the lis pendens "a description of the property to be affected thereby," does not call for any greater or less particularity in description than in other actions involving title to real estate.

6. PARTITION §55(3)—PLEADING — DESCRIPTION OF LAND—SUFFICIENCY.

In a partition action, only such a general description is required as will lead to an identification of the property upon which the partition prayed for, if granted, will operate, and the description may be aided by extrinsic evidence.

7. PARTITION §55(3)—PLEADING—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY.

The designation of land in a partition complaint "as a tract of land known as the Broome Estate ranch," together with a general description of its extent and location, coupled with the allegation of the complaint, summons, and lis pendens that it was all situate in Ventura county, constituted a prima facie description sufficient under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 755, 756, to support the action, when supplemented by proper parcel identification.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Robert M. Clarke and Merle J. Rogers, Judges.

Action by Thornhill Francis Broome against Frances Broome and others. From an interlocutory decree of partition of property between the parties according to their respective interests and an order denying a new trial, and from an order appointing a receiver, the named defendant appeals. Decree modified and affirmed, and order appointing receiver affirmed.

Houghton & Houghton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles F. Blackstock, of Oxnard, R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, and I. W. Stewart, of Oxnard, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an action in partition. The property sought to be partitioned is the following described real estate situate in the county of Ventura, state of California:

"All that tract of land known as the Broome Estate ranch, consisting of the larger part of the rancho Guadaluasca, comprising 2,000 acres more or less; the land called the 'Conejo tract,' adjoining the rancho Guadaluasca on the east, comprising about 663 acres, and that part of the rancho La Colonia which is situated between the county road known as the Hueneme road, and the northwesterly boundary of said rancho Guadaluasca, comprising about 463 acres, together with the buildings and other improvements thereon."

This description is quoted from the complaint, at the time of the filing of which a summons was issued containing the same description, and a lis pendens also containing it, filed in the office of the county recorder of Ventura county. The defendant Frances Broome, now appellant, demurred to the complaint on general grounds and specifically on the ground that its description of the property is not "proper, legal, sufficient, or adequate." The demurrer being overruled, the court found on the issues of the cause in favor of the plaintiff, Thornhill Francis Broome, and decreed that the property should be partitioned between the parties to the action according to their respective interests therein. There are two appeals, one from the interlocutory decree of partition and from an order denying a new trial, and the other from the order appointing a receiver. The appeals have been consolidated into one, and its four main questions are: (1) Whether the court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause, appellant contending in this behalf that neither the complaint nor the lis pendens adequately described the property; (2) whether the trial court erred in finding that the services rendered by plaintiff's counsel were for the common benefit of all the parties to the action; (3) whether the decree of partial distribution entered in the estate of William Francis Broome, deceased, whereunder the plaintiff and the nonappealing defendants, Montague Watson Broome and Amy Lillian Broome, claim as tenants in common an interest in the land subjected to partition can be availed of as muniment of title; and, finally (4) whether the court erred in failing to find upon the issue that the action was prematurely instituted presented by an allegation of the answer to the effect that the partial decree of distribution of the estate of the testator to the parties to the action had not become final before the date of the filing of the complaint in the action.

[1-3] The third ground of the appeal may be dismissed with the observation that, as shown by the record, the decree of partial distribution in the estate of Richard Broome having become final prior to the commencement of this action, fixed and determined the rights of the distributees thereunder, subject only to defeasance as the result of fraud (Rountree v. Montague, 30 Cal. App. 170, 178, 157 Pac. 623), and while as to the fraud alleged to have been perpetrated in the procurement of this decree it would suffice to say that the finding of the trial court that there was none is amply sustained by the evidence, still it may not be amiss to further say that the facts forming the fraud pleaded and relied upon in the answer of the defendant Frances Broome to defeat the finality of the decree of partial distribution in so far as it is claimed to have concerned and controlled the rights of the parties are, in substance, these: The parties had, some ten months prior to the procurement of the decree of partial distribution, agreed in writing, among other things, that—

The accounts of the defendant Frances Broome, as "the former executrix of the will of William Richard Broome, deceased, of her administration of said estate to be deemed balanced as of the date of the revocation of her letters testamentary and the same shall be allowed accordingly by order of the court. * * * That all of the property of the estate, real and personal, as shown by the final account of the said Frances Broome and now in the possession of said Frances Broome, together with any income received by her from said property since her removal and not reported in said account, to be delivered to the administrator with the will annexed for the purposes of administration and distribution. * * * That the administrator with the will annexed file his final account and petition for final distribution of said estate and proceed diligently to secure the final distribution of said estate to the end that the decree of final distribution of said estate may be made on or before the 1st day of June, 1910; it being understood that this stipulation shall not be considered as a waiver of said Frances Broome's right of appeal from said final decree for the purpose of getting a legal construction of the last will of said Richard Broome, deceased, on file in this proceeding. * * * This stipulation is understood to be a complete and final compromise of all differences between the said heirs and legatees. * * *"

The foregoing agreement was made and dated April 21, 1910, and it is alleged in the complaint that the defendant Frances Broome executed the same as the result of the persuasion and inducement of the plaintiff, Thornhill Francis Broome, and the attorney who was then representing her and the other defendants jointly in the matter of the administration of the estate of said deceased. On the 29th of November, 1910, the plaintiff, Thornhill Francis Broome, filed in the estate of William Richard Broome, deceased, his petition for a partial distribution, praying, among other things, that there be set apart and distributed to him as an heir at law of said deceased two-ninths of the residue remaining of said estate after provision made for the payment of all expenses of administration. Prior to the filing of this petition for partial distribution and prior to the making of the agreement hereinbefore referred to, namely, on August 4, 1909, the defendant Frances Broome, jointly with the defendants Montague Watson Broome and Amy Lillian Broome, presented and filed a petition for the partial distribution of the estate of said deceased wherein they prayed that there be set apart to them and to each of them the proportion of said estate to which they were entitled under the terms and provisions of the last will and testament of the said deceased. On or about December 31, 1910, all of the said petitions for partial distribution came on for hearing, and that of the plaintiff, Thornhill Francis Broome, was granted, but the petitions of the defendant Frances Broome and of the other defendants were denied upon the ground that there was no provision in the last will and testament of the said deceased for distribution to said defendants save in a manner prohibited by law. Thereafter, on January 3, 1911, the plaintiff, Thornhill Francis Broome, represented by his counsel, and the defendants Amy Lillian Broome and Montague Watson Broome represented by their counsel, entered into a written stipulation entitled in the matter of the estate of William Richard Broome wherein it was provided that the submission of the respective petitions of all of the parties, including that of the defendant Frances Broome, for partial distribution, be set aside, and that the decision thereon and theretofore made be vacated, and that the petitioners Montague Watson Broome and Amy Lillian Broome might amend the prayer of their respective petitions by adding thereto and at the end thereof the following clause, to wit:

"And your petitioners further pray that in the event the court shall so construe said will as not to permit a distribution of said estate according to its terms, the court distribute to said petitioners, and to each of them, the share of the estate to which in the opinion of the court they may be entitled respectively. * * *"

The defendant Frances Broome, although named as a petitioner with the other defendants for partial distribution in the petition as originally filed, refused to become and was not a party to the written stipulation last hereinbefore mentioned. On January 20, 1911, an order apparently in keeping with this last-mentioned stipulation was made by the court in the said estate, which recited the fact of the original filing and hearing of the several petitions for partial distribution, the proceedings had thereon and the determination thereof as above outlined, and that the same were resubmitted for decision on the evidence previously and originally received in support of the petitions; it was alleged that none of the defendants as the petitioners named in the petition for partial distribution as originally filed was represented in the proceedings which culminated in the order for resubmission, and that at no time thereafter did the defendant Frances Broome receive any notice of the making thereof, and that the petitions referred to in the stipulation for resubmission were never at any time after the making of said order actually and formally amended, nor were any amendments ever served upon said defendant Frances Broome. On June 30, 1911, following said resubmission, the court adjudged and decreed that the trust attempted to be created by the terms of the last will and testament of said deceased was void, and that the petition of the defendant Frances Broome therefore must be denied except as to the property specifically bequeathed to her, and that with that exception all of the property of the said estate belonged to the heirs at law of said deceased, and that the plaintiff, Thornhill Francis Broome, and the defendants Montague Watson Broome and Amy Lillian Broome were entitled to partial distribution of the property of said estate as in their respective interests prayed for. With these facts as a basis, it was alleged, as it is argued here, that said decree of partial distribution was obtained by fraud, in this, that it was petitioned for and granted subsequent to and despite the stipulation which purported to compromise the differences of the parties, which reserved unto the defendant Frances Broome the right of appeal from any decree of final distribution which would be ultimately entered in said estate to the end that she might procure a final legal construction of the scope and effect of the last will and testament of said deceased; and that relying upon the terms of said stipulation she was imposed upon and misled to the extent that she did not take or prosecute any appeal from said decree of partial distribution.

Now, then, is it not obvious that all of the foregoing makes much ado about nothing? While the allegations of the answer involving the claim of fraud are extensive, they are not altogether free from equivocation, and embrace but few far-fetched facts which neither singly nor collectively suffice to make a satisfactory showing of fraud which had for its purpose the deluding and deceiving of the defendant Frances Broome into sleeping upon whatever right she may have had for a revocation of the decree of partial distribution. The stipulation of April 21, 1910, which was signed in person by the defendant Frances Broome and which, while purporting to be a compromise of the differences of all of the parties interested in the estate, reserved unto said Frances Broome the right to appeal from the final decree of distribution which might be entered in said estate was, as evidenced by its very terms, entered into primarily for the purpose of initiating and stimulating proceedings looking to an early and final distribution of the estate of deceased, and neither expressly nor by necessary implication is there anything to be found in the stipulation which gave the defendant Frances Broome any assurance that the proceeding for partial distribution would not be instituted prior to an application for final distribution. Nor can we conceive how the defendant Frances Broome, because of anything contained in the stipulation, could have been misled and deceived into foregoing her undoubted right, notwithstanding the stipulation, to appeal from the decree of partial distribution.

The alleged fact that Frances Broome was in no manner made a party to the proceedings for the resubmission of the several petitions for partial distribution, including her own, and which ultimately resulted in the decree complained of, is emphasized as an evidence of the fraud alleged to have been perpetrated in the procurement of the decree, but in response to this it need only be noted that the record is barren of any evidence, or even suggestion, that she did not have notice of that proceeding or that it was instituted and consummated without her knowledge.

In so far as is concerned the knowledge of the defendant Frances Broome of the petitions for partial distribution and the proceedings had thereon from their very inception until the making and entry of the decree, it will be noted further that the decree itself recites that all of the parties were represented in court by their respective counsel, and that due notice of the hearing of the petitions had been given to all of the parties interested, and in this behalf it will be further noted that the answer of the defendant Frances Broome does not allege that the notices required by law of the pendency of the petitions and of the proceedings had thereunder were not given. In the absence of an allegation and a showing to the contrary, the presumption that the notices required by law were given must prevail. Moreover, upon this phase of the case the record shows that the notice required by law on the hearing of all the petitions for partial distribution was given, and in addition the record contains much evidence to the effect that the defendant Frances Broome was in court on every occasion when there was any hearing in reference to the estate of William Richard Broome, deceased. In short, the evidence, direct and presumptive, upon this phase of the case preponderates in favor of the finding of the trial court in this action that the defendant Frances Broome had "notice of all matters pending which culminated in the making of said decree of partial distribution," and that she was not in "any manner imposed upon or misled in connection with the obtaining of said decree of partial distribution or in connection with a reliance upon the finality and conclusiveness of the same, or imposed upon or misled at all." This view compels the conclusion that the decree of partial distribution constituted a sufficient muniment of title, and disposes of the further contention that the action was prematurely brought. A determination of the latter question involved but a conclusion of law, unnecessary, immaterial, and improper, therefore, to be found as a fact.

[4] It is apparently conceded that the finding of the trial court relative to the allowance of attorneys' fees is not supported by the evidence, but in any event the finding of attorneys' fees had no proper place in the interlocutory decree and therefore the judgment must be modified in that particular, leaving the subject of fees and costs to be determined by the final findings and judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 796; Harrington v. Goldsmith, 136 Cal. 168, 68 Pac. 594; 30 Cyc. 301.

[5, 6] Concerning the sufficiency of the description of the property sought to be partitioned to confer jurisdiction upon the court below to hear and determine the action, it is the contention of appellant, concisely stated, that the description of the land contained in the complaint, summons, and lis pendens in a suit in partition must so describe the land sought to be partitioned as to render possible its location by a competent surveyor without the aid of extrinsic evidence. This contention is in effect, rested largely upon the assumption that the statutory direction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 755, 756), that the summons in partition shall contain "a description of the property sought to be partitioned" and the lis pendens "a description of the property to be affected thereby," calls for more particularity in the description of the property to be partitioned than is ordinarily required in other and different actions involving the title to the real property. No good purpose would be subserved by following the refinements of reasoning which permeate an elaborate and admirable brief presented in support of this contention, and we think it will suffice to say that, having in mind the language of the Code sections under consideration, certainly no greater or less effect need be accorded descriptive words in the pleadings and preliminary process and proceedings in partition than that required to be accorded to descriptions and descriptive phrases in other actions involving the title to real property. "There is, indeed, authority for the position that the description in a complaint in partition may properly be less precise than elsewhere." 30 Cyc. 218. Ordinarily, only reasonable certainty in description of property sought to be partitioned is required in the pleadings and proceedings in an action in partition, and this is primarily for the purpose of showing that the property is within the jurisdiction of the court so as to permit the defendant, if need be, to properly traverse the plaintiff's title and enable the court to definitely determine and define the mode and extent of the partition to be made, and, finally to aid the commissioners upon an interlocutory decree to ascertain the estate ordered to be distributed in keeping with the terms of the partition. Consequently, only such a general description in limine is required as will lead to an identification of the property upon which the partition prayed for, if granted, will operate. Sumner v. Hill, 157 Ala. 230, 47 South. 565; Thruston v. Minke, 32 Md. 571.

In the case of Sumner v. Hill, supra, which was an action for partition, it was held that under the authorities there could be no question but that the designation of the property which was the subject-matter of the action as the "Hancock place" was a sufficient description when supplemented by proper parcel identification. To the same effect is the case of Bogan v. Hamilton, 90 Ala. 454, 8 South. 186, which involved the sufficiency of a description which designated the property sought to be subjected to a vendor's lien as "well known as the Shook farm or place on the Coosa river." See also the case of Thruston v. Minke, supra, wherein it was held that the property to be partitioned was sufficiently described when described "of all that piece or parcel of ground situate in the city of Cumberland called and known as the 'St. Nicholas Hotel property.'" While no authorities from California have been cited to us and we have found none bearing directly on the precise question under consideration here, still the two cases of Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 89 Pac. 352, and Houghton v. Kern Valley Bank, 157 Cal. 289, 107 Pac. 113, which deal with the sufficiency of descriptions embodied in actions to enforce street assessments and tax sales, enunciate principles and rules readily applicable, we think, to the question presented in the case before us. The case of Baird v. Monroe, supra, although primarily an action to quiet title, nevertheless had for its basis a proceeding in invitum to the extent that it involved the sufficiency of the description of the property in suit as set forth in an assessment proceeding for the opening and widening of a city street, and there this court said, in effect, that a description "sufficient to identify the land" involved is one which, in conjunction with the knowledge presumptively possessed by property owners of the community in which the land is situated, operates to give notice of the exact property to be assessed, and that therefore "a description of a tract of land by name is prima facie sufficient in an assessment, as it is presumed that the tract [of land] is well known by name * * * and, further, that the question as to whether the description is sufficient to identify the land is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence presented upon that issue." The case of Houghton v. Kern Valley Bank, supra, held that the question of whether or not a description in an assessment for taxes was sufficient was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court upon such evidence as may be presented to show its sufficiency to identify the land.

[7] Surely no greater strictness in description should be required in an action in partition than that applied to descriptions involving the validity of proceedings in invitum, and consequently we think there can be no question but that the designation in the complaint, summons, and lis pendens in the action before us of the land sought to be partitioned "as a tract of land known as the Broome Estate ranch," together with a general description of its extent and location, and coupled with the allegation of the complaint, summons, and lis pendens that it was all situate in the county of Ventura, constituted a prima facie description sufficient, within the meaning of sections 755 and 756 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to warrant and support the institution of the action and which, when ultimately supplemented at the trial of the action, as was done, by proper parcel identification, was amply sufficient to enable the court to hear and determine the merits of the action.

The appeal from the order appointing a receiver is founded in the contention that the trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain the action at all. This appeal is therefore disposed of by our conclusion previously stated concerning the jurisdiction of the trial court.

The decree appealed from is modified by striking therefrom the allowance of attorneys' fees, and, as so modified, the decree and the order appointing a receiver will stand affirmed.

Action by A. J. Raisch against Charles A. Warren, Jr., administrator, etc., and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. B. Dozier, J. E. Pemberton, and Thomas B. Dozier, Jr., all of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This action was brought by the plaintiff against the administrator of the estate of Charles A. Warren, deceased, and his heirs, for the purpose of securing an accounting arising out of an alleged partnership, and a judgment in plaintiff's favor for such amount as might be found due.

Upon the trial of the case, and when objection was made to plaintiff and another witness, Buckman, being allowed to testify in support of their claim, plaintiff's counsel having concluded that it was not within the power of the court to render a money judgment, waived that petition in the prayer, and the action proceeded merely for an accounting.

It was stipulated that if deceased was found to be a partner, the liability for contribution resting on his estate aggregated the sum of $182,792.14.

Judgment was for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

[1] It is the claim of plaintiff that Charles A. Warren, A. E. Buckman, and plaintiff entered into and formed a partnership for the purpose of bidding upon and securing certain contracts, among which was one from the United States government relating to what is known as the Truckee-Carson project of Nevada, a scheme for the diversion and conveyance of water from the Truckee river in the state of Nevada to the irrigable lands in the Truckee and Carson valleys, situate in that state. After alleging the creation of the partnership and its purposes, the complaint proceeds to set forth the facts in connection with the submission of bids and of the securing of the contracts desired. It then recites the performance of the work at a substantial loss, and the fact that no accounting between the parties was ever had. At the trial it was shown that the plaintiff and his associate and assignor were for many years engaged in business as contractors, and that they did an extensive business. It was further shown that Charles A. Warren, now deceased, was engaged in the same business. The parties generally acted independently of each other, but occasionally they took contracts as a joint adventure after the manner of partners. Early in 1903 Warren concluded that it would be a more businesslike way in proceeding in their joint adventures to form a corporation for that purpose. Accordingly, one was formed under the name of C. A. Warren & Co., in which each of the parties held one-third of the stock. Shortly after this arrangement was made the United States government solicited bids for certain irrigation work known as "The Truckee-Carson Project." The newly formed corporation bid on this work. One of its bids was accepted, and a contract was entered into by it with the government. Shortly thereafter and before much work was done Warren, for certain reasons, desired to be relieved from the responsibilities connected therewith, and a contract was entered into by him with plaintiff and Buckman with that end in view. This agreement was destroyed in the fire of 1906, and its terms are disputed by the parties. Plaintiff claimed that it provided that since Warren was unable to take the active interest in the work that the importance of the project required, he should be allowed to withdraw from an active participation in connection therewith, and should have as his share of the profits $12,500, to be paid out of the last sums received from the government on the contracts, but that no modification in relation to any losses that the parties might sustain was ever had. Defendants, on the other hand, contended that the agreement expressly exonerated Warren from the duty of making contribution in the event that the parties sustained a loss on their contract. At the time this agreement was made there existed another corporation known as the San Francisco Construction Company, of which Raisch and Buckman owned virtually all the stock, and in which Warren had no interest as partner, stockholder, or otherwise. In consideration of the $12,500 provided for in the agreement to be paid to Warren the contract of the Charles A. Warren Company was assigned to the San Francisco Construction Company. Thereafter this latter company furnished its own credit and all money necessary for a full performance of the contract, and received all payments due thereunder, and carried on all the accounts of the transaction on its own books. Later it entered into two other contracts connected with the same project in its own name. The facts further show that after receiving the assignment of the original contract, plaintiff, on behalf of the company to whom the assignment was made, arranged with the Anglo-California Bank to finance this company. Notes executed by this corporation were given to the bank, and certain collateral owned by plaintiff and Buckman was hypothecated as security for their payment. Advances up to half a million dollars were arranged for, and eventually over $400,000 was actually paid out by the bank on account thereof. Warren never contributed any money to the enterprise, or joined in the execution of any of the notes of the company. The money so borrowed was placed to the credit of the San Francisco Construction Company and was checked out by it. There is also evidence in the record showing that plaintiff had made statements that Warren had no interest in the contracts and was not liable for any of the losses. Under these and other circumstances the trial court was fully justified, as it did, in finding that no partnership existed between the parties, but that the contract was one performed by the San Francisco Construction Company for its own benefit, in which Charles A. Warren had no interest, either as partner, stockholder, or otherwise.

[2] In addition thereto there is ample evidence to show that the agreement entered into between the parties and heretofore referred to did by its terms release Warren from all liability under the contract. It is true that upon the questions presented there was a conflict of testimony. This, however, was a matter for the determination of the trial court.

From what we have said, it follows that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

1. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 139(1)—NONSUIT—WHEN PROPER.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 927(3)—REVIEW—MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

While, on defendant's motion for nonsuit, every intentment is to be indulged in favor of plaintiff, yet there is no material difference between rule governing court on appeal in consideration of sufficiency of the evidence, where the court below has directed a verdict, from that prevailing where a nonsuit has been granted after the evidence for both parties has been given.

3. TROVER AND CONVERSION $\hookrightarrow$ 40(1) — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In action for conversion of two mares, and for injuries inflicted, resulting in the death of one and permanent damage to the other, evidence that mares were used by servant of an independent contractor was sufficient to overcome presumption that one found performing work for another is prima facie his servant, and defendant's motion for nonsuit was properly granted.

Action by J. B. King against the Hercules Powder Company and others. Complaint dis-

McPike & Murray, for appellant.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, M. R. Jones, and Creed, Jones & Dall, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment for a nonsuit. The action was brought for conversion of two Percheron mares, and for injuries inflicted, resulting in the death of one and permanent damage to the other. The action was originally brought against the present defendant and against the Hercules Water Company, J. O'Neill, J. Fassler, and certain fictitious defendants. None of the defendants, other than the Hercules Powder Company, were ever served, and at the time of the trial plaintiff dismissed as to all the other defendants. The defendant Hercules Powder Company filed an answer denying that it had ever taken and used the mares, or in any way injured them. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case, defendant moved for a nonsuit, which motion was denied. After all the evidence was in, the defendant again moved for a nonsuit, which was this time granted, on the ground that, if the horses were used, they were used by one O'Neill, or his agents, and that O'Neill was an independent contractor.

[1] The appellant contends that the case should have been submitted to the jury, and that the granting of the nonsuit was error. We think the motion was properly granted. It is settled law in this state that such a motion can be granted at the end of all of the testimony in a case. Geary v. Simmons, 39 Cal. 224; Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 Pac. 57.

The rule is expressed in Geary v. Simmons, supra, where it is said that a court is justified in granting defendant's motion for nonsuit after the evidence on both sides has been heard in a case, where, if the motion had been denied, and a verdict found for plaintiff, it would have been set aside, as not supported by, but contrary to, the evidence. Indeed, in the case of Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 Pac. 631, relied upon by the appellant, the court expresses the same idea in the converse of the proposition by saying that, if the contestant did present evidence of so substantial a character as that, notwithstanding the conflict raised by proponent's evidence, it would support a verdict in favor of contestant, it would have been error for the court to have granted a motion for a nonsuit.

[2] We therefore come to a consideration of the evidence. While it is true that every intendment is to be indulged favoring any reasonable inference that can be drawn for the plaintiff, yet the law on the subject is clearly stated in the Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 Pac. 57, where it is said:

"There is, however, no material difference between the rule governing this court, in the consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence where the court below has directed a verdict, from that prevailing where a nonsuit is granted on motion made after the evidence for both parties has been given. In Lacey v. Porter, 103 Cal. 605, 37 Pac. 637, which is the only California case on the subject, the court says: 'To justify the court in directing a verdict it is not necessary that there should be no conflict in the evidence; but where the evidence is such that it is clearly insufficient to support a verdict in favor of the party against whom the direction is given, the instruction is proper, unless the circumstances indicate that upon another trial the evidence may be materially different, in which case the facts should be submitted to the jury in order that a new trial may be had. But in either case the decision of the court below will be sustained, unless the appellate court can clearly see that its conclusion is wrong upon the facts.'"

[3, 4] Upon an examination of the evidence, we are satisfied that it fails to prove a sufficient case to justify a verdict or finding in favor of the plaintiff. While it is true, as contended by appellant, that the fact that one is found performing work and labor for another is prima facie evidence of an employment, and such person is presumed to be the servant and employé of that other in the absence of evidence to the contrary, yet it has been said that disputable presumptions are allowed to stand, not against the facts they represent, but in lieu of proof of the facts, and that, when the fact is proven contrary to the presumption, no conflict arises, but the presumption is simply overcome and is dispelled. Savings, etc., Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 922. The presumption in the present case was certainly overcome by an abundance of positive evidence in the case offered by the defendant, which showed, beyond doubt, we think, that the horses were used by the agents or servants of O'Neill, and that O'Neill was an independent contractor. Under such facts, the motion for a nonsuit was properly granted, for, if the verdict had been for the plaintiff, the trial court would have been compelled, we think, to set it aside as contrary to the evidence.

Appellant also contends that defendant was estopped from introducing evidence to show that O'Neill was an independent contractor, or did the work in question, because of certain denials contained in its answer, which appellant construes as denials of these facts. The paragraph of the answer relied upon was a denial upon information and belief, and was "in regard to the actions of defendants Hercules Water Company and J. Fassler," and we think it cannot be fairly construed to relate to the actions of any other of the defendants.

The other points raised by appellant seem to us to be without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

GNARINI v. BANCA SVIZZERA AMERICANA. (Civ. 2607.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Dec. 18, 1918.)

BANKS AND BANKING — 134(1) — NOTE OF PARTNERSHIP—SECURITY BY MORTGAGE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to justify trial court's finding that second note for balance due on original note executed by partnership whose business was subsequently incorporated under same name was not note of company, but was one of original firm, and secured by mortgage when payee bank endeavored to apply to its payment deposit of corporation.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by A. A. Gnarini, as trustee, etc., wherein James A. Harrold was substituted as plaintiff, against the Banca Svizzera Americana, also known as the Swiss American Bank of Locarno. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Metson, F. A. Denicke, and H. S. Young, all of San Francisco, for appellant. Robert B. Gaylord and Charles A. Shurtleff, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff on the second trial of this action. On the first appeal a judgment in favor of defendant was reversed by the Supreme Court on rehearing, after disagreement in this court. Upon the second trial the court below rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, and this appeal is from such judgment.

Briefly stated, the facts involved are as follows: On February 2, 1903, the firm of Cain, Boyd & Corriea executed to the defendant bank a note in the sum of $2,000, upon which the sum of $100 was subsequently paid. The payment of this note was secured by a mortgage given by Cain, a member of the firm, to the defendant bank. This mortgage also secured an individual note of Cain's. The mortgage contained a clause that it was given as security for the repayment of all other and further advances that might be made to the firm of Cain, Boyd & Corriea. The bank made the $2,000 loan to the firm upon the faith in this clause in the mortgage. On December 11, 1903, a corporation by the name "Cain, Boyd & Corriea" was formed, of which corporation Cain was president. On June 4, 1904, a new note was executed to the bank for the sum of $1,900, balance. This note was signed and delivered by Cain to the bank, but there is nothing on its face to indicate that it was a corporate note, the signature being identical with the original note. On the 15th day of June a petition was filed for an adjudication that the corporation was bankrupt, and on July 1, 1904, it was so declared.

Six days after the execution of this note, and five days before the filing of the bankruptcy petition, the corporation had on deposit with defendant bank the sum of $1,843.60, and at this time the bank purported to apply this deposit on account of the note. The note was stamped "Paid" and returned to Cain, Boyd & Corriea. The original note of February 2, 1903, was also stamped "Paid" by the bank and returned to the makers.

Upon the former appeal the Supreme Court adopted the opinion of Mr. Justice Kerrigan, holding that the mortgage secured the indebtedness and not the note; that the indebtedness continued to be secured by the mortgage notwithstanding the execution of the renewal note; and that the bank had no right to apply the deposit to the payment of the second note. See Gnarini v. Swiss American Bank, 162 Cal. 181, 121 Pac. 726.

With two exceptions, the evidence presented to the superior court upon the second trial is identical with the evidence which was considered by the Supreme Court upon the former appeal. This evidence was presented to show that it was intended by the exchange of notes to release the old indebtedness and the mortgage security, thus making the renewal note one of the corporation, and enabling the bank to apply the deposit, which it did, to the payment of the note. The "new evidence" relates to the bank's bookkeeping methods, and also to certain conversations had between Cain and an officer of the bank. With reference to evidence relative to the bookkeeping, it is claimed by appellant that the ledger account shows that after the organization of the corporation the account was changed to read "Cain, Boyd & Corriea, Inc.," and, further, that in the notebook of the bank under the heading of "Indorser" the original entry "secured by property" was changed after the execution of the second note to read "personal security."

There is no proof in the record as to the exact date when the word "Inc." was inserted in the ledger. The person making the entry was not produced by the bank. In relation to the conversations had between Cain and the officer of the bank, the record shows that they merely referred to the effect of an incorporation on the firm's business, and in no manner indicated that any novation was intended.

We do not deem it necessary to comment upon or discuss the evidence further than to say that it is sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court that the second note was not a corporation one, but that it was one of the original partnership, and was secured by a mortgage when the bank endeavored to apply the deposit of the corporation to its payment. This being so, the decision on the former appeal is controlling.

Judgment affirmed.

KUCK v. McCONNELL. (Civ. 2636.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1011(1)—FINDINGS UPON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

In an action to rescind a contract for fraud, a finding for plaintiff on conflicting evidence, there being some evidence on which finding could be predicated, will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 684(2)—RECORD—SUFFICIENCY.

The contention that the court abused its discretion by denying defendant a continuance to produce evidence to meet trial amendments to plaintiff's original complaint cannot be heard, where the record does not contain the original complaint or show in what the amendments consisted.

3. CONTINUANCE $\S$ 33 — ABSENCE OF WITNESSES—STIPULATION AS TO THEIR TESTIMONY.

Where plaintiff amended his complaint upon trial, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse defendant a continuance to secure witnesses, where plaintiff's attorney stipulated that defendant's witnesses would testify, as stated by defendant's counsel.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1043(7)—REFUSAL OF CONTINUANCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action to set aside land contract where the trial court made findings of several distinct misrepresentations by defendant, any one of which would have been sufficient to support judgment, some of which were alleged in the complaint before amendment, defendant was not prejudiced by denial of a continuance to secure witnesses to meet issues raised by such amendment.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 105(1) — RE-SCISSION OF CONTRACT—REIMBURSEMENT.

The objection that the decree rescinding for fraud a contract selling land should have provided that plaintiff reimburse defendants for expenses for upkeep of the property is without merit, where the defendant showed no evidence of such expenses and had the use of the $16,000 ranch for more than three years; the value of the use being probably greater than the upkeep.

Action by Henry Kuck against E. W. McConnell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wise & O'Connor, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Elliot Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff. The facts of the case are, in brief, as follows:

On February 17, 1915, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement by which the plaintiff was to convey to defendant certain real property situated in Glenn county, Cal., and defendant was to pay therefor the sum of $5,000 cash and 1,500 shares of preferred stock and 1,500 shares of common stock of Consolidated Concessions Company, a corporation. Pursuant to this agreement on March 17, 1916, a deed was executed by plaintiff, and defendant delivered to him the sum of $5,000 and the stock provided for in the agreement. Later, the plaintiff attempted to rescind the contract because of certain alleged false representations alleged to have been made by defendant, and brought this action for the recovery of the consideration paid by him under the contract.

The trial court found that the contract was procured through fraud and misrepresentation, and a decree was entered accordingly, directing a restoration of the consideration from each party to the other.

[1] The appellant contends first that the findings with respect to the misrepresentations made by defendant to plaintiff are not supported by the evidence. The record shows conflicting evidence, but it discloses some evidence upon which the findings can reasonably be predicated, and under such circumstances this court may not inquire into the weight of the evidence.

Upon the question of whether the plaintiff relied and acted upon the false representations made to his agents, or whether he sought independent advice on these subjects, there is also conflict in the evidence, which conflict the trial court has resolved in favor of the plaintiff by its finding that he acted upon said false representations to his damage. This finding also may not be disturbed on appeal.

[2, 3] Appellant next contends that the trial court was guilty of an abuse of discretion in denying the motion for a continuance to produce evidence to meet the allegations which plaintiff made by way of amendment to his complaint at the time of trial. The appellant has failed to include in the record a copy of the original complaint. The second amended complaint is before the court, but we are unable to determine whether the amendment raised new issues or not, without a copy of the original complaint for the purpose of comparison. But apart from this, we think this contention is without merit for the reason that the record discloses that the attorney for plaintiff stipulated at the trial that the defendant's witnesses, if called, would testify as stated by counsel for defendant. We think this stipulation was sufficient to warrant a denial of the continuance, and that defendant could not have been prejudiced by such ruling under the circumstances. The matter was within the discretion of the trial court, and the facts do not suggest an abuse of discretion.

[4] Also, the trial court made findings of several distinct misrepresentations made by defendant to plaintiff, any one of which would have been sufficient to have supported the judgment, and some of which, it is admitted by defendant, were alleged in the complaint before the amendment complained of, and on account of which the continuance was requested. We therefore think that, upon an examination of the entire record, there can be no doubt that justice has been done between the parties.

[5] The tender of restoration made by the plaintiff, in exercising his right of rescission of the contract, was made in the language of the statute. He offered to restore to the defendant "everything of value or otherwise" received from defendant, which offer was refused by defendant. The contention that the trial court should have provided in its decree that the plaintiff reimburse the defendant for any expenses to which he might have been put in the upkeep of the property is also without merit. Defendant did not introduce any evidence that he had been put to any expense, and he has had the value of the use and occupation of a ranch valued at $16,000 for more than three years. The value of the use and occupation of this property is probably greater than the expense of its upkeep, plus the interest on the $5,000 received by plaintiff; and, if none of these items were taken into consideration by the trial court, this fact would seem to be in favor of the defendant. At any rate, if defendant had any complaint upon this ground, he should have introduced evidence upon this point. In the absence of any information in the record concerning his expenditures, the decree is certainly an equitable one.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHULER v. CORL. (Civ. 2592.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Dec. 18, 1918.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨202(2)—PRE-SUMPTIONS—RECORD ON APPEAL.

Where it cannot be determined from record when complaint was filed, but it appears that second amended complaint was filed on certain date, it will be assumed as affecting limitations that date of filing of second amended complaint was date of commencement of action.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨50(2)—MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨8(3)—CONTRACTS OF EMPLOYMENT—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

A contract of employment "for as long a period as plaintiff should choose to work for defendant, whether a month or years," at $30 per month, was a contract from month to month, and the various sums of money which would become due to plaintiff would accrue at end of each month, at which time limitations would begin to run.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨178—MUTUAL AND OPEN ACCOUNT.

In action for personal services based on a contract executed out of the state, allegations of complaint held not to sufficiently show course of reciprocal transactions between the parties such as would bring plaintiff's claim under the four-year statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337) and relieve it from bar of two-year statute (section 339).

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨178—MUTUAL ACCOUNT—PLEADING.

In action for personal services based on a writing made out of the state, where it was alleged in complaint that defendant "allowed plaintiff, or caused to be paid to plaintiff, or suffered to be collected by plaintiff, certain sums of money," it must be assumed, in absence of any positive allegation regarding the same, that such sums were applied as payment for services rendered, and not that reciprocal demands arose which would relieve the main claim of plaintiff from bar of two-year statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 339), and bring it within four-year statute (section 337).

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨54(2)—"MUTUAL ACCOUNT"—PAYMENTS OF MONEY.

A payment, whether it be of money or of any article of personal property of stipulated value, made on account, would not make the account a "mutual account," within the meaning of four-year statute of limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 337.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Evalina Shuler against John Y. Corl. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George M. Harker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ernest B. Coil, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff sued to recover a sum of money in excess of $5,000 as compensation for services alleged to have been rendered to the defendant. A demurrer was sustained to the second amended complaint, and plaintiff declining to amend further, judgment followed in favor of the defendant, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

[1] By the demurrer the defendant particularly urged that the alleged causes of action set out in the amended complaint were barred by both the two-year and four-year limitation. Sections 337, 339, Code Civ. Proc. It was further urged that the contract as claimed by the plaintiff was void under the statute of frauds as being one which was not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. It cannot be determined from the record presented when the original complaint was filed in the action, but it does appear that the second amended complaint was filed on the 7th day of November 1914. In the absence of a different showing made by appellant, we must assume, for the purpose of considering the question relating to the statute of limitations, that this was the date of the commencement of the action. The amended complaint may not be exhibited as an example of concise pleading; its allegations extend to much detail, containing many matters of recital and disjunctive assertions. After alleging the residence of the parties to be in the county of Los Angeles, paragraph II of said complaint proceeds as follows:

"That, to wit, within one (1) month before the 1st of May, 1900, the plaintiff, then working for a drug company at a salary of thirty ($30.00) dollars per month at the city of Amsterdam, state of New York, received through the United States mail a written offer from the defendant, then residing at Spencer, state of South Dakota, to engage the plaintiff's labor and services in general housework for as long a period as the plaintiff should choose to work for defendant, whether a month or years, and in said letter defendant promised to pay plaintiff for said work a reasonable sum, and specifically promised to pay her in excess of what she was receiving at that time, to wit, thirty ($30.00) dollars per month, exclusive of her lodging and board, which reasonable value for said work, throughout all times mentioned in this complaint, the plaintiff has claimed and still alleges to be forty ($40.00) dollars per month, exclusive of her said room and board."

The next allegation recites that the plaintiff accepted the offer of the defendant and went, on the 1st day of May, 1900, to the place of residence of the defendant, then in South Dakota, and entered upon the performance of the services, and that she continued to work for the defendant up to May 31, 1912, except during the months of February and April of that year; she then alleges that defendant changed his residence several times after she entered upon her work with him; that he resided in South Dakota until September 1, 1900; that he resided at Minneapolis from September 1, 1900, to October 1, 1903; that he resided at Fairmont, Los Angeles county, from October 1, 1903, to May 31, 1912. It is then alleged that—

"There was never any specific understanding or agreement between the plaintiff and defendant as to just when said services were to be paid for, except that she was to have her pay in full upon quitting his services; that from as early as the first year of her said employment plaintiff requested defendant to pay, at odd times, the specific times she cannot now recall, what he was able to pay, and plaintiff has since said first year, throughout all the years aforesaid, times too numerous to mention and the dates and places of which she cannot specifically recall, demanded of defendant the amounts above set out, or any amount he was able to pay at said various times, on account; but he (the defendant) did invariably promise that he could not pay then, but that he could and would pay her up in full for all her services later on, not mentioning any particular time; and particularly in the month of December, 1911, a more specific date plaintiff cannot recall, at the said Fairmont residence, this county and state, said defendant did again promise to pay her in full for all her services, not mentioning any particular amount, but that, defendant not having kept his promises, nor any part of them, plaintiff, in said month of May, to wit, May 31, 1912, finally quit said employment and terminated her services for the defendant then and there, at said Fairmont, Cal."

It will be noticed that more than two years elapsed from the date when the plaintiff quit the services of defendant to the date of the commencement of her suit. An attempt is made further by the plaintiff to show a course of mutual dealing between plaintiff and defendant so as to bring the account within the characterization of "open, mutual, and current."

[2] Before considering the question last suggested, it may be stated that, in our opinion, the contract as made with the defendant was a contract from month to month, notwithstanding she has alleged that the offer was to engage her "for as long a period as the plaintiff should choose to work for defendant, whether a month or years." Literally considered, the plaintiff's employment under the contract, as she alleges it, was for life, unless she chose sooner to terminate it; the defendant had no option in that matter. Such contracts, where the engagement has been asserted to be that for "permanent" employment, are held to mean that it is to continue so long as both parties agree and that either one may terminate it. Lord v. Goldberg, 81 Cal. 596, 22 Pac. 1126, 15 Am. St. Rep. 82; Christensen v. Pacific Coast Borax Co., 26 Or. 302, 38 Pac. 127; Speeder Cycle Co. v. Teeter, 18 Ind. App. 474, 48 N. E. 595. We are of the opinion that it should be held, under the contract here alleged, that the various sums of money which would become due to plaintiff would accrue at the end of each month during the period of her employment. The "written request" by which the engagement of employment was proposed was made out of the state. The two-year statute of limitation had fully run as against the claims for monthly compensation. The second and third counts in the complaint are statements of the same alleged cause of action framed in general to answer the requirements of common count pleading. For the reason we have given, the same statute of limitation would apply in bar of those causes of action.

[3-5] The second question presented is as to whether, under the allegations of the amended complaint, it may be said that a mutual, open, and current account is shown to have existed between plaintiff and defendant, so as to make applicable the four-year statute. Section 337, Code Civ. Proc. We have examined the cases cited by appellant in support of the contention that a mutual account is shown, among them Santa Rosa National Bank v. Barnett, 125 Cal. 407, 58 Pac. 85, and Norton v. Larco, 30 Cal. 126, 89 Am. Dec. 70. In this case plaintiff first alleged, as showing her indebtedness to the defendant, as follows:

"That throughout the time the plaintiff worked for defendant as aforesaid, the defendant has allowed the plaintiff, or caused to be paid to the plaintiff, or suffered to be collected by the plaintiff, certain sums of money specifically set out in Exhibit A, made a part of this complaint, to the amount of $748.30, but whether the defendant intended said sums to apply on what the defendant owes and did owe the plaintiff, the plaintiff is unable to state, because there has never been any specific understanding or agreement concerning the same."

This allegation follows:

"That on the other hand, plaintiff had loaned and advanced to the defendant small amounts of money at odd times, at defendant's then place of residence, wherever it was, as above set out, between the years January 1, 1907, to August 1, 1912, as specifically set out in Exhibit A, and the plaintiff has also transferred and set over to defendant, at defendant's request, various furniture and kitchen utensils belonging to plaintiff, the reasonable value of which was $50, as specifically set out in Exhibit A, the total amount of said open account due from defendant to plaintiff, for money loaned and goods, wares and merchandise as aforesaid, being $170, none of which has ever been paid by defendant to plaintiff."

As to the sum of money alleged to have been received by the plaintiff, the allegations are in the disjunctive as to how that money was received, but the allegation is positive that there never was any specific understanding or agreement concerning the application of the same. Construing that allegation most strongly against the pleader, where she herself makes no positive allegation regarding the same, we must assume that it was applied as payment and if so applied, on amounts which had previously accrued in her favor; and if this was done no reciprocal demand would arise. As said in Norton v. Larco, supra:

"A payment, whether it be of money or of any article of personal property of a stipulated value, made on account, would not make the account a mutual account consisting of reciprocal demands. * * *

We have quoted the allegation respecting the other matters alleged to constitute items showing the account to be mutual, open, and current. In our opinion, they do not sufficiently show a course of reciprocal transactions had between the parties within the rule of the cases, and did not relieve the main claim of the plaintiff from the bar of the statute.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §81(4)—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Contract for commissions on all sales of liquor made in designated territory construed to entitle agent to commissions on sales, where his customers made particular purchases at the principal's winery, not in such district; delivery being made in the agent's district.

2. CUSTOMS AND USAGES §10—TRADE USAGE.

In an agent's action on a contract for commissions on all sales of wine and brandy within designated district, evidence was admissible of a trade usage whereby an agent is allowed commission on sales made to customers in the agent's territory, directly by the principal.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §1071(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action for commissions for sale of wines and brandy under a contract requiring commissions to be calculated on a minimum price, that referee took as the minimum the lowest price at which any grade of brandy or wine was sold during any six-month period, if error, held harmless, where court took testimony independent of report, and it did not appear that the court acted upon the referee's tabulation.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §931(5)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by A. Caro against A. Mattei. From the judgment and from order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Barbour & Cashin, Alva E. Snow, and G. C. Freeman, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Everts & Ewing, of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial in an action for commissions upon sales of wine and brandy, of which the defendant was a manufacturer. By a contract dated January 2, 1912, he employed the plaintiff "as his sole representative for the sale of wines and brandies in the United States except the state of California, for the term of two years," subject to the terms and conditions contained in said contract. Defendant agreed to pay plaintiff "as compensation for his services * * * a commission on all sales of the first party's wines and brandies made in the representative's territory of seven and one-half per cent. on the minimum price per gallon f. o. b. wineries and distilleries" of defendant, "and a commission of twelve and one-half per cent. on all wines and brandies sold at eight cents or more above the minimum price." The contract further provided that the defendant should have the right to fix all prices.

[1,2] The court, we think, correctly included in its judgment commission claimed on a number of sales for delivery outside the limits of California in cases where the purchasers were customers of the plaintiff conducting their business in plaintiff's territory, although such customers made these particular purchases at the winery of the defendant within this state. The defendant himself had so construed the contract. In at least one case, that of a sale and delivery of goods made in plaintiff's territory, in which the negotiations were not conducted personally, either through the plaintiff or defendant, the latter, recognizing that the purchaser was a customer of the plaintiff, credited him with commission upon the sale. Evidence was also admitted, and properly, we think, tending to show that there was in California a well-established trade usage, according to which an agent is allowed commission on sales made in the agent's territory. Technically, it might be said that since the defendant reserved the right to reject any order taken by plaintiff, no sale was in fact made until approved by defendant, so that no sale could be made outside the limits of California. But if such a construction were adopted it would leave the plaintiff entitled to no commission upon any sales. We think that under a fair construction of the contract, and according to the interpretation placed upon its terms by the defendant himself, the plaintiff was entitled to commission on such sales made for delivery in his territory. This case differs from Golden Gate Packing Co. v. Farmers' Union, 55 Cal. 606, cited by appellant. In that case the selling agent was given the exclusive agency in certain territory for the sale of certain products, and the contract provided that it should have a commission on such sales, but in the case at bar the respondent was not only given the exclusive agency in the territory set out in the contract, but the language of the contract further provides that he shall be paid a commission upon all sales of appellant's wines and brandies made in respondent's territory. In the case cited, the language of the contract could not be construed as creating an obligation to pay commissions except upon sales made by the agent.

[3] We need not determine in this case what is meant by the expression used in the contract "minimum price," for, assuming that the defendant's definition of that phrase is correct, and that he is also correct in his contention that the commission should be calculated according to the dates of certain schedules established by him, still we are unable to say that the court committed any error in this regard. It is true that the referee, in making up his report, divided the time covered by the contract into six-month periods, and took as the minimum in arriving at plaintiff's commission the lowest price at which any grade of wine or brandy was sold during those respective periods, but testimony independent of the report was heard by the court; and assuming, contrary to the claim of plaintiff, that the method adopted was not consented to by defendant, still, as there is nothing in the record to indicate that the court acted upon the referee's tabulation so made up in six-month periods, we cannot, for the reason here assigned, reverse the judgment.

[4] The only other point relied upon by the defendant upon this appeal is the claim that the court admitted evidence showing certain sales made prior to the operation of the contract, but of which shipment was made during such operation. It is true that if commissions were in fact allowed on those sales the judgment ought to be modified to the extent thereof. As some deliveries were made after January 2, 1912, the date when plaintiff's employment under the contract commenced, of orders taken by plaintiff in 1911, it was doubtless deemed advisable that the referee's report, under a separate and proper heading, should distinguish between such sales and those made during the contract period—the latter forming the basis of the litigation—in the same way that the report segregated sales made before the expiration of the contract, but of which delivery was made after such expiration. In fact, it was stipulated in so many words that the referee's report should embrace the very matter now objected to. And there is nothing in the record to indicate that the judgment rendered by the court included commission on any sales made prior to January 2, 1912, when the contract went into effect. The testimony in the record without conflict is to the effect that those matters were fully adjusted by the parties, and we cannot assume that the court ignored that evidence. Moreover, from the findings of the court we think it appears that the court based its conclusion as to the amount of money due plaintiff only upon sales made under the contract and took into consideration no prior sales.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Matilda G. Deasy against Charles H. Taylor and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hennessy & Peterson, of Grass Valley, and Chas. W. Kitts and Chas. M. Bufford, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Snook & Church, of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants, Charles H. Taylor, Edward F. Taylor, Joseph E. Taylor, John McKenna, also known as Jas. F. McKenna, Cornelius I. Harkins, Catherine Harkins, Matilda Harkins, G. S. Stevenson, as administrator of the estate of Cecelia Stevenson, deceased, and George S. Stevenson, from a judgment of the superior court of Alameda county, adjudging and decreeing certain agreements and transfers executed by the plaintiff in favor of the defendants to be null and void, and also from the order denying the said defendants' motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellants' first contention is that certain findings of the trial court are not sustained by the evidence. We have carefully read the discussion in appellants' brief upon this subject. That discussion, however, is, upon the whole, a discussion of the weight of the evidence. The objections are to seven different findings. It would serve no useful purpose to go into a discussion of the evidence, and to point out in detail the support for each of these findings separately. The objection to many of them is the same. Suffice it to say that an examination of the record discloses to us that the evidence on these matters is conflicting, and the findings of the trial court may not, therefore, be disturbed by this court.

[2] There seems to us to be only one point in the various contentions of the appellants against these findings which needs to be specifically noticed here. It is this: Appellants in their brief set out the following findings:

"Cecelia McFadden Stevenson and said defendant George S. Stevenson, well knowing she (plaintiff) was sick and intoxicated, and unable to transact any business, fraudulently procured and caused her to sign. * * *

"Said George S. Stevenson, well knowing her (plaintiff's) condition, and that she was sick and intoxicated, and incapable of knowing or understanding any business whatever, or to understand the nature, purport, or effect of any paper or document she might sign or execute, and by means of his influence and control of plaintiff's mind and will did fraudulently procure and cause the plaintiff to sign. * * *

The appellant argues that there is "not in the transcript one word with respect to any fraudulent practice or representation on the part of either Stevenson or his wife, and not one word with any implication of that sort," and argues therefrom that the insertion in the findings of the statement that Stevenson acted fraudulently gives a false color to the whole case. The answer to the objection seems very obvious. The trial court found—and it is our view that such findings are supported by the evidence—that at the time of the execution of the instruments involved in this action the plaintiff was unable to transact any business, or understand or comprehend what she was doing, and her mind was wholly bereft of reason or understanding;" that Cecelia McFadden Stevenson and George S. Stevenson, well knowing plaintiff's incapacity as aforesaid, procured her signature to said papers; that said George S. Stevenson, at the time mentioned in the complaint, represented and acted as the agent of the said plaintiff, and pretended to and did claim to act as and for the plaintiff, and also had the confidence and trust of the plaintiff, and had a great and controlling influence during all said times over the mind and will of the plaintiff, and did during all of the said times control and influence her mind in accordance with his wishes and desires, etc.

These findings certainly make the actions of the defendant George S. Stevenson amount to a constructive fraud upon the plaintiff. The most that can be said for the appellants' objection is that the finding of fraudulent conduct upon the part of the said George S. Stevenson should have been embodied in the conclusion of law based upon the findings, rather than in the findings themselves. Knowing plaintiff's physical and mental condition, it was certainly a fraud upon her for Stevenson to secure her signature to the assignments and agreements.

[3] The appellants rightly state that the contracts, even under the findings of the trial court, were not void but only voidable.

This brings the case to a point where it was necessary for the plaintiff to rescind the contracts. The Civil Code (section 1691) prescribes the essential elements of a valid rescission. We think the plaintiff has complied therewith. The relevant portions of that section are as follows:

"1. He must rescind promptly upon discovering the facts which entitle him to rescind, if he is free from duress, menace, undue influence, or disability, and is aware of his right to rescind; and,

"2. He must restore to the other party everything of value which he has received from him under the contract; or must offer to restore the same, upon condition that such party shall do likewise, unless the latter is unable or positively refuses to do so."

[4] In the first place, appellants contend that the record shows that plaintiff had knowledge of the assignments as early as January 21, 1913, and that the present action was not begun until December 9, 1913, and that the plaintiff is therefore guilty of laches. There is also a conflict in the evidence on the question of when plaintiff discovered the facts, and the trial court must have passed upon the question of laches in rendering its judgment. As has often been said, there is no artificial rule as to the lapse of time or circumstances which will justify the application of this doctrine. Suhr v. Lauterbach, 164 Cal. 591, 130 Pac. 2. The section of the Code above quoted says that a party desiring to rescind must do so promptly upon discovering the facts and becoming aware of his right to rescind. We are pointed to no evidence of when the plaintiff became aware of her right to rescind. Even taking appellants' view of the evidence, action was brought in less than a year after the facts were discovered by the plaintiff. The court found that the plaintiff had received no consideration for the assignments in question; and the case of Suhr v. Lauterbach, supra, in effect holds that where such is the case, and third parties cannot be prejudiced by the delay of the party seeking to rescind, such party may commence an action to rescind the contract or cancel the instrument at any time within the period allowed by the statute of limitations. In other words, before the doctrine of laches intervenes, some person must be shown to have been injured by the plaintiff's delay. Obviously, if appellants' have parted with no consideration, they cannot be injured by plaintiff's delay, which we consider not to be an unreasonable one under all the circumstances of the case.

[5] As to the second requirement of the section of the Code above quoted, the court found that the plaintiff had received no consideration from the defendants. At any rate, it is clear from the evidence that the plaintiff received nothing of value, and therefore there is nothing that she is required to return.

[6] Appellants make the point that as the trial court found that Stevenson did not act as the agent of the other defendants in the action, and that said other defendants did not confederate with him, nor was there any conspiracy among them to defraud plaintiff, the plaintiff is not entitled to rescission as against the defendants other than said Stevenson. Appellants rely for support of this proposition upon section 1689 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"1. If the consent of the party rescinding * * * was obtained through duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence, exercised by or with the connivance of the party as to whom he rescinds, or of any other party to the contract jointly interested with such party * * *."

The trial court found that "Cecelia McFadden Stevenson and George S. Stevenson * * * fraudulently procured and caused plaintiff to sign" the instruments. Cecelia McFadden Stevenson was jointly interested with the other defendants in the subject-matter of these contracts; i. e., the estate of her deceased aunt, Matilda A. Quinn. We think, therefore, that a finding that she had been guilty of fraud in procuring the contracts would entitle plaintiff to rescind against the other defendants jointly interested with her, under the terms of the section of the Code last above quoted.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MERCHANTS' & INSURERS' REPORTING CO. v. YOUTZ et al. (Civ. 2601.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §867(3)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—DECISION ON DEMURRER—NEW TRIAL.

That a demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained for want of a sufficient statement of facts cannot be considered on an appeal from an order granting a new trial.

2. CORPORATIONS §60—"CAPITAL STOCK"—PROFITS AND DIVIDENDS—PROCEEDS OF SALE OF STOCK.

The entire proceeds of sales by a corporation of its own stock, even when sold for more than par value, are part of its capital stock, and therefore cannot be profits earned through the conduct of its business out of which dividends may be paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Capital Stock.]

3. CORPORATIONS 60—"CAPITAL STOCK"— DIMINUTION.

The phrase "capital stock," as used in Civ. Code, § 309, means not the shares of which the nominal capital is composed, but the actual capital, contributed by shareholders; that is, assets with which to carry on its corporate business.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by the Merchants' & Insurers' Reporting Company, a corporation, against Joshua E. Youtz and another. Judgment for defendants, and from an order granting a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry W. Nisbet, Harriman, Ryckman & Tuttle, and Newmire & Morris, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Slosson & Mitchell and Leonard B. Slosson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of California. It was charged by the complaint in this action that during the years 1911 and 1912, while the defendants were members of the board of directors of the plaintiff, and with the knowledge and consent of the defendants, the said board of directors declared and paid to the stockholders of the corporation eight quarterly dividends, amounting in all to the sum of $34,000; that said dividends were not made from the surplus profits arising from the business of the corporation, but were paid out of the proceeds of the sale of its capital stock; that the corporation has never at any time during its existence engaged in any business from which it derived a profit, and that it did not have, during said years of 1911 and 1912, a surplus on hand out of which to pay dividends. Judgment was demanded against the defendants, and each of them, for the amount of dividends so paid. The liability sought to be imposed upon the defendants arises from the provisions of section 309 of the Civil Code. According to that section, where directors of a corporation are guilty of the acts there denounced, they are jointly and severally liable to the corporation "to the full amount of the capital stock so divided, withdrawn, paid out, or reduced. * * *

At the trial of this action, the court made findings that the dividends were declared in a sum stated, which was slightly less than the aggregate amount named in the complaint, of which a stated amount was paid in cash and the remainder was credited to certain stockholders upon interest due and unpaid by them upon promissory notes given by them to the corporation as the purchase price of their stock; that the dividends paid in cash were paid from the surplus profits arising from the business of the corporation, and that no dividend declared or paid was paid out of the capital stock of the corporation. The court found, also, that the plaintiff, down to the close of the year 1912, engaged in business, and that it did, during the years 1911 and 1912, have a surplus in its treasury out of which to pay dividends; that the capital stock of the plaintiff was not impaired, nor were its assets dissipated by the payment of said dividends. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. Thereafter the plaintiff moved for a new trial, which motion was granted. The defendants appeal from the order granting the motion for a new trial.

[1] The contention presented on behalf of appellants to the effect that their demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint should have been sustained for want of a sufficient statement of facts cannot be considered on this appeal, this being an appeal from an order granting a new trial. Rauer v. Fay, 128 Cal. 523, 61 Pac. 90.

The facts concerning the income and expenses of the corporation appear, without conflict, from the evidence. Prior to June, 1910, the corporation had no income except from sales of shares of stock; during that time it expended $30,429.91, of which $3,658.09 was for general expenses, and the remainder was paid out as commissions for sales of stock. Between June 1, 1910, and December 31, 1912, the sales of capital stock amounted to $128,169.17, of which "only a part" was received in cash. During the period last named, the corporation also received on account of interest on its investments, on its promissory notes and on its bank deposits, the sum of $5,971.98, paid out for office expenses $4,117.68, and as commissions on sales of stock the sum of $32,782.47. Without further detail of items shown, suffice it to say that the corporation never had any surplus profits out of which any dividends could have been paid, unless the moneys received as "premiums" above the par value of stock sold might be segregated from the assets of the corporation and treated as profits of its business.

[2, 3] We are satisfied that the entire proceeds of sales by a corporation of its own stock, even when sold for more than par value, are part of its original assets or capital stock, and therefore cannot be profits earned through the conduct of its business. The phrase "capital stock," as used in section 309 of the Civil Code, means "not the shares of which the nominal capital is composed, but the actual capital; i. e., assets, with which the corporation carries on its corporate business." Schulte v. Boulevard Gardens Land Co., 164 Cal. 464, 468, 129 Pac. 582, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 156, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1013. The sole purpose of selling stock is to acquire assets with which to carry on that business. This is equally true, whether the stock be sold at par, or below par, or above par. The capital stock referred to in said section 309 "is the actual property of the corporation contributed by the shareholders." Tapscott v. Mexican Colorado, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 664, 96 Pac. 271; Excelsior, etc., Co. v. Pierce, 90 Cal. 131, 140, 27 Pac. 44. It is, in brief, the "capital" of the corporation.

The conclusion necessarily follows that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the findings of the court.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

MARYLAND CASUALTY CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2691.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §375(1) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT."

Where an employé, while driving an automobile with which he was not familiar and which was owned by a fellow employé, who accompanied him on business for his employer, was killed in a collision with an electric car, no injunction being laid upon them by their employer as to who should operate the machine or what kind should be used, he was acting within the course of his employment within Workmen's Compensation Act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §380—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — "WILLFUL MISCONDUCT."

Where an employé on his master's business was killed in collision with an electric car, while driving an automobile, his unfamiliarity with that particular kind of machine constituted negligence on his part only, and not willful misconduct so as to defeat an award of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Willful Misconduct.]

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Law (St. 1917, p. 831) by Mrs. Dora E. Showalter and Roland L. Showalter, a minor, by his guardian ad litem and trustee, Mrs. Dora E. Showalter, claimants, to recover for the death of F. R. Showalter, employé, opposed by the Maryland Casualty Company, insurer, and the Union Hardware & Metal Company, employer. From an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of claimant, the insurer and employer bring certiorari. Award affirmed.

H. W. Kidd, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Certiorari to review proceedings and determination made by the Industrial Accident Commission under which there was an award of compensation to the widow of F. R. Showalter. Showalter was an employé of petitioner Union Hardware & Metal Company. He died as a result of injuries received by collision between an interurban electric car and an automobile which he was driving. There is no dispute as to Showalter having been in the employ of the company mentioned on the day when the injuries were received, or that he was at the time traveling from the city of Los Angeles to the city of San Pedro on business of his employer. Petitioners contend, however, that under the evidence no award should have been made, because of the willful misconduct of the deceased, and because Showalter, at the time he suffered the injuries, was not performing an act in the course of or growing out of his employment. The testimony heard by the commission showed that Showalter and one MacKenzie were employed at the large mercantile establishment of the petitioner Union Hardware & Metal Company; that they were subject to the orders of the secretary; that the secretary desired them to go to the city of San Pedro and make the acquaintance of certain agents of a shipbuilding plant. This for the purpose of facilitating sales between the company and the shipbuilders. The secretary designated the day on which the men were to go, and the two employés started on the morning of the day mentioned to make the journey. MacKenzie owned a small automobile which he was in the habit of using on the business of the company, and for the use of which compensation was made to him—at least he was reimbursed for the fuel used. Showalter also owned an automobile of a different kind. The secretary of the corporation testified that after arranging for the trip of the two men, he heard talk between them to the effect that they would take Showalter's machine. They did not do this, but started on the trip in the small machine owned by MacKenzie. No dispute is made but that, in so far as the choice of an automobile was concerned, it was immaterial to the company what machine was used, and that whatever selection was made in that regard the company approved of it. It appeared that Showalter was an experienced driver of an automobile. He was not, however, accustomed to the use of the kind of machine used for the particular trip which was undertaken on the day in question. After leaving the more congested portion of the city, MacKenzie, who had operated the machine up to that point, exchanged seats with Showalter, and Showalter proceeded from then on to guide and control the machine. The men had proceeded to a point on South Main street, where an interurban car line crossed that thoroughfare, and at that point the automobile was struck by a trolley car. MacKenzie testified at the hearing before the commission, and was asked to state the circumstances. We quote portions of his testimony:

"We saw the car, and we kind of slowed down, and Mr. Showalter was not used to driving a Ford car, and we never realized any danger when we first saw the car."

MacKenzie further stated that the car was from 150 to 200 feet away when they saw it. The following further testimony was given by this witness:

"Q. Was it coming at a good rate of speed? A. Apparently it was, from the way it struck the machine. Q. What kind of a driver was Mr. Showalter? A. He was a very careful man. Q. In your opinion, was he exercising due care and caution at this particular time? A. Absolutely. Q. Then what, in your opinion, was responsible for the accident? A. His lack of knowledge of the machine. That is the only thing that I can account for it. * * * Q. You were showing him how to operate a Ford car when this accident happened? A. Yes, sir. I showed him different points on it. Q. And isn't it further a fact that it was at his request that you let him drive the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. Didn't he say to you in substance that he wanted to learn how to drive a Ford car? A. Yes, he said he would like to learn. Q. And it was at that time that you let him take the wheel of the car? A. No, we talked machines quite a long time going down there. He was quite enthusiastic about mechanics and so forth, and we were talking of different machines, and he was asking me different points on the machine and so forth, and he seemed to understand parts of it, and other parts he did not understand, and I tried to explain to him what he didn't understand. * * * Q. What, if any, change was there in the speed of your automobile from the time you first saw the car until the accident occurred? A. As I say, the car kind of slowed down at first. Q. The automobile? A. Yes. Q. Did you say anything to Mr. Showalter about slowing up? A. Yes, I called his attention to it. I said, 'There is a car, Rolly; I think we had better slow down a little bit.' Q. What, if anything, did he say to you in reply? A. He slowed the car down. Q. What do you think was the cause of the accident? A. I think the cause of the accident was simply his not being familiar with the machine. * * * Q. Didn't the car suddenly shoot ahead just before the accident happened—the automobile, I mean? A. It seems to me that it did; as far as I can remember, it did. * * * Q. And it was the first time he had ever driven a Ford car? A. Yes."

The motorman of the electric car which collided with the automobile testified that he saw MacKenzie immediately after the accident, and that MacKenzie came up to him and told him that he had told Showalter to "go ahead; he could make it." MacKenzie testified that he had no recollection one way or the other about having made that statement.

[1, 2] In our opinion, this evidence fails to sustain the contention of petitioners that at the time Showalter suffered his injuries he was not engaged in an act arising out of his employment, or that he was guilty of willful misconduct. It was conceded that the men had the right to travel by an automobile of their own choosing, and the employer laid no injunction upon them as to who should operate the machine. No doubt, by the conduct of Showalter, the risk of injury was enhanced because of his lack of familiarity with the machine he was engaged in driving, but contributory negligence constituted no defense. The case is not unlike that shown in Rideout Co. v. Pillsbury et al., 173 Cal. 132, 159 Pac. 435. There a deck hand working on a barge fell from the deck of the same and was drowned. It was shown that his duties consisted only of helping to unload the barge; that the loading had been done and the barge was on its way from San Francisco to Oakland, at which latter place it was to be unloaded. The deck hand had no duties to perform during the voyage. There was a house provided for the men to remain in while crossing the bay, and they were free to amuse themselves there if they chose. The deck hand did not remain in the house, but was observed by another employé outside on the deck, leaning against a post, apparently asleep. This employé took hold of the deck hand's clothing and aroused him saying: "Frank, you crazy? Come on inside." The deck hand answered: "No; leave me alone." He was left there, and later his body was found floating in the waters of the bay. An award was made by the commission and affirmed by the Supreme Court. In that case it is plain that the employé was negligent in leaving the safe place provided by his employer for his accommodation and remaining upon deck and going to sleep in a place where he was likely to be thrown overboard. Assuredly he greatly added to the risks of his employment, but such act on his part constituted negligence only, which was no bar to a recovery under the statute. In Elk Grove Union High School Dist. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 34 Cal. App. 589, 168 Pac. 392, it is said:

"A person is not to be denied compensation under the Compensation Act merely because his injury has been superinduced by mismanaging the duties of his employment, unless such mismanagement amounts to willful misconduct."

Had orders been given by the employer of Showalter forbidding him to operate any particular automobile which might be used on the business of the company, then perhaps a violation of that injunction might amount to willful misconduct. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Com'n, 174 Cal. 616, at page 621, 163 Pac. 1013. As we have before stated, however, no such instructions were given to Showalter or MacKenzie; the men had freedom of choice as to the automobile to be used, and so also apparently as to the driver who might operate it. And so we conclude that the act of Showalter in driving the automobile at the time in question was, in view of his inexperience in the handling of that particular machine, a mere act of negligence which was the proximate cause of the injury, but which act in no way interposed as a bar to prevent an award of compensation being made.

The total award made by the commission to the widow, for herself and a minor child, was the sum of $5,004.98. Assuming that the reasonableness of an award is subject to review in this proceeding, we are not prepared to agree with petitioners that the award as made was for an unreasonable amount. Its amount was within the limit fixed by the statute. We think that there was substantial evidence to sustain the findings of the commission, and, this being true, it is the duty of the court to affirm the award. Southern Pac. Co. v. Industrial Accident Com'n (Sup.) 170 Pac. 822.

The award is affirmed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨771—BRIEFS—FAILURE TO FILE WITHIN TIME REQUIRED—RELIEF FROM DEFAULT.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 473, appellant failing to file brief within required time will be relieved from default upon a proper showing that default was due to mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨771—FILING OF BRIEF—RELIEF FROM DEFAULT—INADVERTENCE OF LAW CLERK.

Where clerk employed by appellant's counsel was charged with the duty of notifying counsel when briefs were required to be filed, and through inadvertence neglected to so do, appellant, having good ground for appeal, will be relieved from default in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for failure to file brief within required time.

Action by E. G. Borgmeyer against J. B. Solomon. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On plaintiff's motion to dismiss defendant's appeal, and on defendant's motion to be relieved from default for failure to file brief within required time, and for leave to file brief. Motion to dismiss appeal denied, and defendant's motion to file brief granted.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Philip Cohen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. This case comes up on respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal for appellant's failure to file brief in time, and appellant's motion to be relieved from his default on the ground of inadvertence and excusable neglect, and for leave to file his brief tendered therewith.

The time for filing appellant's brief, as extended pursuant to stipulation, expired October 22, 1918. Four days thereafter, no brief having been filed, respondent served and filed notice of this motion to dismiss. Appellant's counter motion for relief is based on affidavits from which it appears that appellant's counsel who was charged with the conduct of this litigation relied upon a clerk in his office to keep him advised of the time when briefs in the pending cases were required to be filed; that the employé who was charged with this duty, through inadvertence, neglected to so inform him respecting this case; and that he was wholly unaware that the time for filing this brief had expired or was about to expire until the notice of motion to dismiss was served. Other facts are stated from which it sufficiently appears that appellant was proceeding in good faith with the prosecution of this appeal. There are also affidavits, both by appellant and his counsel, showing that appellant was advised by his counsel and in good faith believes that good grounds for the appeal exist.

[1, 2] The rules of court requiring briefs on appeal to be filed within the time specified undoubtedly confer rights which may be enforced by litigants. (See opinion of this court in Wood v. Mesmer, Civil No. 2750, 178 Pac. 314, filed December 10, 1918, and cases there cited.) It is equally certain, however, that the rights so conferred are subject to the right and power of the court, upon a proper showing, to relieve a party from his default on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. Brooks v. Union Trust Co., 146 Cal. 134, 138, 79 Pac. 843; Santa Paula Waterworks v. Peralta, 5 Cal. Unrep., 779, 42 Pac. 239; Estate of Lakemeyer, 6 Cal. Unrep. 695, 65 Pac. 475, 110 Pac. at page 112. As was said by the Supreme Court in Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. at page 115;

"There can be no doubt that where such default is made under circumstances which would show good cause for relief under the decision on that subject in applications under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, whether that section be applicable to the Supreme Court or not, this court should grant similar relief, allow the transcript to be filed after the time fixed by the rule, and retain the appeal."

[3] The showing made by the affidavits presented by appellant in support of his motion brings this case fairly within the rule thus laid down.

Respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal is denied and appellant's motion for leave to file his brief tendered therewith is granted.

BLAIR v. WESSINGER et al. (Civ. 2560.)

1. EVIDENCE $\hookrightarrow$ 452 — PAROL — EXTRINSIC AMBIGUITY—GUARANTY FOR RENT.

In an action against guarantors of the payment of rent under a lease which failed clearly to describe the property leased, oral evidence was competent to explain an extrinsic ambiguity, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, against an objection that it constituted a variance of the written lease.

2. EVIDENCE $\hookrightarrow$ 460(5)—GUARANTY FOR RENT —PROPERTY INCLUDED.

In an action against guarantors for the payment of rent under a lease which failed clearly to describe the property, evidence identifying the property leased was admissible, in view of Civ. Code, § 1647, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1860, to show what property was included.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT $\hookrightarrow$ 122—EVIDENCE —PROPERTY INCLUDED—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action against guarantors of the payment of rent under a lease which did not clearly identify the property leased, evidence held to sustain a finding that a small store in the rear of the store occupied by lessees was not included in the lease.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT $\hookrightarrow$ 177(3)—KNOWLEDGE OF AGENT — PROPERTY INCLUDED WITHIN LEASE.

The knowledge of the responsible agent of the guarantors of payment of rent under a lease as to what property is included is binding upon the guarantors in a subsequent action against them on the guaranty.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1170(3) — REVERSIBLE ERROR—RULINGS AS TO PLEADINGS.

In an action against guarantors for the payment of rent, an amendment of pleadings which did not modify or diminish force of original pleading is no ground for setting aside judgment, where no miscarriage of justice has resulted, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

6. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL $\hookrightarrow$ 5—ACTIONS AGAINST GUARANTORS FOR RENT—PENDENCY OF SUIT.

The pendency of an action between a lessor and his lessees for rent is no bar against an independent action by the lessor against the guarantors of the payment of rent under the lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Jennie M. Blair against Paul Wessinger and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco (Alvan C. Van Fleet, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action upon a contract by which defendants guaranteed the payment of certain rent of premises hereinafter described and let by the plaintiff to Ryan and Long.

The most important question in this case is the construction to be placed upon the description of the demised premises found in the lease. The description is as follows:

"The corner store situate in the four-story building at the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets, said store having a frontage of 15 feet on Ellis street and a uniform depth of 75 feet, and more particularly known and designated as No. 200 Ellis street, San Francisco, together with that portion of the basement thereunder which has been partitioned off for the use of said store."

This seems clear enough, but when the subject-matter of the lease is disclosed, a problem arises which is not so simple. On May 1, 1911, the plaintiff was the owner of the building on the northwest corner of Ellis and Mason streets, in the city of San Francisco, which had a front of 60 feet on Mason street and of 97 feet 6 inches on Ellis street. In the southeast corner of this building was a store with a frontage of 15 feet on Ellis street and a depth of 45 feet on Mason street, the entrance being on Ellis and the store being No. 200 Ellis street. In the rear of this store was a small store having a frontage of 15 feet on Mason street by a depth of 15 feet on Latham place, which ran parallel to Ellis street and bounded the building on the north side. The entrance to this small store was on Mason street, and it was known as No. 209 Mason street.

On the date mentioned, Ryan and Long hired the store No. 200 Ellis street for a period of five years, and the description in the lease is that above quoted. The question in this case is whether that description designating the property leased as No. 200 Ellis street, and also describing it as having a "uniform depth of 75 feet," covered only the store 15 by 45 feet in size and known as No. 200 Ellis street, or whether it covered the two stores above referred to.

Ryan and Long refused to pay further rent after having paid rent for three years. The appellants contend that the lease, by reason of the description of the property as having a depth of 75 feet, covered both stores. Ryan and Long never occupied the smaller store, but only the larger one (200 Ellis street) and the basement, but they and their guarantors, the appellants, claim that they were to have possession of the smaller store also as soon as the tenant thereof, known as the "Hasty Messenger Service," should vacate it, and that, not having been given possession thereof, Ryan and Long were in so far evicted, and, further, that the consent of Ryan and Long to occupy only the larger store and not the smaller store constituted a modification of the lease without the consent of the guarantors, which exonerated them.

The Hasty Messenger Service vacated the smaller store on August 31, 1913. The court admitted evidence of the situation of the property and enough correspondence between agents of the parties to acquaint the trial judge with the subject-matter of the lease and the situation of the parties in regard thereto, and thereupon it was seen that there was in the description of the property contained in the lease what was formerly called a "latent" or "hidden" ambiguity, and which is now in our Code denominated an "extrinsic" ambiguity. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856. It consists in this: That the store, 200 Ellis street, did not have a depth of 75 feet, but only a depth of 45 feet. The court thereupon found that the demised premises consisted of the store No. 200 Ellis street, and that it had a depth of 45 feet on Mason street, and did not embrace the smaller store No. 209 Mason street.

[1, 2] The appellant claims that the evidence admitted to show these facts was incompetent because varying the terms of the written lease by parol, and that the finding is against the evidence. The evidence which was admitted was competent as tending to explain an extrinsic ambiguity (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856), and also because it came within the rule permitting evidence of the circumstances under which the lease was made and the subject-matter thereof, so that the judge might be placed in the position of those whose language he was to interpret (Civ. Code, § 1647; Code Civ. Proc. § 1860).

There certainly was a conflict in the evidence as to whether it was the intention of the parties to include the smaller store in the lease. Ryan and Long both testified that they were to have the smaller store as soon as it was vacated by the Hasty Messenger Service. They also testified that pending the vacating of the smaller store by that tenant, they were to occupy a room 20 by 18 feet in size connected with No. 202 Ellis street, another store contained in plaintiff's building.

On September 29, 1911, Ryan and Long entered into a lease with one Bueneman, the tenant of 202 Ellis street, for this room 'n the rear of 202 Ellis street, at a rental of $20 per month, and they continued to occupy it from May 1, 1911, until July 1, 1914, regularly paying the rent from September 29, 1911, until July 1, 1914, nearly a year after the Hasty Messenger Service had vacated 209 Mason street. This is quite inconsistent with their claim that they were to have the use of this small room in the rear of 202 Ellis street in lieu of 209 Mason street while the latter place was occupied by the Hasty Messenger Service.

It also appears that one Buttner was the agent of the defendants in the negotiations for the lease, and that Sterling Carr was their attorney, and that George Starr was the agent of the plaintiff in that transaction. Certain correspondence between these parties was received in evidence, and in one of the letters from Starr to Carr, the latter was directly informed that the subject-matter of the lease was the "store for a saloon at the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets, not including the small store." Buttner testified as follows on this subject:

"Q. At that time you thought the words 'not to include the small store' meant the little store which we are denominating 200 Ellis street? A. Absolutely so; yes, sir.

"Q. If you had known that the plaintiff didn't intend to give Ryan & Long possession of what was known as 209 Mason street, the messenger office, you would not have secured the bond or entered into these negotiations? A. Not at that date."

[3] It is thus evident that Buttner knew of this letter. But it was the province of the trial court to place a construction upon all of this evidence, and it seems to us that this finding that the small store at 209 Mason street was not included in the lease was justified, and that it correctly resolved the extrinsic ambiguity in the language of the lease. There was no change in the terms of the lease. This is especially apparent when the description contained in the guarantee is taken into consideration. The premises were therein described as "that certain store known as 200 Ellis street, together with the basement thereunder," and when we consider that Buttner and Carr, the agents of defendants, both knew of Starr's letter expressly excluding the store at 209 Mason street—if we are to accept the court's construction of that instrument—it is evident that no real change was made in the lease. The court simply construed the lease in the light of the evidence before it. No reformation thereof was necessary.

[4] The point that the defendants understood they were guaranteeing the payment of rent for both stores, and that the lease embraced both stores, is disposed of by the letter from Starr to Buttner and Carr. The knowledge of Buttner, the responsible agent conducting the negotiations, as to what property was being leased, was the knowledge of his principals, the defendants.

The amended complaint was demurred to on the ground that the cause of action for reformation of the lease was barred by the statute of limitations. Conceding this to be true, in the view we take of the matter those allegations were unnecessary to the sufficiency of the complaint and they may be disregarded in the decision of the case.

[5] As the defendants were bound under their guaranty to pay this rent when Ryan and Long defaulted, we think this a proper case for the application of the rule of section 4½, article 6, of the Constitution—and that as the amendment offered did not modify or take away the force of the original pleading in the case (which was a direct action upon a guaranty), the defendants suffered no miscarriage of justice from the introduction of the amendment.

This ruling also disposes of other exceptions taken at the trial and based upon the theory that the reformation of the instrument was necessary in order to sustain a judgment thereon.

[6] It is further contended by appellant that the action was prematurely brought because of the pendency of another action between plaintiff on the one hand and Ryan and Long on the other for the unpaid rent. The defendants were not parties to that action, and that action is no bar to an action against them on the guaranty.

We think this covers substantially all the points made for the reversal in this case.

Judgment is affirmed.

TAYLOR v. HAMMEL, Sheriff, et al. (Civ. 2610.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1918.)

1. SALES 126(1) — RESCISSION — RESTORATION OF CONSIDERATION.

A suit to cancel for fraud a deed given by plaintiff to defendants in consideration of a contract of sale of certain vacuum clothes washers could not be maintained where no offer was made to restore to defendants the property received under the contract until more than a year after discovery of the fraud, in view of Civ. Code, § 1691.

2. SALES 124 — RESCISSION — RESTORATION OF CONSIDERATION.

A suit to rescind on the ground of fraud a contract for certain vacuum clothes washers and for the cancellation of a deed to property given in consideration cannot be maintained where by transferring the title to the washers to a third party plaintiffs have placed it beyond their power to offer restoration.

3. CONTRACTS 139 — RESCISSION — CONTRACTS CONTRARY TO PUBLIC POLICY.

If contracts of sale were void as against public policy to the knowledge of the parties, they will not be rescinded on the ground of fraud, but, if the parties seeking the cancellation are innocent of any wrongful purpose, they may maintain a suit for rescission in the same manner as though the contracts were valid and enforceable.

4. SALES 124 — RESCISSION — CONDITIONS PRECEDENT — IGNORANCE AS EXCUSE.

That plaintiffs in a suit to rescind a contract of sale for fraud are not aware of the necessity of restoring the consideration received as a condition precedent to bringing suit does not excuse them; they being chargeable with notice of the requirements of the Code.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by William H. Taylor, individually and as administrator of the estate of Lottie R. Taylor, deceased, against W. A. Hammel and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George L. Keefer and Ben W. Utter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. C. Noleman and Davis, Kemp & Post, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. Plaintiffs appeal from two judgments dismissing their action as to defendants Hammel and Barrett and as to the Domestic Utilities Manufacturing Company, after orders sustaining the demurrers of said defendants to plaintiffs' complaint, plaintiffs having declined to amend.

The complaint is very long, somewhat involved, and contains various ambiguities and uncertainties, which, however, are not attacked by the demurrers. From it we gather the following facts: In August, 1910, plaintiffs received from the defendant corporation two certain contracts of sale for specified lots of so-called "vacuum clothes washers." For one of these contracts plaintiffs paid the sum of $150; for the other they deeded to one of the defendants the real property described in the complaint. Plaintiffs were induced thereto by various false representations and devices so grossly fraudulent as to impel the courts to make every effort within the law to afford relief therefrom. The defendants Hammel and Barrett are in no way charged with actual participation in the frauds.

After receiving the contracts and parting with their property and before discovery of the fraud, plaintiffs were further induced by defendants to transfer to defendant Hellman (an agent of and conspirator with other defendants), their interest in the washers covered by the second contract and accepted in exchange therefor a conveyance from Hellman of certain other real property.

On November 4, 1910, the property which had been theretofore conveyed by plaintiffs was mortgaged to defendant Barrett, who thereafter foreclosed, became the purchaser at the sale thereunder, and eventually received a sheriff's deed pursuant thereto. Defendant Hammel's only connection with the case was through acting as sheriff in making the sale under foreclosure and executing the sheriff's deed.

Plaintiffs discovered the fraud on or about November 4, 1910, and immediately commenced an action in the superior court to rescind their various transactions with defendants. They did not, however, restore or offer to restore to defendants anything which they had received as the fruits of said transactions. Thereafter, on December 6, 1911, they tendered to defendants the washers which they had received under the first contract, and then dismissed their action and filed two new actions for the same purpose. On December 11, 1911, plaintiffs quitclaimed back to defendant Hellman the real property they had received from her. On March 21, 1912, plaintiffs delivered back to defendants the contracts which they had received from them, together with a relinquishment of all their rights and claims thereunder. They then dismissed their two actions then pending and filed two new ones for the same purpose. These were later dismissed at the time of filing the present suit, April 14, 1914. The prayer in this action is for the cancellation of plaintiffs' deed to defendants, the mesne conveyances and the sheriff's deed to Barrett, and for general relief.

[1] The gist and substance of the relief here sought is a rescission of plaintiffs' contracts with defendants and the restoration of plaintiffs' property. We are therefore constrained to the conclusion that this case is ruled by the case of Brown v. Domestic Utilities Manufacturing Co., 172 Cal. 733, 159 Pac. 163, and that the plaintiffs must be denied relief because of their failure to act with the promptness and diligence which the law requires of those who seek to avail themselves of this equitable remedy. As this court said in that case:

"The failure of the plaintiffs to act promptly upon discovery of the fraud is fatal to an action to enforce rescission."

A party seeking to rescind must do two things with "reasonable diligence." He must give prompt notice of his election to rescind the contract, and he must restore or offer to restore everything of value which he has received thereunder. Civ. Code, § 1691. In the case cited the plaintiffs had received nothing of value, and were therefore relieved from the second of these requirements, but they were none the less required to act promptly in giving notice of their election to rescind. In the instant case they gave prompt notice of their election to rescind by commencing an action therefor, but they wholly failed to comply with the second requirement, viz. to make restoration.

[2] Plaintiffs had received delivery of 50 washers under the first contract, and had taken title to 1,667 washers under the second contract. These articles admittedly possessed some substantial value; yet the plaintiffs made no offer to restore them until more than a year after discovery of the fraud. In fact, they could not restore the title to the 1,667 washers, because they had already transferred it to defendant Hellman. Such a situation has been held a complete bar to an action for rescission. Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 389, 397, 20 Pac. 868; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 512, 47 Pac. 369, 52 Pac. 797. Under the circumstances of this case, it might be held a sufficient compliance if plaintiffs had offered to reconvey the real property which they had received from Hellman in exchange for the washers; but even this they did not do until more than a year had elapsed.

[3] It is alleged in the complaint that the contracts in question were never intended by the defendants to be performed according to their terms; that they were mere shams, designed and used by the defendants as devices in the conduct of a so-called "endless chain" lottery fraud; and that they were therefore absolutely void. It does not clearly appear whether or not at the time plaintiffs accepted the contracts they were aware of this ulterior purpose. If they were, and shared in it, it follows that the contracts were void as against public policy. In such case it would also follow that a court would not afford relief to either of the parties to such contracts, but would leave them where it found them. Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 Pac. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Martin v. Wade, 37 Cal. 168. On the other hand, if plaintiffs were innocent of this unlawful purpose, then it follows that the contracts, which were fair upon their face, and imported legal rights and obligations in favor of the plaintiffs, were enforceable by them as against the defendants, or were voidable by them at their election. But it also follows that, in order to avoid such contracts, plaintiffs must rescind in the manner prescribed by law, and this, as we have seen, they failed to do.

[4] To excuse their failure in not offering to restore what they had received as the fruits of these contracts, plaintiffs allege that they were not aware of the necessity for so doing. This cannot be regarded as a valid excuse. Parties seeking to avail themselves of the remedy afforded by this chapter of the Code are chargeable with notice of the requirements thereof. The plaintiffs must be held to have known that "one cannot eat his pudding and have it."

The conclusion we have reached upon the questions here discussed renders it unnecessary to consider the questions arising under the statutes of limitations and the question of the rights of a mortgagee without actual notice as against parties in possession of the premises mortgaged.

The judgments appealed from are affirmed.

STENSLAND v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, IN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY, et al. (Civ. 2799.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 13, 1918.)

1. CERTIORARI ⇨5(1) — REMEDY — RIGHT TO APPEAL.

Where a party can appeal from an order made in excess of jurisdiction, he cannot, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, have the same reviewed by certiorari.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨82(1)—ORDERS AFTER JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, a party to the record may appeal from any special order made after final judgment.

Petition by Elizabeth G. Stensland for a writ of review against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of San Diego, Hon. W. A. Sloane, Judge of Department 3 thereof, and J. B. McLees, Esq., Ex Officio Clerk. Demurrer sustained to the petition, and same denied.

Theodore Stensland, of San Diego, for petitioner.

George & McCoy and Jesse George, all of San Diego, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. After notice duly given, the petitioner herein has applied for a writ of review. Respondents demurred upon the ground that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, or to authorize the issuance of a writ of review.

In a certain action in the superior court of the county of San Diego, wherein Jesse George et al. were plaintiffs and the petitioner herein was defendant, judgment for a stated sum was rendered against the defendant. Execution was issued, and notice of garnishment served on J. B. McLees. Thereafter supplemental proceedings were instituted under section 717 et seq., Code of Civil Procedure, whereby McLees was brought before the court to answer concerning property of the judgment debtor in his hands. On order of the court made at the hearing of said matter, McLees delivered to the sheriff a certain sum of money, and the same was used in satisfaction of the judgment. Thereafter the petitioner, as defendant in that action, duly presented her motion to said court for an order vacating and annulling said order in supplemental proceeds on the ground, among others, that said court was without jurisdiction to make said order; but her said motion was denied. She now demands a review and annulment of the same order.

[1, 2] It is well established that—

"If a party has the right of appeal from an order made in excess of jurisdiction he cannot have such order reviewed in certiorari proceedings. Such is the express provision of our statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1068), and it has been uniformly so held by this court" (Anglo-Californian Bank v. Superior Court, 153 Cal. 753, 755, 96 Pac. 803).

Petitioner, in the action of George et al. against her, had the right of appeal from the order which she seeks to have reviewed, as well as from the order denying her motion to set aside that order. A party to the record may appeal from any special order made after final judgment in an action. Code Civ. Proc. § 963; Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 77 Pac. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102.

Other questions of law are presented by counsel, arising upon facts which appear in the petition, additional to those above stated. These are matters which need not be discussed at this time, since we are of opinion that they may not be reviewed in this proceeding.

It is ordered that the demurrer be sustained, upon the ground above stated; and that the petition for a writ of review be, and the same hereby is, denied.

HEBERT v. BYRON JACKSON IRON WORKS. (Civ. 2609.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1918.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⚡127(6) — AMENDMENT OF PLEADING—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

In an action by the father and widow of decedent brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, the elimination by amendment, after limitations had run, of the father as a plaintiff, and the substitution of the widow as administratrix, was not the introduction of a new cause of action, in view of Civ. Code, § 1970, providing that an action for death of a servant shall be brought by the personal representative, and that there shall be but a single action for such death.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⚡97 — COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE RULE—EFFECT.

Under the Roseberry Act, the comparative negligence rule is adopted, and applies to all actions for injuries from negligence.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⚡106(1) — LIABILITY OF MASTER—APPLIANCES FURNISHED BY THIRD PERSON.

Where an employer contracting to dig a well used a hoisting apparatus furnished by the owner for use of its employes in descending into the well, it could not avoid liability for death of its employé, arising from defects in the hoisting apparatus.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⚡265(8)—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

In an action for death of one who was killed while descending into a well in a heavy bucket with another employé and six timbers, the method of loading which caused a small and insecure piece of wire covering the open part of the hook to become displaced so as to allow the bail of the bucket to slip out from the hook, the circumstances of the accident were such as to constitute prima facie evidence of negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Laura Hebert, as administratrix of the estate of Roy L. Hebert, deceased, against the Byron Jackson Iron Works, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Murphy, of Globe, Ariz., and C. W. Byrer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The action was brought to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of the death of the husband of Laura Hebert, which, in the complaint, it was asserted, was caused by the negligent omission of the defendant to supply safe means and utensils to its servant, who was killed. The accident, which caused the death of Roy L. Hebert, occurred while deceased was in the employ of the defendant and engaged in the work of installing a pump in a well pit. A bucket attached to a hoist was being used to lower men and material into the well, and while Hebert and another man were in the act of being lowered on the bucket into the pit, the bucket became detached from the hoist and fell to the bottom of the well. Both men were killed. This action was first commenced with Laura Hebert and Eloi Hebert as plaintiffs. Eloi Hebert was the father of the deceased. After evidence had been introduced on behalf of the plaintiffs, defendant made a motion for judgment of nonsuit, one of the grounds of said motion being that plaintiffs were not proper parties, and that there was a misjoinder of parties plaintiff. Counsel for plaintiffs asked leave to file an amended and supplemental complaint, in which the same facts were alleged as to the employment and death of Hebert. In the amended complaint, however, Laura Hebert, as administratrix, was named as the sole plaintiff, supplanting Laura Hebert and Eloi Hebert, named in the caption of the original complaint. Defendant objected to leave being granted to file the amended complaint. The objection was overruled, and the motion for judgment of nonsuit was denied. It was stipulated that a demurrer pleading the statute of limitations against the amended complaint should be considered as interposed and overruled, and also that the facts pleaded in said amended complaint be deemed denied and the same defenses pleaded as to the original complaint. The trial then proceeded to its close.

Appellant contends that the court erred in allowing the amended complaint to be filed, insisting that by the substitution of parties, as made, the effect was to create a different case from that alleged in the original complaint; that it was not within the scope of legitimate amendment of the pleading to allow that to be done. Defendant also insists that because of this change its plea of the statute of limitations should have been sustained. If we were to agree with appellant that the substitution of the widow as administratrix in the place of the widow named in her own right and the elimination of the father of the deceased as a party made a different suit, then it is clear that the amendment should not have been permitted; and if formally allowed, the bar of the statute would be a good plea thereto. Evidently, when the action was brought, plaintiffs assumed that full authority sustaining the right in the individual plaintiffs was to be found in section 377,

Code of Civil Procedure. That section, in brief, provides that when the death of a person not a minor is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, or against his employer, if he has one. The section is one that has been a part of the Code since 1874. Prior to 1907, in the chapter dealing with the relation of master and servant, section 1970, Civil Code, contained terms limiting the responsibility of the employer when the servant suffered injury through a risk incident to the business or through the negligence of a fellow servant. In 1907 the Legislature made extensive additions to the section, enlarging the liability of the employer. As amended, the section contained the following provision:

"When death, whether instantaneous or otherwise, results from an injury to an employé received as aforesaid, the personal representative of such employé shall have a right of action therefor against such employer and may recover damages in respect thereof, for and on behalf, and for the benefit of the widow, children, dependent parents, and dependent brothers and sisters, in order of precedence as herein stated, but no more than one action shall be brought for such recovery."

The question as to whether the amendment to section 1970 is to be looked to as furnishing the sole authority for the bringing of an action to recover for the death of a person caused by the negligence of his employer has not been directly decided by our Supreme Court. The court did say, in Pritchard v. Whitney Estate Co., 164 Cal. 564, 129 Pac. 989:

"We do not consider it necessary in this case to determine the precise extent to which section 1970 may prevail over section 377 so far as they respectively authorize actions for injuries causing death. The latter is general, applying to all persons. The former applies only to injuries arising out of the relation of employer and employé. So far as injuries arising out of that relation are made actionable where death ensues, where they were not actionable before, section 1970 is now the only statute authorizing the action."

As to persons included within the provisions of the two sections for whom damages are permitted to be recovered, there is a difference—by section 377 the recovery plainly is for the heirs generally. It has been held that, within the meaning of that section, the word "heirs" is used in a common-law sense, and includes all persons capable of inheriting from a deceased person generally. Redfield v. Oakland C. S. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 277, at page 290, 42 Pac. 822, 1063. The terms of section 1970, Civil Code, limit the parties plaintiff to the personal representative of the deceased, and limit also the persons who are entitled to share in the damages to "widow, children, dependent parents, and dependent brothers and sisters, in order of precedence as herein stated. * * *" Under the latter section, a husband, for instance, would not be entitled to recover damages for the death of his wife. If we are to assume, and the assumption seems consistent with reason, that the Legislature intended to establish the measure of obligation owing by an employer to an employé in cases of injuries suffered by the latter, and also to designate all persons who should be held to have sustained legal damage in case of his resulting death, then section 1970, Civil Code, should be held to work a repeal of section 377, Code of Civil Procedure, in so far as the cause of action looked to the circumstances growing out of the relation of master and servant. The intimation of the Supreme Court made in the paragraph quoted from Pritchard v. Whitney Estate Co., supra, goes in that direction, but does not positively so affirm. However, the questions as to the right of a court to allow such an amendment as was here made, and whether the stopping of the running of the statute of limitations should be fixed at the date of the filing of the original complaint or of the amended complaint, have been directly considered and passed upon in this state, although it may be admitted that there is authority in the decisions of other states which is not in harmony with these cases.

[1] While the subjects in an abstract way seem to present fair ground for debate, we consider that the cases holding against contentions like that made by appellant here furnish a reasonable rule to be adopted in determining those issues. We refer to the case of Cox v. San Joaquin Light, etc., Co., 33 Cal. App. 522, 166 Pac. 578, and the case therein cited, Reardon v. Balakiala Consolidated Copper Co. (C. C.) 193 Fed. 189. The elimination of the father as a party plaintiff could result in no detriment to the appellant. No proof was offered tending to show that the father was dependent upon the deceased son; in fact, the testimony was directly contrary as to the fact. Furthermore, by the express provision of section 1970 but one action could be brought for damages for the cause alleged; hence the prosecution of the suit by the administratrix would bar a similar right of other persons beneficially interested.

[2] The assertion by appellant that one effect of permitting the amendment to be made was to deprive it of the right to interpose the defense of assumption of risk and contributory negligence is hardly pertinent. At the time this accident occurred, what was known as the Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 797) was in effect, and under the provisions of that act in all actions of this kind, under whatever section brought, the comparative negligence rule is imposed, and the fellow servant and assumed risk defense entirely taken away. Reynolds v. Horst, 35 Cal. App. 711, 170 Pac. 1082.

[3] Upon the facts of the case defendant claims that no liability was shown. To give point to this argument two propositions are urged: First, that the evidence showed the instrumentality by reason of the faulty operation of which Hebert was killed was not furnished by defendant; second, assuming that the instrumentality was under the control of defendant, the evidence was insufficient to show any negligent act or omission on its part. The first point may be very briefly disposed of. Defendant contracted to install a pump in a well pit on a ranch owned by one Ford, and there being a hoisting apparatus on the ranch, as a part of its contract with Ford, defendant was to have furnished for its use the hoist, together with a man to operate it. This hoist was so furnished, and while it was being used by the defendant and at the time the accident occurred, it was wholly subject to the direction and control of the defendant. The manager of the ranch testified that it was optional with the defendant to use the hoist or not, as it chose. It would suggest a legal absurdity to say that an employé of defendant, being in the course of his work required by the defendant to make use of a particular instrumentality, could not, in the event of injury by reason of the insufficient character of the instrument, recover from his employer; that the employer could escape liability by saying to its employé:

"I required you to use the defective tool which has caused you injury; I had the right to make it safe and keep it in repair, but it was loaned to me by another person; therefore I am not responsible."

The bare statement of the proposition seems to furnish its own answer.

[4] Proceeding, then, to appellant's second contention: The evidence in the case showed that a large bucket attached to a cable contrivance was used to carry men and material from the surface of the ground to the bottom of the well, which was between 225 and 230 feet deep. At the cable end over the well was an iron hook, and the bail of the heavy bucket was hung in this hook. Across the open end of the hook a wire contrivance was placed for the evident purpose of keeping the bail of the bucket from being pushed out of the hook. At the time of the accident the bucket was on the surface, and was being loaded with timbers 2 by 6 inches and about 5 feet in length. The bucket was about

2 feet across its top and about 2 feet deep. The timbers were placed endwise and extending upwards from the bottom of the bucket. Hebert, the deceased, was engaged in this work, assisted by one Sanders, his immediate superior, or the "boss" in charge of that shift. The two, after loading the bucket with timbers, about six in number, swung the bucket over the pit, and Sanders, the boss, stepped on one side of it and told the deceased to get on the other side, saying, "Let's go down and finish this up." At that moment the bucket became detached from the hook and fell to the bottom of the well, carrying the two men with it and killing them, as has been before narrated. After the accident, both the bail of the bucket and the hook were found intact, but the piece of galvanized wire (No. 9), which had been tied across from the point of the hook to the back of it, was gone. We think these facts were sufficient to authorize the jury to find that defendant was negligent. It appeared that the wire fastening across the open part of the hook was of small kind—ordinary galvanized wire—and that it was merely tied or twisted into its place. The loading of six timbers, two inches thick and six inches wide, extending five feet above the bottom of the bucket, might reasonably and under careful handling cause the small wire over the hook to become displaced and the hook itself to be pushed off the bail, a happening which would not have occurred had the defendant used a more secure covering over the open part of the hook. That it could have been made perfectly secure without resort to any unusual appliances admits of no doubt from the testimony. We think the case is one proper for the application of the rule that the circumstances of the accident were of such a nature as to constitute prima facie evidence of negligence. Ingalls v. Monte Cristo Oil Co., 23 Cal. App. 652, 662, 139 Pac. 97.

We have carefully examined the instructions as given by the court in its charge to the jury, and think that, taken as a whole, they contained a correct statement of the law applicable to the case under the statutes in existence at the time of the accident governing the responsibility of an employer to his employé.

We find no prejudicial error in the record which would justify a reversal.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; MYERS, Judge pro tem.

ANDERSON v. PALLADINE et al.
(Civ. 2618.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 24, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 20, 1919.)

1. DEEDS ⇨144(1)—“CONDITION.”

A “condition” is a qualification annexed to an estate by the grantor upon the happening or breach of which the estate granted is enlarged or defeated.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Condition.]

2. DEEDS ⇨145—CONDITIONS—FORFEITURE.

Conditions in a conveyance, breach of which would work a forfeiture, will be construed as covenants merely when this can be done without violence to the clear intent of the parties.

3. LOGS AND LOGGING ⇨3(7)—TIMBER—CONVEYANCE.

Growing timber is part of the realty, and consequently a deed to growing timber conveys an estate in present.

4. LOGS AND LOGGING ⇨3(9)—DEEDS—CONDITIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where a landowner conveyed growing timber, with the right to cut and remove the timber at all times within ten years, together with the right to construct logging roads, etc., held that the ten-year provision was a mere covenant, and not a condition subsequent, so that the grantee's estate was not forfeited because the timber was not removed within the ten-year period.

5. EVIDENCE ⇨461(2)—PAROL EVIDENCE—DEED.

Where a deed is absolute on its face, and its terms are unambiguous, parol evidence is inadmissible to show the intent of the parties.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1) — REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where a deed was absolute on its face, and its terms were unambiguous, the admission of the parol evidence to show the intent of the parties was prejudicial error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by Gustaf Anderson against A. G. Palladine and the Hume-Bennett Lumber Company, Incorporated. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant last named appeals. Reversed with directions.

F. E. Cook, of Fresno, for appellant.
C. K. Bonestell, Casper N. Torp, and A. W. Carlson, all of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this action plaintiff sought and secured a judgment quieting his title to two quarter sections of timber land situated in the county of Fresno. The record before us shows only the answer and appeal of the defendant Hume-Bennett Lumber Company, Incorporated.

The corporation appellant made no claim to the land in suit as distinguished from the timber growing thereon, but its answer, in addition to denying all of the material allegations of the complaint, pleaded several special defenses, only one of which, however, is involved upon this appeal, namely, that defense which interposed the corporation defendant's claim of an existing right and title to the timber in question based upon the fact of the execution of a grant deed by and from plaintiff conveying the timber standing and growing upon one of the quarter sections of the land involved in the suit to certain grantees, who in turn conveyed their title to the timber to the Kings River Lumber Company, which title was, by mesne conveyances, ultimately transferred to the corporation defendant. The deed from plaintiff upon which this defense rested was executed some 28 years prior to the institution of the action, and is as follows:

“Know all men by these presents:

“That I, Gustaf Anderson, of the county of Tulare, state of California, for and in consideration of six hundred and twenty-two dollars, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do grant to A. D. Moore, of the city and county of San Francisco, an undivided two-thirds, and to H. C. Smith, of the county of San Joaquin, state aforesaid, an undivided one-third of all that real property situate in Fresno county, state of California, bounded and described as follows:

“All the timber now growing and standing on the northeast quarter of section twenty-two, in township thirteen south, range twenty-eight east of the Mount Diablo base and meridian, together with the right and privilege of free and undisturbed ingress and egress in, upon and from said real property at any and all times within ten years from the date of this grant. To cut and remove from said parcel of land the timber hereby granted from time to time as said grantees may elect—and together with the right to construct logging roads, tramways, trails and railroads and such other ways and means as said grantees may require to enable them to cut and remove said timber, and together with all other rights and privileges necessary for the full enjoyment by said grantees of this grant.

“Witness my hand this sixth day of April, A. D. 1887. Gustaf Anderson.

“Signed and executed in the presence
“J. W. Fewel.”

The execution of this deed was not disputed, and it was an admitted fact in the case that the timber thereby conveyed had not been cut and removed, nor attempted to be cut and removed, either in whole or in part, by the corporation defendant or any of its predecessors in interest within or without the ten years designated in the deed, and that the plaintiff never at any time made demand for the cutting and removal of the timber.

Briefly stated, the further facts of the case, as revealed by the pleadings and proof, are these: The land upon which the timber in controversy originally stood and is still standing and growing is at an elevation of about 6,000 feet. Because of its elevation and the character of its soil, the land is neither valuable nor profitable for agricultural purposes, and aside from the timber growing thereon, possesses only a slight, if any, value for grazing purposes. The land in question is situated in the mountains some 60 miles removed from the line of the railroad, and not until the year 1911—when at a cost of $500,000 the milling plant of the corporation defendant was erected and in conjunction therewith a flume constructed to carry lumber to the valley below—was there any practical means of marketing the timber in controversy even if it had been theretofore cut and removed from the land upon which it was growing. Ever since the construction of its mill, the corporation defendant has been engaged in cutting timber from lands in the neighborhood of the land in suit and marketing it by means of the millpond and a connecting railway constructed by the corporation defendant, and which, although extending some 18 miles into adjoining timber lands, did not run to nor in the direction of the land in suit, and as a consequence the timber thereon can be marketed practically and profitably only by the installation of considerable additional trackage, and this the corporation defendant contemplated doing "in about four years" (some time in the year 1920), which period of time it claimed would be reasonably necessary to the continuity and completion of the plans which it had inaugurated on a large scale for the marketing of the timber on the land in question and in the adjoining timber lands generally.

It is conceded that the judgment of the court below was in effect a holding that the corporation defendant's title to the timber in controversy was forfeited by the failure to cut and remove the same within the designated ten years. It is also conceded that the correctness of the judgment depends upon whether the deed in question was absolute, or was a conditional grant of the timber. The solution of this question in turn is dependent upon whether or not that clause of the deed which in addition to the granting of the timber gave to the grantees "the right and privilege of free and undisturbed ingress and egress" in and from the land described "at any and all times within ten years from the date of the grant," constituted a condition subsequent as distinguished from a mere covenant the breach of which would operate as a defeasance and forfeiture of the estate originally granted.

At this point, it may not be amiss to note that, notwithstanding the fact that in the clause just quoted a period purports to point a sentence ending with the word "grant"—that clause must be read in conjunction with and construed as a part of the immediately following phrase commencing with the words "to cut and remove," etc. This must be done, we think, for, standing alone, the quoted clause concerning ingress and egress is meaningless, whereas, when closely connected and construed with what follows, it plainly provides the privilege of free and undisturbed ingress and egress during a period of ten years, to and from plaintiff's land, primarily for the purpose of cutting and removing the timber granted.

[1-3] Whether the clause in controversy be a condition the breach of which involves a forfeiture of the estate created, or a mere covenant conveying a privilege which has expired of its own limitation, is a question, we think which may be readily and rightly resolved by a resort to the rudimentary rules which ordinarily govern and control the creation and continuity of estates granted upon condition. A condition is a qualification annexed to an estate by the grantor, upon the happening or breach of which the estate granted is enlarged or defeated. Of course, the breach of a condition upon which an estate is expressly or impliedly granted works a forfeiture of the estate, but it is elementary that the law abhors a forfeiture, and, consequently, in order to avoid one, conditions in a conveyance will be construed as covenants merely when this can be done without doing violence to the clear intent of the parties as expressed or necessarily implied from the language of the conveyance. Growing timber is a part of the realty, and, consequently, the deed under consideration here conveyed to the original grantees an estate in praesenti. While conditions subsequent are commonly created by the use of a familiar formula of words and phrases which, when employed, leaves no doubt as to the character and contingent continuance of the estate created, still no particular or peculiar wording is absolutely essential to the creation of an estate upon condition subsequent, and such an estate will be held to have been created if the language of the conveyance or its import is so clear as to leave no doubt but that the grantor intended to create an estate upon condition subsequent—language which ex proprio vigore imports such a condition, Hawley v. Kafitz, 148 Cal. 393, 83 Pac. 248, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, 113 Am. St. Rep. 282.

[4] Measured by the rules related, the deed before us falls far short of showing an intention of the grantor to create an estate upon condition subsequent, for it is utterly devoid of words of forfeiture—those words and phrases which ordinarily and aptly express and which are commonly employed for the purpose of creating a condition calling for a forfeiture; and nowhere within the four corners of the deed is there to be found any language which, either in whole or in part, remotely suggests that the parties thereto contemplated the creation of a condition subsequent rather than a mere covenant which in no way trenching the title to the timber granted.

Construing, as we must, the clause in controversy as a mere covenant, we are then confronted with the question of the relative rights and responsibilities of the parties in the presence of the admitted fact that the right conveyed by the covenant of free and undisturbed ingress and egress to and from plaintiff's land for the purpose of cutting and removing the timber was not exercised within the ten years' time limited by the covenant. The solution of this question is, we think, found in the application of the principles enunciated in and underlying the decision in each of the two cases of Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 81 Pac. 121, 109 Am. St. Rep. 107, and Gibbs v. Peterson, 163 Cal. 758, 127 Pac. 62.

While the case at bar and the two cited cases are not in their facts pointedly the same, nevertheless in their essential features they are closely akin. In the first of them the action, as here, was one to quiet title to land upon which the standing timber had been previously conveyed by an instrument much less formal than the deed before us; and in that case the trial court ruled, and the Supreme Court held, that the instrument constituted an absolute conveyance which vested title to the timber in the grantees free and clear of conditions, notwithstanding the failure of the vendees to take advantage of a concurrent covenant to the effect that they should have the right of ingress and egress to and from the land on which the timber was standing during a period of ten years for the purpose of cutting and removing the timber, which covenant was coupled with the proviso that if the timber was not removed within the time limited, a rental of $200 a year thereafter would be paid for the privilege of entering upon the land and removing the timber, and that the vendees would pay one-half of all taxes levied upon the land from the date of the agreement until all of the timber had been removed. Counsel for the plaintiff in the present case insist that the cited case does no more than decide what, under the particular agreement of the parties in that case, was the effect of the failure to either remove the timber within the time originally limited, or comply with the condition upon which an extension of such time was to be granted, and that the cases, therefore, are to be distinguished.

We are unable to see or make the distinction, and, following the reasoning and the ruling of the cited case, there is no escape, it seems to us, from the conclusion that the deed before us was an absolute grant of the timber in controversy, and that the clause thereof granting the "privilege of free and undisturbed ingress and egress, etc., at any and all times within ten years from the date of this grant to cut and remove * * * the timber * * * granted from time to time as said grantees may elect," etc., cannot be taken as a limitation of the major grant; that is to say, the clause under consideration here, like the covenant construed in the cited case, clearly indicates that the sale of the timber was made in contemplation of its removal, and is not pointed to the purpose of extinguishing the title to the timber conveyed in the event that it was not cut and removed within the designated ten years, but was rather intended to provide a period of time during which the grantees were to have free and undisturbed access to the land for the purpose of cutting and removing the timber thereon, and further contemplated that if the timber was not cut and removed within that time only the right of free and undisturbed access would be lost, leaving the parties in that event to a separate and independent adjustment of new terms and time upon which the right to cut and remove the timber might be exercised. Manifestly, if defendant or its predecessors in interest had commenced to cut and remove the timber within the designated ten years, but had failed to complete the work within that time, it could not be successfully contended that the title to the timber remaining upon the land was thereby forfeited, or that anything more than the mere right of free and undisturbed ingress and egress had been lost.

In addition to what we have said as to the proper construction of the deed here involved, we think its final clause clearly contemplates that there shall be no forfeiture of the right to the timber by mere delay in its removal. We regard the closing language of the deed as very significant. After apt words of grant of the timber and language conferring the right to remove it within ten years, there is the additional provision, "together with all other rights and privileges necessary for the full enjoyment by said grantees of this grant." Here is emphasized the intent of the grantor to confer everything necessary for the full enjoyment of the grant of the timber, and it seems to us that a reasonable construction of this last provision would give to the grantee of the timber additional time within reason for its removal if found necessary. Otherwise he cannot be said to have the full enjoyment of the thing granted.

But, however that may be, our conclusion in this behalf is confirmed by a consideration of the second cited case of Gibbs v. Peterson, 163 Cal. 758, 127 Pac. 62, which was an action between the same parties practically involving the same facts, and differing from its companion case in the particular that that was an action to enjoin the defendant as owner of the land from cutting and removing the timber standing thereon. There it was said by the Supreme Court that the opinion in the previous case had disposed of all questions raised as to forfeiture by plaintiffs of any of their rights in regard to such timber, and determined that they were the absolute owners thereof, notwithstanding their failure to take any steps to remove the timber, and notwithstanding their failure to pay any of the taxes for the years 1891 and 1896. The same would be true as to the failure of plaintiffs to pay the $200 per annum specified in the instrument, and, proceeds the opinion:

"It seems clear that defendant was not warranted in proceeding upon the theory that plaintiff had lost all rights in the timber standing on his land, and that notwithstanding the matters set up in his answer and cross-complaint [referring in part to the failure to pay certain taxes and rent], plaintiffs were entitled to a decree enjoining him from so doing. * * *

"The effect of the former decision * * * clearly is that no delay in the removal of the timber can operate as a forfeiture of plaintiff's rights * * * thereto."

In line with the case last quoted is the case of Ciapusci v. Clark, 12 Cal. App. 44, 106 Pac. 436, where the court refused to read terms of forfeiture into a conveyance of standing timber merely because it gave the right of entry within a designated time for the purpose of removing the timber, coupled with a proviso for an extension of such time in consideration of a stipulated rental. In the latter case the timber was not removed within the time designated, and, as was alleged in Peterson v. Gibbs, supra, the rent stipulated for an extension of time was not paid, and in holding that this fact did not operate as a forfeiture the court said:

"It would be manifestly improper that mere delay should forfeit both the appellant's money and his timber."

The case of Call v. Jenner Lumber Co., 33 Cal. App. 310, 165 Pac. 23, so strongly relied upon by counsel for respondent, is, we think, clearly distinguishable from the cases previously cited and also from the case at bar in this, that the language of the deed there involved clearly expressed the intention of the parties to pass title only to such timber as was cut and removed, and expressly provided that all title to any timber which was not cut and removed within the time limited, together with the right of entry for the purpose of cutting and removing the timber, should be lost to the purchaser. While, in the present case, the title to the timber was not lost to the corporation defendant by its failure to cut and remove the timber within the designated time, still, as was said in the case of Gibbs v. Peterson, supra, the defendant would not under the circumstances be entitled to perpetually maintain the timber upon plaintiff's land. In the present case the defendant, pursuant to the special defense in that behalf pleaded, prayed for and proffered proof of a reasonable time within which to cut and remove the timber in controversy, and, inasmuch as this is an equitable action, one in which under the issues raised by the pleadings and the evidence all of the rights of the parties might and should have been equitably adjusted in keeping with the procedure outlined in Gibbs v. Peterson, supra, where the situation of the parties was, we think, relatively the same as that of the parties here, the trial court by its judgment should have decreed the title to the fee of the land to be in plaintiff, the title to the timber in the appellant, and then found and fixed a reasonable time within which the appellant should remove its timber from the land, and, provided that if it failed to do so, the plaintiff might remove and sell the same at the expense and for the benefit of the appellant, accounting to it for the net proceeds thereof. Said judgment should further provide that if the timber be not removed within the time fixed, the plaintiff shall be entitled to retain from the proceeds of his sale of the timber such an amount as will reasonably compensate him for his loss of the use and occupation of the soil from the expiration of the period fixed by the court for such removal to the time of the actual removal, such amount to be determined by the court. The judgment given should be interlocutory in its nature, the court retaining jurisdiction of the cause for the purpose of an accounting between the parties in the event that appellant failed to remove the timber within the specified time.

[5, 6] Incidentally it should be noted that the trial court's finding to the effect that the defendant was without any rightful claim of title to the timber in controversy was based in part upon parol testimony, which was received upon the theory that the deed in question was ambiguous in its terms, and did not clearly express the intent of the parties as to what would be the result of a failure to remove the timber within the designated ten years.

The admission of this testimony, we think, was error, and, in view of the finding made, prejudicial error. The deed, as has been previously pointed out, is absolute on its face; its terms are unambiguous and consequently neither require nor permit an inquiry into the surrounding circumstances for the purpose of ascertaining its meaning or the intent of the parties. It is well settled that if there be no ambiguity in the contract, it must speak for itself. Peterson v. Chaix, 5 Cal. App. 525, 90 Pac. 948; United Iron Works v. Outer Harbor Co., 168 Cal. 81, 141 Pac. 917.

For the reasons stated, the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the lower court to take such further proceedings as it may be advised in keeping with the views herein expressed.

MACKENZIE v. LOS ANGELES TRUST & SAVINGS BANK et al. (Civ. 2604.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 23, 1918.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS $\S$ 95(1)—SETTING ASIDE TRUST AGREEMENT.

Trustor's heir, who had actual knowledge of trust instrument and delivery of trust property to trustee, could not defeat operation of statute of limitations against action to set aside instrument, on the ground that she did not know whether trustee had taken any steps to execute trust; she being bound to assume that trustee would perform its obligations under instrument.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS $\S$ 103(1)—SETTING ASIDE TRUST—RULE AS TO ACCRUAL OF RIGHTS.

The rule that statute will not begin to run against cestui que trust until trustee repudiates trust relations does not apply to action by heir of trustor to set aside trust instrument.

3. TRUSTS $\S$ 53—INCONSISTENCY OF CONDUCT.

Plaintiff, having received the property advanced to her prior to death of trustor and retained the same, was estopped to question validity of trust instrument.

4. EVIDENCE $\S$ 69—PERFORMANCE OF TRUST AGREEMENT—PRESUMPTION.

It is always presumed that the trustee in possession of trust property will perform the duties imposed upon him as trustee until he takes a contrary attitude.

5. TRUSTS $\S$ 21(2)—VALIDITY OF INSTRUMENT—CERTAINTY.

Trust instrument, providing that the whole or any part of income should be applied towards education of trustor's grandchildren, was not subject to objection that it was invalid, because such provision did not provide what amount should be devoted to education, and what the character of that education should be.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Mary H. Mackenzie against the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank and another. From a judgment denying the relief sought, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Parks & Pease and H. S. Clewett, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin and Joseph C. Finch, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This action was brought for the purpose of securing a decree declaring void a trust created by William Mackenzie, deceased. Defendant Trust & Savings Bank was named as the trustee in the instrument of trust executed by said Mackenzie. It was also administrator of his estate. From the judgment denying the plaintiff the relief sought, this appeal is taken.

The facts were agreed upon and presented to the trial judge by written stipulation. It appears that in 1904 William Mackenzie, being the owner of a large amount of property, determined that he would then distribute to his wife and children such proportions thereof as he desired them to have, rather than to leave such distribution to be made by will. Besides his wife, there were then living this plaintiff, a daughter, who was unmarried and then and since resided at Glen Cove, N. Y., William Mackenzie, his son, Teanie Covey, a married daughter, and Sophia Mackenzie, an unmarried daughter. There were nine grandchildren, six being the children of the son, William Mackenzie, and three the children of Mrs. Covey. In that year he made distribution to his wife and children, all of whom accepted the property given to them and all receipted for the same and in the receipt expressed their understanding and assent that the allotment was in full of all their interest, present or future, in the estate of the husband and father, and that it was received as an advancement of their whole and entire interest in and to said estate. Thereafter, on the 31st day of October, 1905, William Mackenzie executed an instrument of trust, naming the defendant trust company as trustee, and contemporaneously therewith delivered to his trustee personal property consisting of various securities of a value in excess of $90,000. In the trust instrument it was provided that the trustee should pay the income from the trust property to the trustor so long as he should live, and that upon his death the trustee should hold the property for the benefit of the grandchildren. On the 11th day of November of the same year Mackenzie died. There was received by the trustee prior to the death of Mackenzie, as income, the product of the trust property, the sum of $1,133.69. This money of course belonged to the estate of the deceased, and in order to distribute the same the trust company defendant was, on the 29th day of January, 1906, appointed administrator of said estate and has continued ever since to act in that capacity. On the 26th day of February, 1906, the administrator filed an inventory in the matter of the estate, showing that it had possession of property belonging to the estate in the amount hereinbefore mentioned, and on the 15th day of June, 1911, filed its first and final account, with petition for distribution. Notice of hearing on the account and petition was duly given, the date set being the 28th of June, 1911. About this time plaintiff employed attorneys to intervene in her behalf, and the hearing on the report and petition of the administrator was continued from time to time. Plaintiff filed objections to the account and the granting of the petition on the ground that the administrator had not charged itself with the property which it had in its capacity as trustee under the trust instrument received from William Mackenzie. This action was brought by the filing of the complaint on March 1, 1913. It will be noted that the complaint was filed more than seven years after the death of William Mackenzie and the issuing of letters of administration in his estate. In the statement of the facts it is recited:

"That until shortly after the time of the filing of the first and final account, report and petition for distribution in the matter of the estate of said William Mackenzie, deceased, the plaintiff did not have actual knowledge that the defendant had not charged itself with and did not intend to charge itself with and account for the property described in the written instrument, * * * as a part of the estate of said William Mackenzie, deceased, but never made any inquiries of said Los Angeles Trust Company or the defendant concerning the subject. That the plaintiff has not at any time actually known and does not now actually know whether or not the Los Angeles Trust Company or the defendant has taken any action in performance or in attempted performance of the terms, directions and conditions of the written instrument, a copy of which is hereinabove set forth, but has never made any inquiries of either said Los Angeles Trust Company or the defendant concerning the matter."

It appears further in the agreed statement that the trustee did enter upon the performance of the obligations imposed upon it by the trust instrument, and did execute the conditions thereof up to the time that objection was formally raised against the validity of the trust.

[1-4] The court, agreeable to the issue presented by the answer, first determined that the cause of action asserted by the plaintiff was barred by the four-year statute of limitations, and further that by reason of the plaintiff having received the allotment of property advanced to her prior to the death of William Mackenzie, and retained the same, she was estopped from questioning the validity of the trust instrument. The finding on the merits of the main question was that the trust was not void or invalid for "indebtedness, or for or upon any other ground or reason alleged by the plaintiff." While we are of the opinion that both preliminary issues, that of the time limitation and of an estoppel against the plaintiff, were correctly determined, we will enter into no particular discussion of those questions, because we think that the ground upon which plaintiff based claim that the trust is invalid is not well taken, and that the decisions in this state clearly support that view. Before passing to this main question, it may be remarked that the authorities, a number of which are cited by appellant, holding that the statute of limitations does not commence to run against a cestui que trust to have enforced the trust terms until the trustee repudiates the trust relation, have no application in this case. Upon that particular question, the underlying reason, when applied here, operates against rather than in favor of plaintiff. It is always presumed that the trustee in possession of trust property will perform the duties imposed upon him as such trustee until he takes a contrary attitude. Here the plaintiff was bound to assume that the trustee, having accepted its appointment, would perform the obligations imposed upon it, and that the property held by it as such trustee would not be accounted for as property belonging to the estate of William Mackenzie, deceased. By the very terms of the trust instrument all of that property was removed from Mackenzie's estate. The stipulation of facts shows that in the month of November, 1905, the plaintiff had personal knowledge of the execution of the trust instrument and of the delivery of the trust property to the trustee.

[5] The trust created as to the property delivered to the trustee was a valid one. The main contention of appellant revolves about the second clause of the trust instrument, which provides as follows:

"In trust, after the death of the party of the first part, to apply the whole or any part of the said interest, dividends and annual proceeds toward the education of the grandchildren of said William Mackenzie living at the date of the execution of this instrument, and to pay the same either directly, or to his, her, or their natural guardian or guardians, without being required to see to the application thereof, or to require any accounting of the same, and apply the residue of such income, if any, in augmentation to the said trust fund."

In the paragraphs following, the distribution of the corpus of the property was provided to be made in certain proportions to the grandchildren at their majority. It is argued that the provision as to the application of the interest, dividends, and proceeds of the trust property during the minority of the children is indefinite in that it does not provide as to what amount shall be devoted to the education of the grandchildren, or what the character of that education shall be. That such a provision makes the trust void, appellant contends is sustained by the decision in the matter of the Estate of Sanford, 136 Cal. 97, 68 Pac. 494. Some language is used in that decision which lends strong color to the argument here made. However, the question of the indefiniteness of the income provision considered in the Estate of Sanford was not the real question upon which the decision turned, and we think that later decisions of the Supreme Court have made that proposition clear. Under these later decisions we think it very plain that the remarks of the court in the Sanford Case referring to the matter of income distribution must be considered either as dicta or as having been definitely overruled. In the matter of Estate of Reith, 144 Cal. 314, 77 Pac. 942, the trust provision of a will imposed upon the trustees "the duty of keeping my children in such circumstances as will permit them to have every comfort of dress, etc., and all the needed education which shall fit them for a career in any position of life." It was there argued that the provision was too indefinite to sufficiently define the duty of the trustees, and the court said:

"It is also claimed that the trust is void for the reason that it leaves it to the discretion of the trustees as to how much income shall be used to support and educate the children, and the Estate of Sanford, 136 Cal. 98 [68 Pac. 494], is claimed to support such contention. In that case the trustees were to receive the rents and profits of the land and apply the net proceeds of the same to the use and benefit of the beneficiaries to such extent and at such time or times as in their judgment shall be proper. What was said in regard to the discretionary clause was not the point on which the case was decided. It was expressly held that the provision of the will creating an express trust to convey was void on the authority of the Fair Case, 132 Cal. 523 [60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70]. In the case at bar, however, the clause is entirely different from that in the Sanford Case. Here it is made the duty of the trustees to keep, clothe, and educate the children. It was not necessary to say that all the income should be used for such purpose. The income may for many reasons vary from time to time. It may be more than necessary for the purposes contemplated in the will. * * * The children must be kept, clothed, and educated. The manner in which they shall be kept, the nature of their education, the kind of clothing they shall wear must depend to a certain extent upon the amount and income of their estate. The trustees will be presumed, acting as the persons in charge of the children, to reasonably and properly care for them. They are under the supervision of the court, and at all times will be held answerable for a failure to perform the duties of their trust in a proper manner, and for any abuse of their powers. The deceased reposed confidence in them, and, having such confidence, she selected them. We will presume that they will perform the duties of their trust faithfully."

Following the expressions of the court in the Reith Case, it may be well said here that it will be presumed that the trustee will perform its duty in good faith. When the trustor directed that "the whole or any part" of the income should be applied toward the education of the minors, he did not mean that the trustee, at its option, could devote any small sum, $1, perhaps, in the furtherance of that object. The intent of the trustor was plainly that the minors should be educated. Not having expressly restricted the kind of education they should receive, the logical presumption to be applied is that he intended them to receive a fitting education, one suitable to their position in life, considering the means available for the purpose. The trustee might expend the whole of the income in that direction; a lesser amount might be sufficient. In the latter case, the excess is to be applied "in augmentation of the said trust fund," which was provided to be later distributed. See, also, Hornung v. Sedgwick, 164 Cal. 629, 130 Pac. 212.

Our conclusion is that the trust is valid and that the court properly denied relief to the plaintiff on that issue, and also properly resolved the questions against her as to the application of the statute of limitations and the estoppel.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MELLO. (Cr. 812.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1918.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Joe Mello was convicted of rape. From an order denying a motion for new trial, and from a judgment of conviction, he appeals.
Affirmed.

T. L. Christiansen, of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, and from a judgment of conviction of the crime of rape.

The sole contention in the case is that the evidence fails to establish the elements of the crime charged. There is no merit in this position. The defendant was accorded a fair trial, and the judgment must stand.

It is not necessary to set forth the unpleasant details revealed by the evidence.
Suffice it to say that it showed that the offense was committed on repeated occasions by the defendant with his minor sister, and the defendant's guilt was established, not only by her testimony, but by his own confession. The testimony of the pros-ecutrix was straightforward and consistent, and free from certain elements that appellate courts have frequently referred to as creating a doubt as to the truth of the charge.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

NICHOLS v. ASBECK et al. (L. A. 4756.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1919.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨394—PRESENTMENT—NECESSITY FOR.

There is no necessary connection between Civ. Code, §§ 3130 and 3131, as they stood in May, 1910, the latter dealing only with presentment "when necessary," and presentment not being necessary to charge the maker.

2. TENDER ⇨13(4)—PLACE—READINESS—DEPOSIT WITH THIRD PERSON.

Assuming that it was necessary under Civ. Code §§ 3130, 3131, that a note should be presented at place of business or residence of defendant, a finding that money to pay note was deposited with a firm and "that said deposit was made for the purpose of having said funds on hand at the date of maturity of said note, and that defendant A. was able and willing to pay said note at the date of maturity," was insufficient to relieve defendant of interest and damages accruing after date of maturity; there being no finding that the maker resided with the firm or had his place of business there.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Mary J. Nichols against Augustus A. F. Asbeck and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Albert J. Lee, of San Diego, for appellants.
Crouch & Chambers, of San Diego, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action to foreclose a mortgage of real property given by the defendant Asbeck to secure the payment of a promissory note for $400, dated May 18, 1910, and payable one year after date. By the note the maker promised to pay to the order of Mary J. Nichols, the plaintiff, "at San Diego, California, $400, with interest at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum from date until paid." Subsequent to the making of the note and mortgage, the mortgagor conveyed the property to I. Isaac Irwin.

The note was not paid, and in May, 1915, this action was commenced against Asbeck and Irwin to foreclose the mortgage. The court gave judgment of foreclosure for the amount of the note, together with interest at the agreed rate, attorneys' fees as specified in the note, and costs. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone. Among the findings is one that the note was never presented to the defendant Asbeck for payment, nor has any demand for payment ever been made upon him; that prior to the maturity of the note said Asbeck "deposited with the firm of Irwin & Co., in the city of San Diego, a sum of money sufficient to pay the principal and interest on said note at the date of maturity; that said deposit was made for the purpose of having said funds on hand at the date of maturity of said note; and that the defendant Augustus A. F. Asbeck was able and willing to pay said note at the date of maturity in the city of San Diego, state of California."

[1, 2] The sole point made by the appellants is that the failure of presentment, coupled with the other facts found, affords an answer to any demand for interest from the date of maturity, damages, and costs. Section 3130 of the Civil Code (as it read at the time of the transactions here in question), after declaring that demand of payment need not be made upon the principal debtor in a negotiable instrument in order to charge him, went on to say:

"But if the instrument is by its terms payable at a specified place, and he is able and willing to pay it there at maturity, such ability and willingness are equivalent to an offer of payment upon his part."

The note in question was made payable "at San Diego, California." The succeeding section, 3131, provided that presentment for payment, when necessary, must be made as follows:

"(3) An instrument which specifies a place for its payment must be presented there; and if the place specified includes more than one house, then at the place of residence, or business, of the principal debtor, if it can be found therein."

The argument of the appellants is that the latter provision must be read into the note, and that the "place of payment" specified in the instrument was therefore the place of residence or business of the maker. There is no necessary connection between sections 3130 and 3131. The latter deals only with presentment "when necessary," and presentment is not necessary to charge the maker of the note. Sections 3131 et seq. apply only to the indorser. Jones v. Nicholl, 82 Cal. 32, 34, 22 Pac. 878. But if we accept the view of appellants, it would seem to follow that they can claim the advantage of the provision of section 3130 only by showing ability and willingness to pay the note at maturity at the specified place, i. e., at the maker's place of business or residence in the city of San Diego. But the finding relied upon does not show this. The court found that money to pay the note was deposited with the firm of Irwin & Co. in the city of San Diego, and there is no finding that the maker resided with the firm of Irwin & Co., or had his place of business there. The general concluding statement that the defendant Asbeck was able and willing to pay the note at maturity in the city of San Diego must be read in connection with the preceding specific language. The whole finding, construed, as it should be, so as to support the judgment, means simply that the maker was able and willing to pay the note by means of the deposit which he had made with the firm of Irwin & Co. in the city of San Diego. If therefore the note is to be taken as specifying as the place of payment the place of business or residence of the maker in the city named, the findings fail to show an ability and willingness to pay at either place.

We do not feel called upon to decide whether a note made payable in a given city is payable at a specified place, within the meaning of section 3130. This inquiry is the more unnecessary, since the Civil Code provisions on the subject have now been superseded and altered by the enactment, as new sections, of the uniform "Negotiable Instruments Law." Stats. 1917, p. 1531.

The judgment is affirmed.

SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.
(S. F. 8928.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 4, 1919.)

1. COMMERCE — 27(5) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—RAILROAD SERVANT—TEST.

Test of whether railroad's brakeman was engaged in interstate commerce when injured, so that Industrial Accident Commission had no jurisdiction to make an award to him, is the nature of the work he was doing at the time.

2. COMMERCE — 27(5) — INJURIES TO RAILROAD SERVANT—"INTERSTATE COMMERCE."

Brakeman on railroad's construction train whose duties related to both interstate and intrastate traffic, who, by direction of conductor, dropped off to flag interstate freight train approaching on same track, and fell and was injured, held engaged in interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interstate Commerce.]

In Bank.

Petition for writ of review by the Southern Pacific Company against the Industrial Accident Commission, to annul and set aside its award of commission for injuries to Ralph R. Rouse. Award annulled.

Henley C. Booth and Henry Heidelberg, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. In this proceeding petitioner, by writ of review, seeks to have an award made of compensation for injuries to Ralph R. Rouse by the Industrial Accident Commission annulled and set aside.

It appears from the undisputed facts that petitioner, as a common carrier of both intrastate and interstate commerce, was at the time of the accident engaged in the operation of a steam railroad extending from points outside of the state to and across the same, a branch of which railroad, as a part thereof, and so operated, extended from Davis to Oroville, in California; that on this branch line there was a trestle which it was necessary to keep in repair so that both interstate and intrastate commerce which petitioner was engaged in transporting could be moved; that on January 25, 1918, said trestle was in a condition which rendered the repair thereof necessary, and for such purpose a construction train, consisting of a self-propelled pile driver pushing a flat car in front and pulling one in the rear, was proceeding over said branch road to said trestle; that at said time Rouse, whose duty as brakeman, among other things, was to flag approaching trains so as to prevent collisions with the work train, was riding on the front flat car; that the conductor of said construction train was operating it under orders received at Knight's Landing to proceed eastward to the trestle, but to protect against a regular freight train numbered 232, moving in the same direction, which train was in fact carrying interstate shipments of goods; that thereupon the conductor directed Rouse to drop off at or near the west end of the trestle and protect against train No. 232, which meant for the brakeman to take a position at a point distant from the construction train sufficient to enable him to give signals calculated to prevent an approaching train from colliding with the former; "that the giving of said signals is required in the interest of safe and proper operation of traffic, and is necessary to guard against the danger of collision between trains, their consequent derailment, and also injury to life and property and delay and interference with the commerce being carried on over the railroad line where such signals are given and in the trains so flagged"; that when the construction train had reached the point where Rouse was told to drop off and flag No. 232, he, in attempting to alight from the flat car for the purpose of signalling said train No. 232, missed his footing, fell, and received the injuries for which the award was made; that Rouse was on duty and under pay as a freight brakeman at the time he was injured, and was under the immediate direction and supervision of the conductor of said train, who received said order as aforesaid and transmitted it to Rouse, who, in the performance of such duty as instructed by the conductor, was injured after starting to alight from the flat car to flag the approaching train No. 232, in the performance of the duty so enjoined.

[1, 2] Upon these facts the commission made a finding to the effect that at the time he sustained the injury Rouse was not engaged in the performance of a duty for his employer as a carrier of interstate commerce. If he was so engaged, then it must be conceded the commission was without jurisdiction to make an award; hence petitioner's sole contention is that this finding is unwarranted by the admitted facts. We agree with respondent that the test of whether Rouse was engaged in interstate commerce when injured is "the nature of the work he was doing at the time." Erie R. R. Co. v. Welsh, 242 U. S. 303, 37 Sup. Ct. 116, 61 L. Ed. 319; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Harrington, 241 U. S. 177, 36 Sup. Ct. 517, 60 L. Ed. 941; Southern Pac. Co. v. Industrial Accident Comn., 174 Cal. 8, 161 Pac. 1139, L. R. A. 1917E, 262. According to the uncontradicted evidence, a part of Rouse's duty as brakeman on the pile-driving train was, when directed by his superior, to flag approaching trains, and among the trains which he was directed to flag was train No. 232, carrying interstate commerce, which was known to Rouse as a regular train due to approach at about the time when he was injured. His duties related to both intrastate and interstate traffic, and his injury was sustained at the time and while engaged in the act of leaving the flat car of the construction train for the purpose of flagging the interstate train. Other than for the purpose of stopping this interstate train, he would, so far as appears, have remained upon the car on which he was riding. It thus seems clear that when injured Rouse was engaged in the performance of an act which had direct relation to a train carrying interstate commerce; and, conceding that the stopping of the approaching interstate train had for its object the protection also of the intrastate train, the latter fact is immaterial in the determination of the question. Erie R. R. Co. v. Winfield, 244 U. S. 170, 37 Sup. Ct. 556, 61 L. Ed. 1057, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 662; Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Comn., supra. Moreover, in the case last cited this court said:

"It is settled by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court, the ultimate authority on such a question as the one before us, that a railroad track used indiscriminately by a carrier in both its interstate and intrastate commerce is an instrumentality of interstate commerce, and that notwithstanding its double use, those 'engaged in its repair or in keeping it in suitable condition for use' are, while so engaged, employed in interstate commerce. Such work, it is said, 'is so closely related to such commerce as to be in practice and in legal contemplation a part of it.' [Citations.] So there can be no question as to the character of the work where an employé is engaged in direct work upon an instrumentality in actual use for purposes of interstate commerce, such as actually repairing the railroad track or doing thereon any work designed to keep it in suitable condition for use."

While Rouse's chief employment was in the performance of duties in connection with the construction train operated in the work of repairing the trestle upon the branch line constituting a part of petitioner's railroad system, it was stipulated that such branch line road was used by petitioner as such common carrier indiscriminately in both interstate and intrastate commerce; "that * * * said defendant company maintained as an essential and necessary part of said line * * * a wooden trestle over which said branch line ran, and which trestle it was necessary from time to time to repair and keep in usable condition so that the interstate and intrastate commerce carried on indiscriminately on said branch line as aforesaid might be moved by rail." And further stipulated that on the day when the injury occurred said work train upon which Rouse was employed was, for the purpose of repairing said trestle, proceeding toward the same. Under this stipulation, and applying the principle announced in the case from which we have quoted, we are constrained to hold that, conceding Rouse was injured while in the performance of his duties upon the train used in repairing the trestle, he was engaged in the performance of a duty "so closely related to such interstate commerce as to be in practice and in legal contemplation a part of it."

The award is annulled.

1. BILLS AND NOTES 125—CONSTRUCTION—INTEREST.

A note divided into four installments, stating that first should be payable within a year at 7 per cent. per annum interest, then naming three other installments payable in one, two, and three years, separated from the first and from each other by semicolons, the latter followed by the statement "with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum payable semi-annually," held to intend that all installments should bear interest, and not merely the first and the last.

2. CONTRACTS — 158 — PUNCTUATION.

In the construction of contracts, punctuation is always subordinate to the text and must never be allowed to control its meaning.

3. CONTRACTS — 154 — REASONABLENESS OF CONSTRUCTION.

Where one construction would make a contract unusual and extraordinary and another construction, equally consistent with the language, would make it reasonable, fair, and just, the latter construction must prevail.

4. COSTS — 260(4) — FRIVOLOUS APPEAL — DAMAGES.

Where an appeal is frivolous to the point of precluding the possibility of its having been taken in good faith or any purpose save to delay the satisfaction of the judgment, damages will be awarded against appellant because of the appeal.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by W. K. Stoddart against John Golden and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from the judgment roll alone. Judgment affirmed.

Eshleman & Swing, of El Centro, for appellants.

U. F. Lewis, of Redlands, and Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an action to foreclose a mortgage securing a promissory note in words and figures as follows:

"$7,200.00. Redlands, Cal., August 15, 1912.

"In installments, for value received, we or either of us, promise to pay to W. K. Stoddart, or order, the sum of seventy-two hundred dollars ($7,200.00), payable as follows: The sum of $1,000.00 on or before October 27, 1912, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable at maturity; the sum of $2,000.00 on or before one year; the sum of $2,000.00 on or before two years; the sum of $2,200.00 on or before three years, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. Should the interest not be so paid it shall become a part of the principal and thereafter bear like interest as the principal. Should default be made in the payment of any installment of interest when due, or in any installment of the principal when due, then the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due and payable at the option of the holder of this note. Principal and interest payable in gold coin of the United States of the present standard. This note is secured by mortgage of even date.

John Golden.
"Anna Golden."

The appeal is from a judgment in plaintiff's favor and comes here on the judgment roll alone. The court, in its judgment, allowed interest on the entire sum, which is assigned as error. It is contended by counsel for appellants that the second and third installments mentioned in said note were not to bear any interest. Respondent contends that each of said installments bears interest from the date of the note at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum payable semi-annually.

[1, 2] Although the note is awkwardly drawn, its sense in all respects is easy to determine. It is divided into four installments, the first one being for $1,000, which fell due within a period of six months from the date of the note, and the interest at 7 per cent. per annum is provided to be paid at the maturity of this installment, which makes it apparent why interest was mentioned in connection with this installment separately. The three other installments, payable in one, two, and three years, naturally group themselves as the part of the loan for which interest was to be paid at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, payable semiannually. If, instead of the semicolons used in the note, commas had been used, we think there could not have been a suggestion that any of the installments were to run without interest, or, if the first semicolon had been used, and, in place of the second and third semicolons, commas, then we think no suggestion of the kind could be made. Aside from the mere matter of punctuation, there is not a circumstance suggested why the second and third installments should not bear interest. Punctuation, at best a most fallible guide, is always subordinate to the text and is never allowed to control its meaning. Holmes v. Phenix Ins. Co., 98 Fed. 240, 39 C. C. A. 45, 47 L. R. A. 308. It would be doing violence to accepted rules of construction to uphold the contention that the parties by their agreement manifestly intended to exclude the installments in question from the payment of interest and intended that only the first and fourth installments should bear interest.

[3] A principle of construction well settled is that where one construction would make a contract unusual and extraordinary, and another construction, equally consistent with the language employed, would make it reasonable, fair, and just, the latter construction must prevail. Stein v. Archibald, 151 Cal. 220, 90 Pac. 536.

[4] The appeal is frivolous to the point of precluding the possibility of it having been taken in good faith or for any purpose save to delay the satisfaction of the judgment, and therefore, in addition to affirming the judgment, it is ordered that the plaintiff have and recover from the defendants the sum of $100 damages because of the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Ralph L. Bryant against J. R. Gray. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Ellis Lady and Park Godwin, both of Los Angeles, and A. D. Orme, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Shepard & Alm and W. J. Ford, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This was an action for damages for personal injuries resulting from a collision on a public highway in Los Angeles county between a motorcycle driven by plaintiff and an automobile driven by defendant. Although none of the evidence offered and received upon the trial of the case is incorporated in the bill of exceptions upon which the appeal is presented, plaintiff's counsel, as he asserts in his opening brief, "seeks a reversal upon matters of law alone, in this, that the trial court committed error in the giving and refusing to give requested instructions. * * *" In addition to setting out the instructions given and those requested and refused, the bill of exceptions declares that:

"Evidence was offered and admitted on the trial justifying the giving of every instruction that was given and the refusal of every instruction that was refused. There was sufficient evidence to sustain all the answers to the special interrogatories and general verdict."

As thus made up the bill of exceptions was settled and allowed by the trial judge, and as settled and allowed it was stipulated by counsel for the respective parties to be correct.

[1-3] It has been the rule in this jurisdiction, first enunciated in People v. McCauley, 1 Cal. 379, and continuing on down through a long line of decisions, that the correctness and applicability of instructions cannot be reviewed by this court if the record on appeal does not show what the evidence was. Frost v. Grizzly Bluff Creamery Co., 102 Cal. 525, 36 Pac. 929. The only relaxation of the rule is found in a case where an instruction given was held to be erroneous in any conceivable state of the evidence. People v. Levison, 16 Cal. 98, 76 Am. Dec. 505; Carpenter v. Ewing, 76 Cal. 487, 18 Pac. 432. Every legitimate presumption is in favor of the judgment of the court below; and, not having before us the evidence adduced at the trial from which alone can be ascertained the applicability of an alleged erroneous instruction, its correctness or incorrectness cannot be determined. 1 Blashfield, Instructions to Juries, p. 974. It is equally well settled that in the absence of a record containing the evidence this court cannot determine whether or not the evidence had any relation to an instruction which the court refused to give and which refusal is assigned as error (Hayne, New Trial and Appeal, § 130), and all this is so, and would have been so, regardless of whether or not the bill of exceptions had declared that the giving and refusal of instructions was justified by the evidence (Carpenter v. Ewing, supra).

The judgment is affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨757(2)—BRIEF—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

On appeal from judgment for plaintiff in action for breach of contract, where record is brought up in typewritten form under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a et seq., and appellants' brief contains no part of complaint and but a single disconnected clause from contract, court will not consider whether complaint sufficiently alleged nonperformance; brief being insufficient under section 953c.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Lewis Chandlee against E. E. McCalla and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. F. Campbell, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. B. Perdue, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment against them for $357.87. The record is brought up in typewritten form under section 953a et seq., of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appellants have filed a brief covering something less than two printed pages. They state therein that the action was brought to recover damages for the breach of a written contract, and claim that the complaint fails to allege nonperformance of any act which they had undertaken to perform. They do not, however, print any part of the complaint, and content themselves with copying a single disconnected clause of the contract. There is thus a total failure to comply with the requirement of section 953c that the parties must "print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." The fragmentary references in appellants' brief are entirely insufficient to enable the court to reach an adequate understanding of the case. Under these circumstances, we are not called upon to consider the point sought to be made. O'Rourke v. Skellenger, 169 Cal. 270, 146 Pac. 633; *Miller v. Civ. 2. WILLS ⇐11—RIGHTS OF SURVIVING WIDOW—TESTAMENTARY DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.

Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, providing that, where widow or widower dies without issue, one-half of the common property and all of the deceased spouse's separate property should descend to designated heirs of deceased, did not preclude widow from making testamentary disposition of the property; such statute being applicable only in case of intestacy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Isabella Hill, deceased. From a decree of partial distribution, the administrator and other blood relatives appeal. Decree affirmed.

See, also, 167 Cal. 59, 138 Pac. 690.

Coonan & Kehoe, of Eureka, for appellants.

A. W. Hill, of Eureka, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the administrator of the above-entitled estate and other blood relatives of the decedent from a decree of partial distribution.

Stephen Hill and Isabella Hill were husband and wife. On December 25, 1906, the former died intestate, leaving separate and community property. He left neither issue nor descendants thereof, nor father nor mother. His surviving blood relatives consisted of two brothers, one sister, and the descendants of two predeceased brothers and one predeceased sister. In the estate of Stephen Hill the court decreed that the estate of Isabella Hill was entitled to one-half of the separate and three-quarters of the community property. Sections 1386, 1402, Civ. Code.

The decedent died intestate on December 26, 1907, leaving neither issue nor descendants thereof, nor father nor mother. She left, as surviving blood relatives, the descendants of one predeceased brother and six predeceased sisters. Her estate consisted of the above-indicated share in the estate of Stephen Hill and other property which constituted her separate estate during his lifetime. The decedent remained unmarried after the death of Stephen Hill. She was the administratrix of the estate of Stephen Hill, but at the date of her demise his estate had not been closed. A son of one of Stephen Hill's predeceased brothers died on November 6, 1907. With this exception all of the surviving blood relatives of Stephen Hill survived the decedent.

Other than a daughter of one of the predeceased brothers of Stephen Hill, and the instances in which certain assignments were made, all of the indicated blood relatives of Stephen Hill joined in the petition for partial distribution. The petitioners prayed that there be distributed to them, in proper proportions, one-half of the community property and all of the separate property which had been decreed to the estate of the decedent in the estate of Stephen Hill. The petition was based upon subdivision 8, § 1386, of the Civil Code. No other property, either in the estate of the decedent or of Stephen Hill, was involved by the proceeding. The petition was opposed by the blood relatives of the decedent upon the ground that the blood relatives of Stephen Hill were not entitled to the property, but that on the death of the decedent it descended to her blood relatives. The court granted the petition, and the decree was made accordingly.

Two other appeals have been heard and determined in the estate of Isabella Hill (8 Cal. App. 287, 96 Pac. 918; 167 Cal. 59, 138 Pac. 690). The first involved the question of the right of a statutory heir to administer upon the estate of the decedent, and the second whether certain property belonged to the separate estate of Stephen Hill or was a part of the community.

The present appeal is taken to test the constitutionality of subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, under which the decree was made. That section, as amended in 1907, reads as follows:

"8. If the deceased is a widow, or widower, and leaves no issue, and the estate, or any portion thereof, was common property of such decedent and his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such deceased spouse and to the descendants of such children by right of representation, and if none, then one-half of such common property goes to the father and mother of such decedent in equal shares, or to the survivor of them if either be dead, or if both be dead, then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such decedent and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation, and the other half goes to the father and mother of such deceased spouse in equal shares, or to the survivor of them if either be dead, or if both be dead, then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such deceased spouse and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation.

"If the estate, or any portion thereof, was separate property of such deceased spouse, while living, and came to such decedent from such spouse by descent, devise, or bequest, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such spouse and to the descendants of any deceased child by right of representation, and if none, then to the father and mother of such spouse, in equal shares, or to the survivor of them if either be dead, or if both be dead, then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such spouse and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation."

St. 1907, p. 567.

In 1880 section 1386 provided for the first time for the inheritance by the heirs of a deceased spouse of the community property of the widow or widower (St. 1880, p. 14). This original subdivision read:

"9. If the decedent be a widow or widower, and leave no kindred, and the estate, or any portion thereof, was common property of such decedent, and his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such common property shall go to the father of such deceased spouse, or if he be dead, to the mother. If there be no father nor mother, then such property shall go to the brothers and sisters of such deceased spouse, in equal shares, and to the lawful issue of any deceased brother or sister of such deceased spouse, by right of representation."

The above subdivision, through an error, was designated No. 9. This was corrected in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 607), and the separate property of the deceased spouse which had gone to the widow or widower by descent, devise, or bequest was added to the inheritance of the heirs of such deceased spouse, thus:

"8. If the decedent is a widow or widower, and leaves no issue, and the estate or any portion thereof was common property of such decedent and his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, or was separate property of his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes to the children of such deceased spouse and the descendants thereof, and if none, then to the father of such deceased spouse, or if he is dead, to the mother. If there is no father nor mother, then such property goes to the brothers and sisters of such deceased spouse, in equal shares, and to the lawful issue of any deceased brother or sister of such deceased spouse by right of representation."

It is clear that, Stephen Hill having died intestate, leaving neither issue nor descendants thereof, nor father nor mother, his two surviving brothers and one surviving sister, and the descendants of his two predeceased brothers and of his predeceased sister, were entitled, under the first paragraph of subdivision 8, to one-half of the community property, and, under the second, to all of the separate property, which together constituted the widow's share in the estate of Stephen Hill.

The appellants do not contend that the decree does not conform to the provisions of subdivision 8, as amended in 1907. Their contention is that the subdivision is unconstitutional, and that therefore the property in question should have been decreed to the surviving blood relatives of the decedent under "the general rules of distribution."

The twelfth, thirtieth, and thirty-third subdivisions of article 4, § 25, of the Constitution, are cited in the brief of appellants in support of the claim that the amended subdivision is unconstitutional. Those provisions declare: The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: Twelfth: Affecting estates of deceased persons, minors or other persons under legal disabilities. Thirtieth: Changing the law of descent or succession. Thirty-third: In all other cases where the general law can be made applicable.

In the brief of appellants it is argued that the change from leaving "no kindred" to leaving "no issue" is arbitrary, and the effect of the change in the predicate is discussed at length. The point is made that singling out widows and widowers dying without issue is a discrimination against such widow or widower so far as property inherited from the deceased spouse is concerned. The point is also made that under the subdivision the issue of the widow or widower may be begotten by a person other than the "deceased spouse." It is further insisted that the classification "is not such as to require legislation peculiar to such class." "In other words," says the brief, "it is clearly an arbitrary classification and constitutes special legislation."

[1] But the answer to these claims of unconstitutionality is in the nature and scope of the power of the Legislature itself in respect to descents, succession and kindred subjects. The legislation is neither local nor special within the meaning of the Constitution. Section 25, art. 4.

It is of general application and operates uniformly upon all persons within the same class. The subject is one of purely legislative cognizance and control, and we cannot conceive of any theory upon which it can be declared unconstitutional.

It was said in Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 185:

"The right of an heir to his inheritance depends upon positive law, and is not a natural or an absolute right. It is competent for the Legislature to change the rule of inheritance, or to restrict the testamentary power."

To the same effect, quoting from the syllabi in McCaughrey v. Lyall, 152 Cal. 615, 93 Pac. 681:

"The Legislature had full control of the whole subject of heirships and descents, and the heirs take subject to the conditions imposed by the statutory law, which alone gives them any right at all."

See Estate of Stanford, 126 Cal. 112, 54 Pac. 259, 58 Pac. 462, 45 L. R. A. 788.

In Estate of Brady, 171 Cal. 3, 151 Pac. 275, a case involving community property within the purview of subdivision 8, it was said:

"It must have been foreseen by the Legislature that many years would usually elapse between the deaths of the respective spouses. The apparent object of subdivision 8, where both spouses die without lineal descendants, is to provide for the inheritance of the property equally by the respective families of the two spouses by whose efforts it was accumulated."

In Estate of Watts, 175 Pac. 415, the decedent, a widow, left a will disposing of community property. Her husband had died intestate. Neither left issue nor father nor mother. Their respective survivors were brothers and sisters and children of predeceased brothers and sisters. The will bequeathed the property "to my heirs and to be distributed to them according to law." The lower court granted distribution to the blood relatives of the testatrix, refusing to recognize the claims of the blood relatives of the deceased husband. The judgment was reversed on this ground, this court holding that, when the testatrix gave the property to her heirs, she adopted, for the purposes of her testamentary disposition, the statute of succession.

[2] The decedent herein could have made testamentary disposition of the property, for the subdivision is applicable only in cases of intestacy. Estate of Brady, supra; Estate of Wenks, 171 Cal. 607, 154 Pac. 24. This she did not elect to do, and we perceive no reason for holding that the rule of succession presented by subdivision 8 is in any sense unconstitutional.

Decree affirmed.

ROCKEY et al. v. VIEUX et al. (L. A. 4778.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐2—LACK OF AUTHORITY FOR APPEAL—DISMISSAL—STATUTE.

Where appeal from order denying motion for new trial was not authorized by law in force at time notice was given (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended by St. 1915, p. 209), appeal will be dismissed.

2. QUIETING TITLE ⇐10(1)—RECOVERY ON STRENGTH OF TITLE.

Plaintiff in action to quiet title must show title in himself, and his right to recover must rest on strength of his own title, not weakness of defendant's.

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION ⇐71(7)—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1666, decree distributing lands of decedent is conclusive only as to rights of heirs, legatees, or devisees, in so far as they claim in such capacity, merely determining succession to such title as decedent may have had, not that he had any title to bind third parties in distributee's action to quiet title.

4. QUIETING TITLE ⇐44(4)—EVIDENCE OF TITLE—DEED TO PLAINTIFFS.

Deed from plaintiffs' predecessor to plaintiffs suing to quiet title would not have shown any title in plaintiffs, unless it formed part of a chain traceable back to government, paramount source of title, or to some grantor shown to have been in possession of property.

5. QUIETING TITLE ⇐43—CLAIM FROM COMMON SOURCE—PROOF OF GRANTOR'S TITLE.

Where both parties in action to quiet title claim title from common source, it is not necessary to prove title in grantor.

6. QUIETING TITLE ⇐15—FAILURE TO SHOW TITLE OR POSSESSION.

Where plaintiffs, seeking to quiet title, have failed to show either title or possession in themselves, they cannot complain that defendant, also without title, asserts interest in land, for defendant may always effectually resist decree against himself simply by showing plaintiff is without title.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; M. T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by Grace W. Rockey and others against Andre Vieux and another. From the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Appeal from order denying a new trial dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

John F. Poole, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. [1] This is an action to quiet title to a parcel of land in Kern county. The answer set up title and possession in the defendant Andre Vieux. The court found that said defendant was the owner in fee and in possession of the property, and entered judgment quieting his title against the claims of the plaintiffs. The latter appeal from the judgment. They also attempted to appeal from an order denying their motion for a new trial, but such appeal was not authorized by the law in force at the time the notice was given. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, amended 1915 (St. 1915, p. 209).

[2-4] The defendants claimed under a tax deed, and the appellants argue that the tax proceedings were defective and the deed void. But they totally failed to show that they themselves had any title or interest whatever in the property, or that they had ever been in possession of it. Their own evidence consisted simply of a decree of distribution made by the superior court, sitting in probate, in the matter of the estate of one Ferdinand Smith, deceased. By the terms of this decree there was distributed to the plaintiffs, among other property the land in controversy. There was no attempt, however, to show that Smith, the decedent, had any interest in the land. The plaintiff in an action of this kind must show title in himself. His right to recover must rest on the strength of his own title—not the weakness of defendants'. The appellants contend that the decree of distribution is conclusive. Code Civ. Proc. § 1636. But it is conclusive only as to the rights of heirs, legatees, or devisees, in so far as they claim in such capacities. Chever v. Ching Hong Poy, 82 Cal. 68, 22 Pac. 1081; Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 156 Cal. 510, 105 Pac. 981. It merely determines the succession to such title as the decedent may have had—it does not determine that he had any title. "Nor does it bind third parties who claim an interest adverse to that of the testator or intestate." Archer v. Harvey, 164 Cal. 274, 278, 128 Pac. 410, 412, and cases cited. The effect of the decree here offered was therefore no greater than that to be attributed to a deed from Ferdinand Smith to the appellants. Such a deed would not have shown any title in the plaintiffs, unless it formed part of a chain which could be traced back to the government, the paramount source of title, or to some grantor shown to have been in possession of the property. 10 Am. & Eng. Ency. (2d Ed.) 484; 15 Cyc. 151. There was no evidence offered to show that either the plaintiffs or their alleged predecessor had ever been in possession of the property.

[5, 6] Of course, where both parties claim title from a common source, it is not necessary to prove title in the grantor. McGorray v. Robinson, 135 Cal. 312, 67 Pac. 279. But that was not the situation here. The plaintiffs' claim, as already stated, was under Ferdinand Smith, while the defendants relied upon a patent from the state of California to one Craig, and a subsequent tax deed to one Tyler, who had deeded to the defendants. There is no need, therefore, to consider whether the tax sale and deed were regular and valid. The plaintiffs having failed to show either title or possession in themselves, they "cannot complain that some one else, also without title, asserts an interest in the land. * * * A defendant in such an action may always effectually resist a decree against himself, by showing simply that the plaintiff is without title." Williams v. City of San Pedro, 153 Cal. 44, 49, 94 Pac. 234, 236, and cases cited. And, having shown no interest in the land, the plaintiffs are not aggrieved by a judgment declaring some one else to be the owner.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 706(1)—NEG-LIGENT OPERATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES —
PLEADING.

With respect to allegations of negligence by one operating motorcar or other vehicle, it is sufficient to aver he operated so negligently that vehicle struck plaintiff and injured him, and exact manner of injury need not be described; same rule applying to case of two persons alleged to have been concurrently guilty of negligence in operating vehicles to injury of plaintiff.

2. DAMAGES — 46 — PERSONAL INJURIES —
HOSPITAL SERVICES.

In absence of evidence to show gratuitous service, law implies agreement by patient to pay reasonable value of treatment at hospital.

so that, in action for injuries, it is proper for plaintiff to introduce evidence as to amount that would be a reasonable charge for hospital services to her.

3. WITNESSES $\S$ 240(2)—LEADING QUESTIONS—DISCRETION.

The trial court has a large discretion in allowing leading questions.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 705(12)—INJURIES BY AUTOMOBILES—NEGLIGENCE.

If one only of defendants operating their respective automobiles failed to exercise ordinary care in relation to plaintiff, one who exercised care was not liable.

5. TRIAL $\S$ 296(3)—INSTRUCTION—CONSTRUCTION WITH OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

In action for injuries from negligent operation of automobiles by defendants, erroneous instruction that it was duty of both to use ordinary care, and that if both or either failed to exercise such care "they" were guilty of negligence, held harmless to defendants, in view of other instructions.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 706(8)—INJURIES BY AUTOMOBILES—INSTRUCTION—RIGHT OF WAY.

In action against defendants for injuries to plaintiff through negligent operation of automobiles, one defendant's car having been forced into plaintiff at street intersection, instruction that if one defendant was approaching on one street going northerly, other things equal, she was entitled to right of way as against other defendant, held not erroneous as misstating or misapplying statutory rule.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 260(8)—HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTION.

In action for injuries to plaintiff from concurrent negligence of defendants in operating automobiles at street intersection, refusal to one defendant of instruction that statutory provision as to right of way did not apply except when two drivers were approaching crossing simultaneously held harmless to defendant, in view of another instruction to same effect.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 705(4)—OPERATION OF AUTOMOBILE—VIOLATION OF LAW—NEGLIGENCE.

Defendant who operated motor vehicle in violation of express provision of law as to right of way at street intersection was negligent.

9. TRIAL $\S$ 192—INSTRUCTIONS—STATEMENT OF TESTIMONY AND LEGAL RESULT.

Where there is no dispute that view was obstructed, instruction, in action for injuries at street intersection from concurrent negligence of defendants in operating automobiles, that if either defendant approached intersection where view was obstructed at more than 10 miles an hour he or she was negligent, was proper; the law fixing 10 miles as the limit in such case.

10. EVIDENCE $\S$ 598(1)—"PREPONDERANCE OF THE EVIDENCE."

"Preponderance of the evidence" in a civil case means only that the evidence on one side outweighs the evidence on the other, not necessarily in number of witnesses or quantity, but in effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Preponderance.]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 757(3)—REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS—ABSENCE OF EVIDENCE.

Where there is not enough evidence printed in briefs to enable Supreme Court to determine whether or not instructions offered and refused were applicable to case, court cannot consider objections to instructions.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1032(1)—BURDEN TO SHOW PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Burden is on defendant appellants to show sufficient prejudicial error to justify reversal.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Ina C. Mathes against the Aggeler & Musser Seed Company and Ruth Purcell. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Fredericks & Hanna and E. B. Drake, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants, the plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendants appeal.

The points urged in support of the appeal have no merit and require little discussion.

[1] The allegation of the complaint charging negligence stated that, at a time and place described, the two defendants, each driving an automobile, "so negligently operated their respective automobiles that the same collided one with the other, forcing the automobile of the defendant Ruth Purcell violently over against the plaintiff while she was standing at or near the sidewalk of the said intersection, and injuring her as hereinafter set out." It is the established law in this state, with respect to allegations of negligence by one operating a car or other vehicle, that it is sufficient to aver that he operated the same in a manner so negligent that it struck the plaintiff and injured him, and that the exact manner of the injury need not be otherwise described. Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 370, 113 Pac. 663. The defendants concede that this may be true where there is but one person and one vehicle involved, but insists that if two persons, in operating their respective vehicles, are concurrently guilty of negligence causing the accident, this rule does not apply. We can see no sound reasons for making any such distinction. The objection is untenable.

[2] One of the items of damage was the expenses of plaintiff's treatment at a hospital. It appeared that the plaintiff was taken to a hospital and remained there receiving treatment several days, but there was no direct evidence of any contract between the plaintiff and the owners of the hospital that she was to pay for such treatment. The law, of course, in the absence of evidence to show gratuitous service, would imply an agreement by her to pay the reasonable value. It was therefore proper for the plaintiff to introduce evidence as to the amount that would be a reasonable charge for the services. The objection to such evidence was properly overruled.

[3] It is unnecessary to discuss the particulars relating to the objections made by the defendants to leading questions. The trial court has a large discretion in allowing leading questions, and there is nothing to indicate that this discretion was abused.

[4, 5] Instruction No. 7 given by the court contains a palpable error. It declares that it was the duty of both defendants to use ordinary care in operating their automobile at the time and that "if both, or either, fail to exercise such care, then they were guilty of negligence." Of course, it could not be true that the one who did not fail to exercise care would be guilty of negligence. If this instruction stood alone, perhaps it might be of sufficient importance to require a reversal. But a reading of the instructions as a whole shows that the use of the plural in the last part of the quoted clause was a mere inadvertence and that the jury was repeatedly instructed that neither defendant could be charged with damages unless that particular defendant had been guilty of negligence proximately causing the injury. The error could not have prejudiced the defendants.

[6, 7] The accident occurred at the intersection of two streets which one defendant was approaching from the south on one street, and the other from the west on the intersecting street. Dealing with this situation, one instruction stated that, if the defendant Purcell was approaching on the street going northerly toward the intersection, "then, all other things being equal, she was entitled to the right of way" in passing the intersection, as against the other defendant approaching from the west. The statute declares that, where two persons approach an intersection on different streets, the one approaching from the right has the right of way. The complaint is that the expression "all other things being equal" is inaccurate and that the court should have stated merely that the person approaching from the right has the right of way. We do not believe any jury could misunderstand the purport of the language. Practically, it means the same thing as the statute, since the statute positively gave to the defendant Purcell the right of way at the intersection, unless she was so far from the intersection that she would not come within the definition as a person approaching the intersection. The phrase "all other things being equal" would clearly imply that the distance of each from the intersection should be such as to put the statutory rule in operation. In this connection the defendant asked an instruction, which was refused, to the effect that the provision of the statute did not apply except when the two were approaching the crossing simultaneously at or near the same time. The instruction above given, in which the phrase "all other things being equal" was used, was substantially to the same effect as the instruction asked and refused. We do not think the defendants were prejudiced by the ruling of the court in this matter.

[8] There was no error in the instruction of the court informing the jury that one who operated his vehicle in violation of an express provision of the law was guilty of negligence in so doing. The proposition is thoroughly settled.

[9] At the corner of the intersection, and on the angle between the two streets on which the respective defendants were approaching, stood a church which obstructed the view of each defendant by the other as they approached the crossing. There was no dispute in the evidence over this question. The court is allowed to state the testimony on a matter of fact upon which there is no dispute and in proof of which the testimony is unconflicting and substantial. Therefore the court did not err in stating to the jury that, if either defendant approached the intersection at the place in question at a greater speed than 10 miles an hour, such defendant was negligent in operating such vehicle at such speed. The law fixed 10 miles as the utmost limit of speed under such circumstances.

[10] The court defined the meaning of the term "preponderance of evidence," by giving the definition thereof, approved by this court in People v. Miller, 171 Cal. at page 653, 154 Pac. at page 470, taken from the decision in Hoffman v. Loud, 111 Mich. 156, 69 N. W. 231. We can see no objection to this definition and do not desire to retract the approval given in People v. Miller.

[11, 12] Complaint is made of the action of the court in drawing a line upon a map introduced in evidence, showing the relative location of the streets involved in the controversy, and in refusing certain instructions relating to the particular conduct of the defendants, respectively, immediately preceding the collision. The map is not before us, and it does not appear from anything in the brief printed by the appellant where the line was drawn by the court across the map referred to. The instructions show, however, that the court informed the jury that it was not intending to draw a line accurately, but only for purposes of illustration. There is not enough of the evidence printed in the briefs to enable us to determine whether or not the instructions offered and refused were applicable to the case. Under these circumstances, we cannot consider these objections. The defendants have failed to show injury, and it is for them to show sufficient prejudicial error to justify a reversal.

There are no other points that deserve even a brief discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLER & LUX, Inc., v. J. G. JAMES CO.
et al. (Sac. 2685.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 39—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—CONVEYANCE.

Riparian right can be preserved by deed in parcels of land which do not border upon stream when by conveyance they are severed from original riparian tract, and such a conveyance is good against owners of other riparian lands upon the same stream.

2. PROPERTY 11—TRANSFER.

It is fundamental that a man can transfer property which he owns, and that such transfer is good against the whole world.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 47—USE OF WATER—RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

An upper riparian owner cannot sell water for use upon lands not riparian; such not being exercise of a riparian right nor transfer of a riparian right.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Miller & Lux, Incorporated, against the J. G. James Company and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Short, of Fresno, and Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco (Samuel C. Wiel, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. O'Brien & Spaulding and James M. O'Brien, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. The plaintiff, owner of land riparian to the San Joaquin river below the lands of the defendants, seeks to enjoin them from the use of water upon their lands. It is admitted that the lands of all the defendants were originally portions of a large tract of riparian land belonging to the defendant J. G. James Company. It is conceded that at the time of the conveyance by said J. G. James Company of said several parcels of land the grantor and grantee, by stipulation in their conveyances, intended that the purchaser should become entitled to the use of water "to the same extent as though the ownership of said land had at all times continued in said J. G. James Company." It is also conceded that the rule is correctly stated in Copeland v. Fairview, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 161, 131 Pac. 124:

"That such riparian right can be thus preserved in parcels which do not border upon the stream when, by the conveyance, they are severed from the original riparian tract, is fully settled by the decisions in this state."

It was, however, also stated in that case:

"How far such an apportionment or transfer is good against owners of other riparian lands upon the same stream, not part of the tract from which such parcels are conveyed, we need not consider, since none of such other owners are parties to or concerned in this suit." Copeland v. Fairview, etc., Co., supra.

The appellant states:

"There is no doubt that the detached tracts may take water as against all privies to the transaction, and that has been decided and settled. The case presents for the first time, however, the question of the relation of the owners of the detached areas to outstanding claimants upon the natural stream, without privity to the transaction. * * *"

The appellant asks:

Can the owner of distant land, having no contact with the stream, "take water thereto under the common law of riparian rights, by virtue of the stipulation in the transfer from the owner of the riparian tract of which it was formerly a part, as against a lower claimant upon the natural stream, who had no part in the stipulation and who is a stranger to the transaction"?

As conceded, the right of the owner of the larger riparian tract to convey part of the riparian right to his grantee is fully recognized by the decisions of this court. See Copeland v. Fairview, etc., Co., supra, and cases therein cited. In Strong v. Baldwin, 154 Cal. 150, 97 Pac. 178, 129 Am. St. Rep. 149, it was said:

"When a tract of land abuts on a stream, and a portion thereof not contiguous to the stream is conveyed by the owner, the riparian right of the portion so conveyed in the stream may also be conveyed with the land, as is fully recognized in the case cited by learned counsel for appellants (Anaheim, etc., Co. v. Fuller, 150 Cal. 331 [88 Pac. 978, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062]), and so when so conveyed is still a riparian right with all the attributes of such right, and is in strict technical language 'parcel of the land' conveyed. The same is necessarily true where a tract of land abutting on a stream is partitioned in court proceedings among the owners thereof, and appropriate provision for riparian rights is made in the decree as to the portions allotted by the decree which do not abut on the stream."

[1-3] That the riparian right is a part and parcel of the land is also pointed out in the earlier cases:

"The right to the flow of water is inseparably annexed to the soil, and passes with it, not as an easement or appurtenance, but as a parcel. Use does not create, and disuse cannot destroy or suspend it.

"The right to the use of water flowing over land is undoubtedly identified with the realty, and is a real and corporeal hereditament. Cary v. Daniels, 5 Metc. [Mass.] 238."

Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674.

See, also, Rose v. Mesmer, 142 Cal. 322, 75 Pac. 905; Verdugo Canyon Water Co. v. Verdugo, 152 Cal. 655, 663, 93 Pac. 1021, 1025, where it is said:

"Its waters were therefore not merely appurtenant thereto, as a right acquired by prescription, or appropriation, would be, but were a part of the land itself, as parcel thereof."

If, then, there is attached to every portion of a large tract of land a right to the use of the water of the stream, so intimately connected with the land itself that it can appropriately be called a parcel thereof, it being conceded to be the settled law of this state that such right can be conveyed by the owner thereof to a grantee of the land as a part and parcel thereof, there seems to be no good reason for holding that this grant is not effective as against lower riparian lands and water users. They have the same right that they had before the transfer, neither more nor less. If the owner of riparian lands, by subdividing his land and selling parcels thereof not adjacent to the stream by the act of severance of the land, deprives it of the very riparian right which the conveyance purports to grant as against lower riparian owners so that they can compel the water which might otherwise be used upon that land so severed to flow past the lands so conveyed to the lands of lower riparian owners, the effect of the conveyance by the riparian owner is not to vest title in his grantee, but in lower riparian owners or water users. It is fundamental that a man can transfer property which he owns and that such transfer is good against the whole world. There seems to be no reason why this rule, under our authorities, should not apply here. It is true that it has been held that the upper riparian owner cannot sell the water for use upon lands not riparian, for this is not the exercise of a riparian right, and the purported transfer would not be a transfer of a riparian right. Heilbron v. Fowler Switch Canal Co., 75 Cal. 432, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183; Heilbron v. Seventy-Six Land & Water Co., 80 Cal. 194, 22 Pac. 62. The reasoning upon which this rule is based, however, has no application to the case in hand.

The previous decisions of this court, we think, have already determined this question against the contention of the appellant. The rule above quoted from Strong v. Baldwin, supra, was announced in an action brought by owners of certain parcels of land in the Rancho Paso de Bartolo Viejo against the owner of an upper riparian rancho known as the Rancho la Puente. It will be observed that the lower riparian owner could not gain the title by adverse possession as against the upper riparian owner. As there stated:

"With respect to the right of the use of the waters of the river as distinguished from the ditch itself, the court found that the use by respondents was not adverse to Baldwin [the owner of the upper riparian land], that all the parties to the action have rights to the use of the waters of San Gabriel river as riparian owners, but that the evidence before the court was not sufficient to enable the court to make findings as to the relative rights of the plaintiffs and cross-defendants, on the one hand, and of Baldwin on the other."

The decision, then, expressly holds that the owners of land in the lower rancho were riparian owners as against an upper riparian owner, even though not contiguous to the stream, and it was in that connection that the court said:

"This is not a case, as suggested by appellants, of attempting to make riparian lands which are not in fact riparian, but is simply the preservation of the right which the land has at the time of the conveyance or decree. In the case at bar the land of some of these plaintiffs and cross-defendants abuts on the stream, and as to such land there is, of course, no question. As to the land of the others, we think it sufficiently appears that the riparian rights were preserved. It is clear upon the record that at least a portion of each of such parcels has always been dependent for irrigation on the waters of said river, and has always been irrigated by means of said waters."

It appears that the lower rancho had been partitioned, and that the riparian rights were mentioned in the partition decree. In that regard the court stated:

"As already stated, that decree allotted with each parcel of land 'all riparian rights and privileges,' thus making the same 'parcel of the land,' as in the case of the conveyances from Pico. All of the plaintiffs and cross-defendants, whose land does not abut on the river hold either under such deeds from Pico or under the partition decree. From what we have said, it follows that they are all riparian owners as to the San Gabriel river, even though their land does not abut thereon."

If the riparian character of the land was preserved by the agreement between the holder of the land and his grantees as against an upper riparian owner, the same would be true with reference to a lower riparian owner, as in the instant case. The same question was involved in Arroyo Ditch & Water Co. v. Baldwin, 155 Cal. 280, 100 Pac. 874, although reference to the transcript may be necessary to make that fact fully apparent. In that case the Arroyo Ditch &

Water Company diverted all of the stream known as the Old San Gabriel river, sometimes called "Rio Hondo," at its dam below the land of the plaintiff. This stream was bordered above and below the dam on either side by large Mexican grants. Below the dam of the plaintiff were—

"47,320 acres of land within the ranchos Paso de Bartolo, Santa Gertrudes, Los Cerritos, San Antonio, and San Pedro, which require for irrigation all the water naturally flowing in the Old San Gabriel river at the point designated as the Arroyo Ditch dam; that said acreage requires 6,760 inches of water under a 4-inch pressure for its successful irrigation; that appellant is the owner of 5,835.80 acres of land bordering on and within the watershed of said river included within the ranchos of Potrero Grande and La Merced; and that he also owns an undivided five-sixths interest in the Potrero Chico rancho, containing 150 acres and riparian to the river."

It was also found that the defendant Baldwin's land required 289 inches of water under a 4-inch pressure for irrigation. The Arroyo Ditch & Water Company distributed the water diverted at its dam to lands within the boundaries of some of the riparian ranchos below said dam, and as against the owners of lands in the riparian ranchos below the dam who had not used water the plaintiff claims to have acquired a right by adverse possession. See page 285 of 155 Cal., page 876 of 100 Pac., and map therein referred to. The court, after stating these facts and referring to the map in question, said:

"Plaintiff's incorporators having thus acquired such right, or having riparian rights themselves, it is immaterial to the defendant Baldwin, an upper riparian owner, whether the right was enforced by them separately or through a corporation representing them, either as their agent and trustee or as possessor of their former titles."

The court held that—

"There was also evidence upon which the court's calculations with reference to the proportion of the water belonging to the different litigants were properly based."

By reference to the transcript it appeared that the trial court divided the water, giving 760/7049 to the plaintiff, and 289/7049 to the defendant; in other words, divided the water between Baldwin, an upper riparian owner, and the plaintiff, in the proportion of the amount of water needed by the entire acreage below the dam if the same had been irrigated, to wit, 6,760 inches, and the water needed to irrigate the riparian land above the dam, to wit, 289 inches. It therefore resulted that in this litigation between the diverters of water below Baldwin's land and Baldwin, the upper riparian owner, the court considered all the acreage below the dam, and therefore necessarily considered the various parcels of land within those ranchos belonging to the distributees of water which did not abut upon the stream. For the reasons stated, the question propounded by appellant must be answered in the affirmative.

Judgment affirmed.

COOPER v. ROSENSTIRN. (Civ. 2622.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 27, 1918.)

BROKERS — §86(3) — COMMISSIONS — DIVISION—EVIDENCE.

In action based on written contract whereby it was agreed between plaintiff and defendant brokers that, if plaintiff consummated sale, commission should be divided, conflicting evidence held to support court's finding that plaintiff did not consummate the sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Cooper against A. M. Rosenstirn. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Armstrong, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Rothchild, Golden & Rothchild, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This case arose out of a controversy between two real estate brokers as to whether or not the commission received by the defendant upon the sale of certain property in San Francisco should be divided between the plaintiff and the defendant.

On the 15th day of March, 1915, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written contract whereby it was agreed that if Cooper, the plaintiff, should consummate a sale of certain real property in San Francisco to Livingston Bros., any commissions earned should be divided equally between the plaintiff and the defendant.

The court found that Cooper did not consummate the sale, and the only question is whether or not this finding is supported by the evidence. The evidence showed that Cooper worked long and hard upon Livingston Bros. in an effort to sell the property, but, on the other hand, Livingston testified that, after authorizing Cooper to offer $190,000 to the owners for the property, he advised the latter that he was no longer interested, and to call the matter off. This conversation took place somewhere about June 8, 1915. The owners of the property were at that time demanding a price of $210,000 for the property. It also appeared that, at about the same time that Livingston Bros. called the matter off, Rosenstirn received a telegram from Starr, the owner of the property, in which the latter canceled negotiations.

Cooper never was able to get a higher offer than $190,000 from Livingston, and never was able to get a deposit from him, although Rosenstirn testified that he constantly demanded that Cooper make an effort to do this.

The property was subsequently sold on the 2d day of July, 1915, through Abrahamson, another broker, to Livingston Bros., for $204,000. Abrahamson's testimony is to the effect that Rosenstirn did not know for whom he was dealing until a deposit was secured and he was ready to sign a contract.

The court was justified in believing from the evidence that two brokers, Cooper and Abrahamson, were endeavoring to sell the property to Livingston Bros. Abrahamson finally got Livingston Bros. to agree to pay a price which the owners of the property were willing to accept, secured a deposit, and consummated the contract. The testimony is thus seen to be conflicting and to support the above-recited finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. PILLSBURY et al. (Civ. 2503.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 21, 1918. Rehearing Denied Jan. 20, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 17, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS — 58(4) — BONDS — ISSUANCE—PLEDGE.

Corporation bonds pledged as security for a note given by a corporation are issued when they are so pledged, irrespective of who holds the legal title during their hypothecation.

2. CORPORATIONS — 58(4)—PLEDGE OF CORPORATE BONDS—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

Where bonds of a corporation are pledged as security for a debt owing by the corporation, the pledgee may collect the interest coupons and the principal of the bonds at their maturity if such maturity occurs during the life of the pledge and the corporation has the corresponding obligation to make such payments to the pledgee.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 58(4)—ACCRUAL OF STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY.

Stockholders' statutory liability accrues at the inception of the corporate liability, and not at the time such liability is sought to be enforced against the corporation.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 58(4)—STOCKHOLDERS' STATUTORY LIABILITY — BONDS PLEDGED AS SECURITY.

Since the stockholders' statutory liability upon bonds pledged by the corporation as security accrues at the time the bonds are pledged, and not at the time they are sold under the pledge agreement, an action by a purchaser of such bonds against stockholders upon failure of the corporation to pay interest was barred three years after the time the bonds were pledged, under Code Civ. Proc. § 359.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Morgan, Judge.

Action by J. Howard Smith against H. D. Pillsbury and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Howard Smith and Martin Stevens, of San Francisco, for appellant.

H. D. Pillsbury, Alfred Sutro, Charles C. Moore, and Corbet & Selby, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal on the judgment roll alone from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action brought to recover from them, as stockholders in a corporation, their proportionate liability for an indebtedness of the corporation upon certain bonds owned by the plaintiff; the corporation having failed to meet the payments of interest thereon.

The sole question presented by the record for determination is whether or not the cause of action pleaded is barred by the provisions of section 359 of the Code of Civil Procedure, limiting to three years the time within which an action may be commenced.

There is no dispute about the facts. Each of the defendants was the owner and holder of shares of stock in the Ocean Shore Railway Company, a corporation organized pursuant to the laws of this state. Subsequent to its organization, at a meeting called and held for the purpose, its stockholders regularly ordered and created a bonded indebtedness in a large amount, to be represented by bonds, which were to be issued by the corporation as funds should be required for payment of construction, equipment, and maintenance of the railroad. The bonds were for the sum of $1,000 each, payable 30 years from November 1, 1905, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. They were secured by a mortgage and deed of trust of all property owned by the railroad corporation, which provided that, in case default should be made in the payment of interest on any of such bonds for a period of 90 days, then the principal should become immediately due and payable. On the 2d day of April, 1908, the railroad corporation, in payment of certain electrical machinery theretofore purchased by it, gave to the General Electric Company its promissory note, and deposited with that company as a pledge for the payment of the note 150 of said bonds; and the railroad company agreed that, should the note or any interest due thereon remain unpaid according to its terms, the General Electric Company might sell the bonds and apply the net proceeds thereof in satisfaction of the note. The railroad corporation being in default in the payment of certain interest on its said bonds, the trustee, pursuant to the terms of the deed of trust, sold at public auction on January 7, 1911, all the property held by it as security, and applied the sum of money thus realized to the equal and proportionate payment of all of said bonds. In the meantime default had also been made in the payment of interest on its note of April 2, 1908, and on July 28, 1910, the payee of the note sold the bonds pledged with it, and at that sale the plaintiff became the owner of twelve of such bonds.

The court found that the liability of defendants as stockholders of the railroad corporation was created on April 2, 1908, the date the bonds were pledged, and not on July 28, 1910, the time they were sold by the pledgee, and hence that the statute of limitations had barred this action, which was commenced in September, 1912.

[1] We do not think it can be seriously questioned that the bonds here concerned were issued when they were pledged to the General Electric Company as security for the payment of the note, and this irrespective of who held the legal title thereto during their hypothecation. In Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Pacific Railway Co., 117 Cal. 332, 344, 49 Pac. 197, 201, our Supreme Court, upon the question here involved, said:

"* * * It seems to us that in a just and natural sense the bonds were issued 'for' such money or property; they served the purpose designed by the company—procured value for it. The cases upon the subject uphold the right to pledge as included in the right to sell."

This doctrine has been followed in numerous cases, and in Equitable Trust Co. v. Great Shoshone, etc., Co. (D. C.) 228 Fed. 516, it was said:

"A bond does not become an obligation of the debtor until it is issued, and it is issued when, and only when, a third party acquires some right or interest therein. True, there need not be an absolute sale; a bond is issued as well when it is put out as collateral."

[2] The pledge of the bonds conferred rights upon the pledgee and corresponding obligations upon the pledgor. Thus the pledgee had the right to collect the interest coupons, with the corresponding obligation upon the corporation to pay them to the pledgee, the holder of the bonds. The same is true as to the principal of the bonds upon their maturity, if such maturity occur during the life of the pledge.

"A pledgee of interest-bearing securities is entitled to collect and receive the interest as it becomes payable, and he will hold the sums collected on the same terms as he holds the securities themselves. It is immaterial in this respect whether the collateral security be a promissory note, a corporation bond, or shares in a corporation." Jones on Collateral Securities, § 339, citing Androscoggin v. Auburn Bank, 48 Me. 335.

[3, 4] A liability on the part of the pledgor being thus created, the only question remaining to be determined is as to when the stockholder's statutory liability upon this liability of the corporation accrues, whether at the inception of the corporate liability or at the time it becomes enforceable against the corporation. It is the settled doctrine in this state that such statutory liability accrues at the inception of the corporate liability, and that the three-year period within which an action thereon must be commenced commences to run at that time. Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 Pac. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87; Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 Pac. 939. In the case at bar, therefore, the trial court correctly held that the liability of the defendants as stockholders in the Ocean Shore Railroad upon the bonds pledged by that corporation arose at the time of the pledge, and not at the time of the sale of the bonds under the pledge; and that consequently the present action is barred, having been commenced more than three years from the date of the pledge.

The judgment is affirmed.

3. INSANE PERSONS — 94(1) — JUDGMENT — VACATION—AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS.

Where a judgment in a personal injury action was rendered against an insane defendant for whom no guardian ad litem or general guardian had been appointed as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 372, because of the inadvertence of the court rather than because of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of defendant, an affidavit of merits was not necessary on motion to vacate such judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Separate actions by Claire Winslow and Marguerite Winslow against H. B. McCarthy and others. Actions were dismissed as against all except defendant named, and judgments rendered against him. On appeal of Anna H. McCarthy, guardian of the defendant named, the judgments were set aside, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. D. Dorn, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Myrick & Deering and James Walter Scott, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The above actions were brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained on July 18, 1915, when the two plaintiffs were riding in an automobile as passengers. The defendant H. B. McCarthy was at the time driving the automobile in what is commonly called "jitney service." While the plaintiffs were in the automobile, it collided with a street car, and, as a result of the collision, the plaintiffs were severely injured, and McCarthy sustained injuries from which he later became insane.

The actions were commenced in October, 1915, and the Pacific Coast Casualty Company was named as a defendant. Summonses and complaints were served upon this company, which appeared and filed a demurrer in each action, which demurrers were sustained. In November, 1915, the defendant H. B. McCarthy was adjudged insane and committed to the state asylum at Agnews. On January 13, 1916, plaintiffs caused copies of the summonses and complaints to be served upon H. B. McCarthy and upon Leonard Stocking, M. D., the medical superintendent of the hospital where defendant was confined. A return of service was made by the sheriff, which return incorrectly stated that Dr. Leonard Stocking was "the guardian of the person of said H. B. McCarthy, defendant." At the time that service was made upon McCarthy, he was actually insane and no guardian had been appointed for him.

On March 2, 1916, counsel for the plaintiffs appeared in open court and dismissed the action as to all defendants except H. B. McCarthy. Without the appointment of a guardian ad litem for said defendant plaintiffs obtained judgments in favor of plaintiff Claire Winslow and in favor of plaintiff Marguerite Winslow, which judgments aggregated $12,452.50.

On the 2d day of September, 1916, Anna H. McCarthy was appointed guardian of the person and estate of said H. B. McCarthy, an insane person. Letters of guardianship were issued to her out of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco on that day, and on the same day said guardian caused to be served upon counsel for plaintiffs notice of motions to vacate and set aside the judgments. The court, upon a hearing, granted the motions and vacated and set aside the two judgments. These appeals are taken by the plaintiffs from said orders setting aside their respective judgments.

The appellants urge that as there was no affidavit of merits served with the notices of motions to vacate the judgments, or presented at the hearing thereof, the motions should not have been granted.

[1] The order granting the motion is general in its terms, and, if it can be sustained upon any of the grounds stated in the motion, an appellate court is bound to assume that it was granted upon such ground. One of the grounds stated in the motion was that—

"At the time said judgment was rendered said Harold B. McCarthy was insane and incompetent, and was known by plaintiff to be insane and incompetent, and that nevertheless no guardian, either general or ad litem, was appointed to represent said defendant in said action."

Section 372, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that—

"When an insane or incompetent person is a party, he must appear either by his general guardian or by a guardian ad litem appointed by the court in which the action is pending, in each case. * * *"

[2] There is nothing in the record to indicate that the trial judge was aware of the fact that the defendant had no general guardian and that the statement in the return made by the sheriff to the effect that Dr. Leonard Stocking was the guardian of the person of said McCarthy was incorrect. We may assume that, had the court known that the defendant had no general guardian, it would have appointed a guardian ad litem in compliance with the provisions of the above section. This being true, the judgments were rendered inadvertently and irregularly by the court, and of its own motion the court had the right to set the same aside. Stewart v. Taylor, 68 Cal. 5, 8 Pac. 605. This being true, we think no affidavit of merits would be required.

Moreover, in the case of Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 124 Cal. 134 at page 144, 56 Pac. 797, at page 801, the court says, in considering the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, requiring an affidavit of merits:

"The main provision of that section is that a court may relieve a party from judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and it is quite clear that the provision just quoted has no application to the ground upon which the respondent moved in the case at bar. Defendant here is not asking relief from its neglect or mistake or default of any character. * * * In the cases cited, the parties making application to set aside the judgments confessed some neglect or misconduct from which they sought to be relieved, and thus come clearly within the provisions of said section, and, of course, were compelled to comply with the provisions of the section under the construction which the court had given them."

[3] We think that in the case at bar the ground stated, i. e., that no guardian ad litem had been appointed by the court for the defendant, although said defendant had been adjudged insane and had no general guardian at the time the judgments were rendered against him, cannot be said to be chargeable to the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of the defendant, but rather to the inadvertence of the court. Therefore, under the language above quoted, no affidavit of merits was necessary.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

Ware & Ware, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. Action for damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff, Mattie Bidwell, wife of S. J. Bidwell, coplaintiff, and for consequential injury flowing therefrom to the latter.

The action was tried by a jury and resulted in a verdict for plaintiffs, which was rendered March 11, 1916. The defendant made a motion for a new trial. The order granting it was filed June 13, 1916. This order was signed by the judge of the trial court on the previous day, and was on said day delivered by him to the shorthand reporter of the court, with instructions to file the same on the following day, which was done. Thereafter plaintiffs moved to set aside said order upon the ground that it was void upon its face, and that the court had no jurisdiction to make the same, for the reason that it was made more than three months after the entry of the verdict. This motion was granted, and defendant appeals.

The appellant contends that the trial court had no power to set aside its order granting a new trial, and that the remedy of the party aggrieved was by appeal, citing numerous authorities in support of the principle. Respondents admit the validity of the authorities cited, but contend that an exception to the rule therein announced exists in the case of an order void upon its face. People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 405, 16 Pac. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 448; Kreiss v. Hotaling, 96 Cal. 617, 31 Pac. 740; People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 675, 77 Pac. 651; Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 598, 19 Pac. 174. Respondents, in support of the order appealed from, contend that the order granting the new trial was void because not filed within three months from the entry of the verdict (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 660), which period of time according to their contention expired on June 11, 1916. Against this contention it is urged by appellant that as June 11th fell upon Sunday the court, under the provisions of section 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure, had until and including the following day within which to make the order. That section provides:

"The time within which any act provided by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, and then it is also excluded."

The law relative to the duty and power of the court to pass upon a motion for a new trial is found in section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, at the time the motion here in question was pending, provided:

"The motion for a new trial must be heard at the earliest practical time. * * * The hearing and disposition of the motion * * * shall have precedence over all other matters except criminal causes, probate matters and cases actually on trial, and it shall be the duty of the court to determine the same at the earliest possible moment. The power of the court to pass on the motion shall expire within three months after the verdict of the jury or service on the moving party of notice of the decision of the court. If such motion is not determined within said three months the effect shall be a denial of the motion without further order of the court."

[1, 2] A careful consideration of the language of these two sections leads us to the conclusion that section 660 is not affected by the provisions of section 12, and that the three-month period during which a court has power to pass upon a motion for a new trial is not extended if the closing day thereof should fall upon a holiday. The clause in section 660 reading, "The power of the court to pass on the motion shall expire within three months after the verdict," etc., undeniably gives to the court three months within which it may do so; and, if nothing more were said, there would be little reason for holding that this period is not extended by one day, conformably to the provisions of section 12, in the contingency mentioned in said section. But section 660 goes much further, and specifically provides that if the court shall not have acted on the motion within the three-month period the motion is ipso facto denied. Without adverting to the evident intent of the Legislature in enacting this section that the utmost speed shall be observed in deciding the motion, and that the three-month period within which to perform the act is not given in affirmative terms, but the act is required to be performed at the earliest possible moment, with a limitation of three months in which to do it, it is sufficient to apply the established principle of construction of statutes, namely, that the specific prevails over the general, to arrive at the conclusion that section 660 is not affected by section 12. The latter section is general in its terms as applied to the time within which an act may be performed; but section 660 is specific as to the time within which the court may pass upon a motion for a new trial, and in the most positive terms confines the power of the court to perform that particular act to the period named, and, going even further, provides that, failing action by the court within said time, the motion is automatically deemed denied. We think the conclusion unavoidable, not only by the application of the principle of construction of statutes above adverted to, but by the whole tenor of section 660, that section 12 has no application thereto.

[3] What we have said thus far is addressed to the proposition advanced by appellant that a decision of the motion for a new trial was in time if made on June 12th; but it appears from the bill of exceptions that this decision was in writing, and, although signed by the judge of the trial court on June 12th, was not filed on that day, but was left by the judge in charge of the shorthand reporter of the court, with instructions to file it on the following day, June 13th, a date admittedly beyond the jurisdictional period.

It is apparent that during the time that the written order was in the possession of the shorthand reporter it was under the control of the judge, and that up to the time of its actual filing no judicial act with relation to the decision of the motion for a new trial had been performed. The decision thereon at most was a matter within the breast of the judge. This is not a case where the omission to file the order on the 12th was by inadvertence or in disregard of the court's instructions. The facts show that if the reporter had filed the order on the 12th he would have violated the directions given to him. In the matter of his possession of this order and his assumed obligation to file it the reporter was not discharging any duty placed upon him by law, and was in no different situation than any other messenger who might have been selected by the judge. We think the conclusion is not to be avoided that the judicial action of the court upon the motion for a new trial was not taken until June 13, 1916, a point of time admittedly too late.

The respondents raise another point, namely, that the bill of exceptions upon which the present appeal is based was not presented to the judge for settlement within the time prescribed by law, and that this court cannot therefore consider it. In view of the conclusion we have reached upon the questions discussed it will not be necessary to formally consider this point. Although it may be meritorious we have in effect overruled it by considering the appeal upon the merits.

For the reasons heretofore given the order is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

VICTORIA PARK CO. et al. v. CONTINENTAL INS. CO. OF NEW YORK.
(Civ. 2583.)

1. INSURANCE — 550—PROOF OF LOSS—EFFECT.

Under a clause in a fire policy that insurer "shall be deemed to have assented to the amount of the loss claimed by the insured in his preliminary proof of loss," unless it shall notify insured of its partial or total disagreement "with the amount of loss claimed," a letter to insured stating, "According to your documents we are criticizing section C," which contained a statement as to the amount of damages suffered, did not express any disagreement within the meaning of the policy.

2. CORPORATIONS — 432(1)—POWERS OF OFFICERS—INSURANCE—SETTLEMENT OF LOSS.

The selling agent and treasurer of a corporation are not presumed to possess authority to make any binding engagement with a fire insurance company as to the amount of a loss.

3. INSURANCE — 550—PROOF OF LOSS—EFFECT.

Under a clause in a fire policy, providing that insurer would be deemed to have assented to the amount of a loss by failing to notify the insured of a disagreement with the amount claimed in the preliminary proof of loss, insurer was required to announce a specific disagreement as to the amount claimed in a verified proof of loss, although it had in good faith previously entered into negotiations with officers of the insured, a corporation, looking to a settlement of the loss.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by the Victoria Park Company, a corporation, and Fannie Buttolph, against the Continental Insurance Company of New York, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bicksler & Smith, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiffs. The action was brought to recover on two policies of fire insurance. The policies were respectively in the amounts of $4,000 and $5,000, each covering the same building. The policies in form were as is prescribed by the statute of this state, and are designated "the California Standard Policy." The policies contained the stipulation that in case of loss the insured must give to the company written notice thereof and, within 10 days after the commencement of the fire render to the company verified preliminary proof of loss, setting forth certain prescribed things. This provision is also contained in the policies:

"If the company claims that the preliminary proof of loss is defective and within five days after the receipt thereof notifies in writing the insured, or the party making such proof of loss, of the alleged defects (specifically stating them) and requests that they be remedied by verified amendments the insured or such party within ten days after the receipt of such notification and request must comply therewith, or if unable so to do, present to the company an affidavit to that effect."

A further provision of the policies was as follows:

"This company shall be deemed to have assented to the amount of the loss claimed by the insured in his preliminary proof of loss, unless within twenty days after the receipt thereof, or if verified amendments have been requested, within twenty days after their receipt, or within twenty days after the receipt of an affidavit that the insured is unable to furnish such amendments, the company shall notify the insured in writing of its partial or total disagreement with the amount of loss claimed by him and shall also notify him in writing of the amount of loss, if any, the company admits on each of the different articles or properties set forth in the preliminary proof or amendments thereto."

Other provisions contained in the policies provided, in case of a dispute as to the amount of loss, for the arbitration of the same, and certain options were given to the insurer as to rebuilding or replacing the structure destroyed or damaged. In order to exercise any of such options a term of the policies required that the insurer company give notice to the insured within 20 days after receipt of the preliminary proof of loss. There was no issue in the case as to the fire having occurred as alleged by the plaintiffs. Defendant, however, set forth in its answer that the total loss occasioned by the fire was the sum of $6,148.78. In the preliminary proof of loss as furnished by the plaintiff Victoria Park Company (the interest of plaintiff Buttolph being that of mortgagee only), which was verified by the secretary of the corporation, the clause referring to the amount of loss was as follows:

"The cash value of the dwelling destroyed was about $17,500. The loss was total."

The proof of loss was not excepted to by the insurer, except that 10 days after its receipt a letter, signed by the agent of the insurer company, was written to the plaintiff company and contained the following statements:

"We beg to advise you that through Adjuster George L. McIntire and Agent Matt T. Mancha personal interviews have passed between your company and the two said parties. The adjustment was taken up and the damage to the property estimated, so that we now have our figures which we are prepared to adjust at your earliest convenience. According to your documents we are criticizing section C, and we are also criticizing the elimination of the date of the fire. Our contractor is a man of reputation and will file a bond to repair every damage caused by the fire, in full compliance with the terms of the policy."

[1-3] The section C of the proof of loss was that containing the statement as to the amount of damage suffered which we have quoted. No other written exception was taken to plaintiff's proof of loss, and upon that condition of facts the trial judge held, in effect, that under the terms of the policies the insurer should be "deemed to have assented to the amount of the loss claimed," for the reason that it did not notify the insured in writing of its partial or total disagreement with the amount stated. We are in entire agreement with the conclusion of the trial judge that the statement in the letter of the insurer dispatched after receipt of the preliminary proof of loss, to wit, "According to your documents we are criticizing section C and we are also criticizing the elimination of the date of the fire," does not express any disagreement with the amount stated by the plaintiff company, either as to the whole or any part of the loss. It will be remembered that the total amount of insurance covering expressed by the two policies was $9,000, while the loss suffered was stated as being about $17,500. The term of the policies which required the insurer to express its disagreement with the amount of loss claimed within the specified time, otherwise it should be deemed to have assented thereto, was a binding condition of the contract. It meant exactly what it expressed, or it meant nothing. It cannot be viewed in any sense as directory; that term is inapplicable to contract conditions entered into understandingly by the parties thereto, and which appear to be of material import as affecting the rights of the contractors. Defendant offered to prove that prior to the filing with it of the verified preliminary proof of loss it had had negotiations with one Barry and one Watson, respectively the selling agent and treasurer of plaintiff company, and that negotiations had been and were in progress looking to an adjustment of the amount of the loss, either by payment of money or rebuilding the structure destroyed. Appellant in making that tender did not offer to show that these persons with whom it was dealing had any authority to bind the insured, and from the character of the offices held by Barry and Watson there would be no presumption that they possessed authority to make any binding engagement in that behalf. We think the rulings of the trial judge in sustaining objections to the offers made were correct. If the insurer had assumed in good faith that Watson and Barry possessed authority to negotiate for a settlement of the claims, it was put upon notice later by the service of the verified proof of loss as to what the amount of damage, as asserted by plaintiff company, was. At that time it should have, in keeping with the requirements of the contract of insurance, specifically announced its disagreement with the amount of the claim, in whole or in part, and stated particularly what amount it did admit should be paid to the insured. We think that, as we have before stated, the letter which was written by the appellant to the plaintiff company upon receipt of the verified proof of loss, was not sufficient to relieve defendant from the effect of that term of the policies which stipulated to work an assent to the amount claimed. If we are correct in this conclusion, the case of appellant requires no further consideration.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 1027—RIGHT TO MAINTAIN ACTION—STATE AS PARTY.

Under Gen. Laws 1910, Act 2348, § 850, unchartered municipal corporation of sixth class had power to bring in its own name, instead of name of state, action to eject defendants from piece of land on ground it was part of public highway, and to recover damages for use and occupation.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION $\S$ 8(2)—ACQUISITION OF RIGHTS AGAINST PUBLIC—STREET.

3. DEDICATION $\S$ 19(5)—FILING OF MAP—ACCEPTANCE.

Where owner of land files map showing its division into streets, alleys, etc., and sells lots with reference to map, he irrevocably dedicates to public land represented as streets, and to complete dedication no formal acceptance by municipal authorities is necessary.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the City of Daly City, a municipal corporation, against J. M. Holbrook and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. H. Rixford and Halsey L. Rixford, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

George Appell and Frank E. Powers, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action to eject the defendants from a piece of land on the ground that the same is a part of a public highway, and to recover damages for use and occupation. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants present the case to this court on an appeal from the judgment with their bill of exceptions.

The facts of the case, from the standpoint of the defendants, are briefly as follows: The plaintiff is a municipal corporation, organized in 1911, as a city of the sixth class. The land in controversy lies within its boundaries. At all times mentioned in the case, prior to the organization of the plaintiff, the land was in unincorporated territory of the county of San Mateo. It was formerly a part of a larger tract which was fenced and used for a pasture and dairy. In the year 1900 Oscar Heyman sold a lot to one Charles Olson, and marked out a space in the pasture as the land sold, which was described as lot 28 in block P of the Mission Street tract, and was 25 feet fronting on San Jose avenue by a uniform depth of 100 feet. Olson, instead of building his house upon said lot, erected it upon land included in Prim street, the exact description of which appears in the complaint herein. Olson built a fence around the land he thus took possession of, and lived there for some time. Later he turned the house back to his grantor, who, in turn, sold it to a Mrs. Paillet, who lived in it for some time, and then sold it to the defendants herein. They have lived there ever since, and the possession of defendants and their predecessors has been continuous since 1900. The other side of the case is made up of the following facts: It appears that a map was filed in 1872 in the county recorder's office called "Map of the Mission Street Extension Homestead Association," with the tract mapped into lots, blocks, and streets, and the word "Prim" printed on a strip of land which includes the land where the house of defendants stands. It also appears that the Homestead Association divided its property into lots and conveyed these lots to its shareholders. It also appears that another map of the tract has been likewise filed, entitled "Map Showing Subdivision of the Property of the Mission Street Land Company," in 1895, with a different scheme of streets and smaller lots and other blocks, and that this company had made deeds of new lots to its stockholders in dividing up the land.

Plaintiff rested its case in the trial court upon the proposition that Prim street, the street in which defendants maintain their house, was and is a public street dedicated to the public use, and was such public street when defendants' predecessor built the house in said street. There is no controversy over the fact that, if Prim street is a public street, defendants' house is situated in Prim street. It is a fact admitted by the pleadings that no taxes were assessed on the land at any time during the possession of the defendants.

The defense of defendants is: First, that the street in question was never dedicated to the public use; and, second, that the only persons who had any rights in the strip of land in controversy were private persons or private corporations, the owners and their grantees, and the possession of defendants was adverse to them; that defendants' possession, as alleged, prevented any of the persons mentioned from using the strip as a street, and continued for years while the land in controversy was entirely privately owned, and ripened into a title in fee simple before the public generally, or the public authorities, took steps on which vested public rights could be predicated.

[1] The defendants contend first that the demurrer to the amended complaint should have been sustained because the plaintiff, being an unchartered municipal corporation of the sixth class, had no power to bring the action in its own name, and that the action should have been brought in the name of the people of the state of California. We think that respondent had the right to commence the action in its own name, under the provisions of section 850 of the General Laws of the State of California, being Act 2348. Referring to cities of the sixth class, there it is distinctly provided:

"Every municipal corporation of the sixth class may sue and be sued, in all courts and places, and in all proceedings whatever. * * *"

[2] The trial court made a finding that the territory known as Prim street was in 1872, and is now, a public street. This finding, if warranted by the evidence, would make it impossible for the defendants to have obtained title to any portion of said street by adverse possession. No rights can be acquired against the public by adverse possession. Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 631, 26 Pac. 1106; Nerio v. Maestretti, 154 Cal. 581, 98 Pac. 860; Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145.

[3] The appellants contend that the facts before the court were not sufficient upon which to predicate a dedication, and therefore the finding as to Prim street being a public street was unwarranted. The specific contention is that, while it is conceded that there was an offer of dedication of the land in controversy, yet that offer was never accepted by the public until after appellants had acquired title by adverse possession.

In the case of San Leandro v. Le Breton, 72 Cal. 170, 13 Pac. 405, it was held that, where an owner of land files a map thereof, showing it to be divided into streets, alleys, etc., and then sells lots with reference to such map, he thereby makes an irrevocable dedication of the space represented on the map as streets to the use of the public. In such a case, to make the dedication complete, no formal acceptance by the town authorities is necessary. Until such acceptance the owner of the land holds the title to the property dedicated in trust for the public. To the same effect are the cases of Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145, and Davidow v. Griswold, 23 Cal. App. 188, 137 Pac. 619.

The authorities on this subject are extensively reviewed in the case of Shearer v. City of Reno, 36 Nev. 443, 136 Pac. 706, in which case the court approved what was said in the case of Archer v. Salinas City, supra, and announced the law to be in accordance with the above statement in San Leandro v. Le Breton, supra.

In the face of these authorities, this court is compelled to conclude that the finding of the trial court that Prim street was and is a public street was warranted under the evidence. This conclusion also answers the objection of appellants that the amended complaint does not state a cause of action.

We think the other points made by appellants are without merit, and that the judgment should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

STOTTS v. MEESE et al. (Civ. 2605.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 514(2)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—REASSESSMENT.

Though Improvement Act does not expressly confer power to reassess, in case of an erroneous assessment, such power is implied in view of section 82, providing that irregularities not jurisdictional shall not avoid any assessment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by A. P. Stotts against Edwin Meese, as Treasurer, Charles D. Bates, and others. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants Bates, Borland, and Ayer appeal. Reversed.

Johnson & Shaw, of Oakland (R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Milton S. Hamilton, of San Francisco, for respondent Stotts.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff brought this action to obtain a decree that Bates, Borland, and Ayer did not hold a lien on the lands of the plaintiff by reason of certain proceedings had for the purpose of improving a street in Oakland. The authorities purported to proceed under the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730). Whether they did so proceed is the question involved in this case. The plaintiff had judgment in the trial court, and Bates, Borland, and Ayer, the contractors, have appealed.

No attack is made except in the assessment. The assessment proceedings show that on July 8, 1914, a clerk in the office of the superintendent of streets delivered into the hands of the superintendent a completed form of assessment, and, believing it to be in substance as he had directed it should be, the superintendent signed it. Later it transpired that said document contained a mistake. It included charges for crossings which were not legally chargeable to the plaintiff's property. The assessment was for $230, whereas it should have been for $60.91. When the superintendent of streets discovered his mistake one week later, July 15, 1914, he proceeded to correct the mistake by making a new assessment to conform to the true facts.

We concede at the outset that the Improvement Act of 1911 does not contain any clause expressly conferring power to reassess, but we think it contains provisions which clearly imply such power. The plaintiff contends that the assessment could have been corrected on appeal by the city council, and that it was the duty of the superintendent of streets to have taken such appeal. The statute does not contain a provision expressly imposing the duty of taking the appeal on the city authorities, nor does the statute provide that an appeal must be taken. But it will be conceded that on appeal the city council could have ordered the assessment to be corrected. Improvement Act 1911, §§ 21, 26. If, therefore, the plaintiff or the superintendent had appealed, the error could have been, and doubtless would have been, corrected. When such condition exists the error or irregularity is not fatal. Section 26, supra; Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 362, 80 Pac. 81. The exact method of correcting the first assessment is not limited by any provision of the Constitution, and therefore an irregularity in the method of correcting the assessment is not a violation of any fundamental right of the plaintiff. These propositions of law are deducible from Chase v. Trout, supra, in which case the court was considering the Vrooman Act. With that case before it the Legislature enacted the act of 1911. To reinforce the scope of section 26, supra, it added section 82. That section provides:

"This act shall be liberally construed to the end that its purposes may be effective. No error, irregularity, informality, and no neglect or omission of any officer of the city, in any procedure taken hereunder, which does not directly affect the jurisdiction of the city council to order the improvement, shall avoid or invalidate such proceeding or any assessment for the cost of work done thereunder. The exclusive remedy of any person affected or aggrieved thereby shall be by appeal to the city council as herein provided."

As we construe the act of 1911, we cannot say that the assessment was void. It was irregular, but the plaintiff was not entitled to have canceled an assessment that was merely irregular.

It follows that the judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Hadwen Swain against Kleiber & Co., Incorporated. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tum Suden & Tum Suden, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wright, Wright & Stetson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff, an automobile salesman, sued defendant, a manufacturer of auto trucks, for commissions claimed to be due him under his contract of employment with the defendant. The cause was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for part of the amount demanded. A motion for a new trial made by the defendant company being denied, it appeals from the judgment, and contends in support of its appeal that the evidence is wholly insufficient to justify the verdict, and that the court erred in several particulars in its instructions to the jury.

The contract of employment was oral, and the parties are not agreed as to its precise terms. According to the defendant the contract was the ordinary one between a salesman on commission and his employer, by which the salesman is entitled to commission only upon orders obtained by him. If the jury had accepted this version of the contract, its verdict would have been in favor of the defendant; and we must regard their verdict in plaintiff's favor as indicating that they accepted his version of the agreement, and held that the parties entered into a much more liberal arrangement than the one contended for by the defendant. The latter, we may say in passing, although disputing its liability to the plaintiff for the commissions sued for, appears by the record to have treated him with great liberality, and its present predicament appears to have arisen from entering into a somewhat unusual contract which, resting in parol, was susceptible of almost unconscious variation as to its terms.

The plaintiff testified to his negotiations and the arrangement entered into between himself and the defendant, through its president, Mr. Paul Kleiber, as follows:

"I told Mr. Kleiber that I did not care for a salary, * * * but that I did want the 5 per cent. commission that is usually paid for selling trucks, and I had had an experience in Los Angeles in which I had induced a man to mortgage his property to buy a truck, and the last minute the garage man takes hold of it and gets all of the commission, and that I would not enter their employment unless this point was made clear. * * * I told him I had been selling to the large companies down there [Los Angeles], including the oil companies and the lumber companies and other big companies—the gas companies. I knew the procedure of their methods of buying, which are very different from an ordinary corporation. These big companies have a board, some of them five to seven members, that had the handling of this purchasing business; * * * that it is a long siege to get these things through these officers; that I wanted to pay off the $4,500 mortgage that I had on my property; that I could not get it unless I played for a stake; and that the oil companies would take some time. His answer to me about that was, 'We are too small to deal with those big oil companies.' I said, 'I think I can work it up, because I know them personally, the people who have the placing of the order in these companies.' 'Well,' he said, 'all right; go ahead and follow it up.' And I said, 'When they send in an order, they very rarely hand that order to the salesman, the agent that goes in; but it comes in in various odd ways outside;' and I told him I would not follow it up unless I got my commission, no matter how it came in, or whether it came in later. Furthermore, it was useless to spend a year or two chasing these people, if I was not going to get the repeat orders, take all of that time. * * * He said that if I followed the business up that I should have that 5 per cent. commission, no matter how long it took before the order came in, or how it came in; that they were not able to get the business. * * * He told me that he would give me the repeat orders."

Working under his arrangement with the defendant, whatever it was, the plaintiff approached the Schell Oil Company through certain of its officers, and endeavored to interest that company in the product of the defendant. He called on the officers of the company many times, and induced one of them, Mr. Noble, the purchasing agent, to visit the factory of the defendant and witness the process of manufacture. Finally Mr. Noble informed plaintiff that his company was going to give an order for a Kleiber truck, and the plaintiff conveyed this information to Mr. Kleiber. Shortly thereafter the Schell Company ordered two Kleiber trucks, but did not send the order directly to the defendant company, whose factory and place of business was in San Francisco, but handed it to a concern by name Osen & Hunter, dealers in automobiles and trucks in Oakland, who had a contract with the defendant by which they were granted exclusive selling rights to the defendant's product in the county of Alameda. Mr. Noble testified that the plaintiff was the first person who called his attention to the Kleiber truck, and that he had recommended its purchase to the higher officers of the company. As to the reason for placing the order with Osen & Hunter, he testified that the policy of his company was always to place such an order where the truck was to be used; that in this case they were to be used in Oakland; and, further, that Osen & Hunter were large customers of the company, under all of which circumstances it was out of the question to give the order to the plaintiff.

The contract between the defendant and Osen & Hunter was not one which constituted them agents in a legal sense. They were independent dealers, and in consideration of certain advantages conferred upon the defendant, and an agreement to purchase at least 15 trucks per annum from the defendant, they were granted the exclusive right of selling the defendant's products in certain territory, including Oakland. It was not the practice of this concern, nor were they required to do so in their contract with the defendant, to have in stock any Kleiber trucks beyond what is known in the trade as a demonstrator, but on receiving an order for one they would send an order for it to the defendant. This they did in the present case; and the defendant, after the receipt of the first order, assembled the truck and delivered it directly to the Schell Oil Company. During the course of its completion some correspondence passed between the defendant and the Schell Company relative to certain details to be incorporated into the truck, and, as far as they knew, Osen & Hunter were simply agents of the defendant.

[1] Under these circumstances the question that arises (and it is practically the sole question involved in the case) is: Is an order received by the defendant in the way and under the circumstances described one coming within the terms of the defendant's contract with the plaintiff as testified to by him? We are of the opinion that the terms of the contract are so broad and elastic that this question must be answered in the affirmative, and that although as a matter of law the order received by the defendant was an order from Osen & Hunter, and not from the Schell Oil Company, yet it was, under the evidence accepted by the jury, given to the defendant as the result of the plaintiff's efforts.

This construction is reinforced to some extent by what we may regard as the practical construction by the defendant itself of the contract; for, although refusing to pay the specific commission demanded by plaintiff upon the sale of the trucks to the Schell Oil Company, it placed that refusal upon the ground that it could not pay two commissions upon the same sale, and promised to make the amount good to the plaintiff in some other way. The amount awarded by the jury to the plaintiff represented commissions on six automobile trucks—four sold to the Schell Oil Company in the manner above described, and two to the Western Meat Company. If we are correct in our conclusion as to the validity of the plaintiff's claim as to the order for this first Schell truck, then the award of the jury must stand as to the remaining five, for the evidence shows them to be sales made by the defendant within the provisions of the contract as thus construed.

[2] Appellant assigns as error certain modifications made by the trial court to instructions which appellant desired to have presented to the jury. The court instructed the jury in general terms as to the defendant's rights under the theory of the case pursued by it in the presentation of its defense, but refused to go further by concretely applying the principles enunciated to particular phases of the case. While the instructions as offered might well have been given, yet the law applicable to the facts as contended for by the defendant was, we think, sufficiently stated to the jury, although in general terms; at least we hardly think error can be predicated upon the refusal of the court to amplify the instructions.

[3] One instruction, also criticized by the defendant, told the jury in effect that the plaintiff could recover if the order from the Schell Company to Osen & Hunter was brought about by the plaintiff. This instruction could not be defended if the only evidence of the contract between plaintiff and defendant were that offered by the defendant; but, as we have seen, the plaintiff testified to a widely different state of facts, which the jury had the right to accept as true. As applied to that phase of the evidence we see nothing incorrect in this instruction.

For the reasons hereinbefore given, the judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR FRESNO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2638.)

1. RAPE $\Leftrightarrow$ 33—ATTEMPT—INDICTMENT.

An indictment, charging that defendant on a fixed day did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously and with force and violence attempt to have sexual intercourse, etc., held to charge a public offense.

2. MANDAMUS $\Leftrightarrow$ 61 — COURTS — CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Where the trial court erroneously sustained an objection to testimony on the ground that the indictment did not state a public offense and discharged the jury, writ of mandate, commanding the trial court to vacate the order discharging the jury and proceed with the trial, should be issued, the writ of mandamus being applicable in all cases where the law has established no specific remedy, and in justice and good conscience there should be one.

Application by the People of the State of California for a writ of mandate against the Superior Court in and for Fresno County and George E. Church, Judge thereof. Writ issued.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

Brickley & Edwards, of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of mandate. The application arises by reason of certain proceedings had in the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Fresno during the trial of a criminal case, entitled the "People of the State of California v. Julian Depavo." During the trial of the case the jury was duly impaneled, and the prosecuting witness was called to the stand by the prosecution, and was by the prosecution examined and was by the defendant cross-examined, and later another witness was called to the stand, and thereupon counsel for the defendant Depavo objected to the introduction of any testimony relating to the admissions of said defendant on the ground that said information did not state a public offense, and on the further ground that the corpus delicti had not been proven. Said objection was argued by respective counsel, whereupon, at the conclusion of said argument, respondent George E. Church, judge of the superior court, Fresno county, made an order that said objection be sustained and the jury be discharged from further consideration of said cause. Later the jury was so discharged and the people of the state of California, by U. S. Webb, as Attorney General of the state of California, and J. H. Riordan, his deputy, have commenced this proceeding to obtain a writ of mandate, directed to the respondent, commanding the respondent to vacate said order discharging the jury, and to resume and proceed with the trial of said cause to verdict and judgment as in the manner prescribed by law of this state, and to do all things necessary in the premises.

[1] The charging part of the information is as follows:

"The said Julian Depavo on or about the 13th day of February, 1918, at and in the said county of Fresno and state of California, and prior to the filing of this information, did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously and with force and violence attempt to have and accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with and upon the person of Delora McGovern, a female who was not then and there the wife of the defendant, without the consent and against the will of said Delora McGovern, and she, the said Delora McGovern, then and there resisted the attempt of said defendant to accomplish the said act of sexual intercourse."

[2] The information stated a public offense. People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 127, 32 Pac. 880; People v. Akens, 25 Cal. App. 373, 143 Pac. 795. Therefore the trial court erred in ruling that the information did not state a public offense. The question then arises: Can the actions of the trial court be controlled in this proceeding? In Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 Pac. 766, 9 Am. St. Rep. 249, Mr. Commissioner Hayne examined with a very great deal of industry into the proper scope of the use of the writ of mandate, and, in closing, he quotes Lord Mansfield as follows:

"It [the writ] was introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice and defect of police. Therefore it ought to be used on all occasions where the law has established no specific remedy, and where, in justice and good government, there ought to be one."

And Mr. Commissioner Hayne reaches the conclusion that the quotation exactly and properly states the rule. For the reasons stated the writ will be issued to control and compel action by a court, and even though the court is exercising jurisdiction in a criminal case. Matter of Ford, 160 Cal. 334, 116 Pac. 757, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 882, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1267; Ford v. Court, 17 Cal. App. 1, 118 Pac. 96.

It follows that the writ should issue in this case; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. DEPAVO. (Cr. 799.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW — 1023(4) — APPEAL — APPEALABLE ORDERS.

An order of the trial court, discharging a jury when refusing to proceed further with the criminal prosecution, is not an appealable order within the provisions of Pen. Code, § 1238.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Julian Depavo was indicted for felony, and from an order of the trial court discharging the jury before it brought in a verdict, and while the case was yet on trial and the People were attempting to introduce their evidence, the People of the State of California appeal. On motion to dismiss. Dismissed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

Henry Buckley and J. O. Traber, both of Fresno, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by the people of the state of California from an order of the trial court discharging a jury before it had brought in a verdict and while the case was as yet on trial and the people were attempting to introduce their evidence. The facts are more fully set forth in The People, etc., v. Superior Court, 178 Pac. 730, filed this date. The plaintiff and appellant have brought up the record in a bill of exceptions and the defendant has appeared and moved to dismiss the appeal. One of the grounds of the motion to dismiss is that the order of a trial court dismissing a jury when refusing to proceed further is not an appealable order under the provisions of section 1238 of the Penal Code of the State of California. We think that the motion is well founded. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

RANSOME-CRUMMEY CO. v. CORNELIUS. (Civ. 2593.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 10, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 303(1) — IMPROVEMENTS—RESOLUTION.

Under Oakland City Charter, § 51, authorizing the council to proceed under the "general laws of the state in force at the time of the improvement," where the council proceeded under St. 1911, p. 730, in making an improvement, a resolution declaring the statute under which it was acting was not necessary.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 445—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENTS — CONTRACT.

A special assessment, imposed by the city council in the exercise of its independent action and judgment, was valid, irrespective of an oral agreement between the contractor and the superintendent of streets, to which the council was not a party.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by Ransome-Crummey Company, a corporation, against A. W. Cornelius, as executor, etc., to foreclose a street assessment lien. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Louis Gonsalves, of Oakland, for appellant.

Snook & Church, of Oakland, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff brought this action to foreclose a street assessment lien. It had judgment as prayed in the trial court, and the defendant appealed, bringing up the evidence in a bill of exceptions, which is certified as being "full, complete and correct."

The appellant makes two attacks: (1) That it appears nowhere in the record of the city council that the council determined or expressed its judgment that the costs and expenses of the improvements set out in the resolution of intention should be paid by special assessments on private property; (2) that the improvements were not made as purported under chapter 397 of the Statutes of 1911, but were made pursuant to an oral agreement between the plaintiff and the superintendent of streets and the commissioner of streets.

[1] The first point assumes that the law required that the city council should pass a resolution expressly providing that the council was proceeding under any certain statute; but our attention has not been called to any statute to that effect. Section 51 of the charter of Oakland authorized the council to proceed under the provisions of "the general laws of the state of California in force at the time of the improvement." It proceeded in 1915 to act under chapter 397 of the Statutes of 1911. It omitted nothing the law required it to do in this behalf.

[2] The second point is not well founded. It appears from the record that one of the officers of the Ransome-Crummey Company did have a certain oral understanding with the superintendent of streets. It does not appear, however, that the city council was a party to the oral agreement. If the city council did make the oral agreement with the plaintiff, then the defendant's contention might have been sustained. Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 244, 38 Pac. 881, 45 Am. St. Rep. 33; Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 362, 80 Pac. 81. But the defendant did not show that the city council knew of the oral agreement, or acted on it, or authorized it. However, the taxing power rested in the council and not in the superintendent of streets, nor in the commissioner of streets. No fraud was imposed on the council, and no fraud was either pleaded or proved.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

CUSHING v. MACAULAY et al. (Civ. 2582.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 26, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1010(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Judgment will not be disturbed on appeal, where findings on which it is based are supported by the evidence, though evidence would have warranted and supported findings in favor of appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Henry D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by J. G. Cushing against H. C. Macaulay and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

G. C. De Garmo, of Los Angeles, and Franklin P. Nutting, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. N. Young, of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The complaint sets out a contract between two corporations, one named Pacific Wall Bed Company of Los Angeles and the other named Pacific Wall Bed Manufacturing Company (hereinafter referred to as the manufacturing company), under which on March 18, 1915, a certain indebtedness existed from the latter to the former and which was assigned to the plaintiff. Said indebtedness was made up in part of a bonus upon the sale of beds at the rate of $5 per bed sold by the manufacturing company, and on said last-mentioned date the plaintiff commenced an action against said company in the superior court of Los Angeles county for the sum of $1,500, alleged to be the balance due upon said bonus account, and levied an attachment upon certain accounts due to the said corporation. The complaint then charges that thereupon the plaintiff and defendant in said action, through their respective attorneys, entered into a written stipulation, by which the plaintiff agreed to release the attachment, and that the amount due to plaintiff upon said bonus account should be arbitrated, and when determined, should be paid by H. C. Macaulay and C. M. Henderson, the defendants in the present suit, and who were officers and stockholders of said manufacturing company. It is also alleged that as a part of said stipulation and agreement these defendants agreed to execute and deliver to plaintiff their promissory note in the sum of $3,735.35, in replacement of a note of similar amount which the manufacturing company had agreed to pay under the contract first mentioned, the right to receive which had also been assigned to the plaintiff. The complaint then proceeds to charge that subsequently and on May 25, 1915, the plaintiff and defendants herein entered into a supplemental agreement by which the appointment of the arbitrator hereinbefore mentioned was waived, and defendants agreed to execute and deliver to plaintiff their promissory note in the sum of $3,959.47, which sum represented the note previously mentioned of $3,735.35 and interest thereon. Finally it is charged that the defendants refused to execute or deliver said notes as provided in said last-mentioned agreement, to the plaintiff's damage in the sum of $3,478.22, for which amount he prays judgment.

The court found (finding III) that only 87 beds were sold, upon which the plaintiff was entitled to receive the bonus of $5 per bed, and (finding VIII) that said amount had been paid; that as to the written stipulation and agreement to arbitrate the dispute between the plaintiff and the manufacturing company the same had been entered into by one R. L. Dailey without authority from the manufacturing company so to do (finding VI); that as to the supplemental agreement alleged to have been entered into between the plaintiff and defendants, by which the latter agreed to execute certain promissory notes in favor of the plaintiff, it was never consummated nor entered into by the defendants (finding VII); and, finally, that the plaintiff has not been damaged by anything contained in said complaint.

Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the defendants, from which the plaintiff appeals, basing his appeal upon the contention that findings III, VII, and VIII, the substance of which is given above, are not supported by the evidence.

In support of this contention counsel for the plaintiff quote copiously from the evidence adduced upon the whole case, and draw therefrom deductions which he claims could and should have been made in his favor by the trial court. On the other hand, counsel for the respondents deduces from the same and other evidence, which he quotes, clearly contrary conclusions, which he, in effect, claims could be and were in fact drawn by the trial court in support of the findings assailed. It will thus be seen that the argument pro and con is but a discussion of the weight of the evidence, which, of course, avails nothing upon appeal.

If it be conceded that the evidence upon the whole case would have warranted and supported findings in favor of the plaintiff, still the fact remains that a review of the record shows that the evidence, as a whole, is also susceptible of the construction placed upon it by the trial court as implied from the findings made, and, consequently, it must be held that the evidence supports the findings, which, in turn, support the judgment.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

KAHN v. REVETT. (Civ. 2585.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 28, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS — 117—SALES OF CORPORATE STOCK—FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.

False statements of sellers of stock that the corporation owned a patented device, that they had investigated the patent, and that it had been established in an infringement suit, are affirmations of fact, relative to furnishing basis for rescission of contract.

2. CORPORATIONS — 116—SALES OF STOCK—LACK OF CONSIDERATION.

Finding, in an action for price of stock sold, that the sole consideration for the contract was ownership by the corporation of a patent, falsely asserted by the sellers, sustains the defense of want of consideration.

3. TRIAL — 62(2)—EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL.

The court held justified in refusing to hear further evidence on the subject; plaintiff's testimony, offered in rebuttal, being merely contradictory of testimony for defendant.

4. EVIDENCE — 241(1) — STATEMENTS OF AGENTS.

Statements testified to by defendant, having been made by agents of plaintiffs in conversation with him, are not objectionable as hearsay.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by Felix Kahn against Ben S. Revett. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wise & O'Connor and Richard S. Goldman, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. M. Sims and Franklin A. Plank, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover the purchase price of certain stock in a corporation. The company was engaged in the manufacture of a combination vibrator and vacuum apparatus. The defendant was interested in and desirous of obtaining control of the vibrator portion thereof, upon which he was assured the company owned a patent. With this end in view he negotiated for the purchase of the patent rights, but subsequently changed his plans and sought to purchase all of the stock of the corporation which owned the patent. Accordingly the parties entered into a written agreement in May, 1915, by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant agreed to buy certain shares of the company. The corporation was known as the Vital Force Vibrator Company. The names of the holders of the stock and the number of shares owned by each of them are set forth in the agreement, the total number being 2,152 shares. The stock was placed in escrow, to be delivered to the defendant upon payment of the purchase price of $6,332.17. Defendant failed to pay, and this action was brought to recover the agreed amount.

The case was tried below upon issues raised by plaintiff's complaint and defendant's second amended answer and his counterclaim thereto, and by defendant's cross-complaint against plaintiff and the other stockholders of the company and the joint answer thereto of plaintiff and his cross-defendants. The answer set up the following defenses: (1) that the defendant was induced to enter into the agreement sued upon solely by reason of the false and fraudulent representations of the plaintiff and his associates; (2) that the defendant entered into the contract solely by reason of his mistake as to a material fact induced by the misrepresentations of plaintiff and his associates; and (3) want of consideration. Practically the same allegations appear in the counterclaim and the cross-complaint by which the defendant sought to have the contract sued upon rescinded and to recover damages for the money expended by him in reliance upon the representations of plaintiff. No relief was granted defendant, however, under these subsequent pleadings.

The false representations alleged to have been the inducement of the contract are, first, that the Vital Force Vibrator Company was the owner of letters patent issued by the United States Patent Office, numbered 1,025,504, and that said letters patent were basic, unassailable, and absolutely free from infringement, having been upheld and sustained in an infringement suit against the manufacturers of a similar device. It is also claimed that plaintiff represented that the principal and essential feature of the vibrator was an unbalanced arm or hammer, and that the same was covered by the patent, and, further, that the corporation and the officers and directors thereof had caused the letters patent to be examined, and that they covered the vibrator device.

The trial court found that such representations were untrue, and that defendant, relying upon the truth of the representations of plaintiff and his associates in respect thereto, was induced solely thereby and for no other consideration whatsoever to enter into the agreement sued upon, and that the only consideration for said contract was the pretended ownership by the corporation of letters patent upon the vibrator apparatus which the corporation did not own. The court further found that the shares of stock were valueless, and judgment went for defendant.

Plaintiff seeks a reversal of the judgment upon the ground that the representations, which the trial court found were made by plaintiff to defendant, were merely matters of opinion, and did not furnish the basis for the rescission of the contract made between the parties. It is also claimed that the evidence shows that the company did have letters patent in the vibrator. In addition thereto defendant is charged with laches in pursuing his remedy. Certain rulings of the court with reference to the admission and rejection of evidence are further relied upon for a reversal.

[1] That mere expressions of opinion do not constitute sufficient grounds of rescission of a contract there can be no doubt. The question as to whether or not the statements here made, that the patent involved was basic, unassailable and not subject to infringement, come within that rule presents a question that we do not deem necessary to discuss. The evidence shows, and the court found, that plaintiff made the further representations that he and his associates owned the device exhibited to the defendant, and that they had investigated the patent, and that it had already been established in an infringement suit. These statements beyond question were affirmations of fact, and they were found by the trial court to be untrue. These findings are therefore sufficient to support the judgment, and it must stand affirmed, in the absence of merit in the further grounds relied upon for a reversal.

[2] Plaintiff contends that independent of all other considerations the judgment should be reversed because of the laches of defendant in asserting his right to rescind. Rescission, however, was not the exclusive remedy relied upon by defendant; his main defense being lack of consideration. The trial court having found that the sole consideration of the contract was the pretended ownership of a patent which the corporation did not own, that finding in itself is sufficient to support the judgment.

[3] Nor do we think that there is any force in the objection to the action of the trial court in refusing to permit plaintiff to testify in rebuttal. The offered testimony was merely contradictory of evidence of the defendant and his witnesses, and the court was justified in refusing to hear further evidence upon the subject.

[4] The same may be said of the objection to the admission of certain hearsay evidence claimed to have been prejudicial to plaintiff. This evidence related to conversations between certain persons and defendant relative to the misrepresentations of plaintiff. The record shows that the persons making the statements were agents of the plaintiff.

We are therefore of the opinion that there is no error in the record entitling the plaintiff to reversal. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to pass upon the question raised by respondent that the notice of appeal is limited solely to the consideration of the judgment for costs in favor of defendant and against plaintiff.

From what we have said it follows that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

GOPCEVIC v. GOPCEVIC. (Civ. 2551.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1919.)

1. WORK AND LABOR ⇨7(1)—RELATION OF PARTIES—INFERENCES.

Where there is a blood relationship between the parties, it may well be inferred, in the absence of direct understanding to the contrary, that pecuniary compensation was not expected by the one performing the services.

2. CONTRACTS ⇨28(3) — CONTRACT TO SUPPORT—EVIDENCE.

In action for breach of contract to support plaintiff for life, which plaintiff claimed was made verbally with him by defendant, his brother, held there was not sufficient evidence of such a direct understanding as to the performance of services and compensation therefor as conclusively showed a contract between them.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—FINDING BASED ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where there was a substantial conflict in the evidence on question of making of contract, court's finding of no contract would be sustained on appeal.

4. TRIAL ⇨377(2)—REOPENING CASE—DELAY.

Motion to reopen case and submit further testimony held properly denied, where made six months after the case had been argued and submitted.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1047(5)—FAILURE TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE — HARMLESS ERROR.

Refusal to deliver to plaintiff a certain letter to be introduced in evidence, if error, was cured by subsequent introduction in evidence by defendant.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1041(4)—PERMISSION TO AMEND—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where plaintiff counted upon an express contract, he was not, technically speaking, entitled to testify as to reasonable value of services; and, where it appeared that he had no contract, refusal to grant his request to amend by adding a cause of action for reasonable services would not prejudice his case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by Bozo M. Gopcevic against Milos M. Gopcevic. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Walter M. Willett and R. H. Countryman, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles S. Wheeler, of San Francisco (John F. Bowie and Nathan M. Moran, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an action for damages for breach of an alleged contract to support plaintiff for life, which plaintiff claims was made verbally with him by the defendant, his brother. The court found that no contract existed, and gave judgment for the defendant, from which he appeals. This exceedingly voluminous record, consisting of over 5,000 folios of closely printed transcript, seems to us to present but a single vital question, namely, whether or not there was a conflict of evidence upon the question of the making of this contract.

The evidence of the alleged contract consisted of two conversations between plaintiff and defendant, one had in the year 1904 and the other in the year 1911. The plaintiff's testimony as to the first of these conversations is as follows:

"Q. Now, then, did you go then to Europe at the request of Judge Davis and your brother Petar? A. I did. Before I went to Europe Milos came right after them in the same place, in the dining room. I was living there. He said, 'You go and try to do what you can; you don't need to work or anything else any more; you will be provided for all right. You will live with me as long as you live; everything what is mine is yours.'"

In a second version of this conversation, the plaintiff testified as follows:

"* * * They come before I went to Europe, and he told me that, 'Now,' he said, 'You go to Europe and do what I ask from you.' And Pete and Judge Davis was there before. After that he said, 'After everything will be settled and you will live here and you will be provided for and every one of the family.' That was the conversation with me before I left for Europe the second time."

Plaintiff's counsel in their brief assert that "the defendant did not deny that this conversation took place," but the defendant testified as follows:

"Q. You heard the testimony, did you, given by the plaintiff, when he testified that you came to him in the house on Sacramento street and you said, 'Go and do what you can; you don't have to work; everything that is mine is yours;' you heard that testimony did you? A. Yes.

"Q. Will you state whether or not you ever had such a conversation with the plaintiff? A. Never.

"Q. Did you ever have any conversation with him about him getting any information about the family in Europe? A. No never."

John F. Davis, mentioned by plaintiff in his first version of this conversation, testified:

"I never had any interview with plaintiff in which I asked him to get testimony or evidence at any time."

The following facts will shed light upon the breadth of meaning of this denial of Mr. Davis: It seems that the defendant was engaged at the time of the conversation in 1904, above quoted, in a legal controversy of a somewhat sensational character over the estate of his deceased wife, and that Judge Davis was his attorney. The plaintiff claimed that a part, at least, of the services which he was to perform, in return for his support for the remainder of his life, was to proceed to Dalmatia, of which country the brothers were natives—and there procure evidence as to the lineage of his family for use in controverting certain allegations as to misrepresentations which the opponents of the defendant in the litigation above named asserted the defendant had made to his wife. The defendant did proceed to Europe at that time, and did attempt, at least, to procure this testimony. The denial by Judge Davis that he asked the plaintiff to get such testimony, or that he had any interview with him on this subject, was practically a complete denial of the conversation so far as it referred to him. Further, Judge Davis testified that the best of his recollection was that he had not met plaintiff until a later date. It will thus be seen that the defendant positively denied the conversation and the agreement as testified to by the plaintiff, and that he was corroborated in this assertion in an important particular by Judge Davis.

Petar Gopcevic, mentioned in the testimony of plaintiff, died before this action was tried.

The evidence of the second alleged contract is the conversation which plaintiff testified took place in San Francisco in May, 1911. It is as follows:

"A. Milos see me and tried to run across the street. I met him, and I said, 'Why you want to run away?' He said, 'No.' I said, 'What you mean, what you promised to me?' 'Oh,' he said, 'I never did,' I said, 'You discharged me,' and he said he didn't, and I said, 'You did,' and I said, 'What you order Mathews to do that?' 'Well,' he said, 'I will give you $100.' I say, 'No; I want you to settle down with me right now.' 'Well,' he said, 'I will see.' I said '$100 is not enough for me.'"

The defendant contradicted this evidence in the following language:

"* * * We met there. Bozo comes up. We stepped in front of the saloon. 'Well,' he said, 'I am without money, and ain't got nothing to do.' I say, 'Well, that ain't my fault.' He said, 'I haven't got anything.' I walked in the saloon. I said, 'Who told you to go out of the house.' We went in the saloon; we three went in the saloon and had some talk that don't concern anybody but me Millan, and we took three drinks, and he wanted to talk more to me, and I went away."

This latter conversation of 1911 may be disposed of briefly by the statement that, even taking the plaintiff's own testimony at its full value, it constitutes no contract between the parties. For it will be evident, from reading it, that if the offer was made by the defendant at all, it was an offer to give the plaintiff $100, and that plaintiff refused to accept this offer. But defendant's reply to this testimony certainly raises a conflict as to whether this conversation was correctly stated by the plaintiff.

Perhaps this matter will be made a little more clear by a brief history of the relations of the parties. The brothers, Milos and Bozo, were working as gripmen on the San Francisco cable cars in 1903. The defendant in that year met and married an American girl who possessed considerable property. From the time of this marriage, the wife seems to have been very generous with her husband, and the husband seems to have been equally generous with the plaintiff, his older brother. For instance, Milos' wife gave him $1,000 as a Christmas present. He promptly handed this entire $1,000 over to Bozo, so that the latter might take a trip to Europe. From that time until some time after the death of Milos' wife, the defendant seems to have been generous on all occasions with his brother, who, so far as this evidence is concerned, did nothing in return therefor, except to engage in various errands and small oversights of business, which services might very well have been performed gratuitously by one brother for another in any family, and especially in a family bound together by as close ties as those which unite ordinary South-European relatives.

[1] There was in the case certain circumstantial evidence and certain evidence of various third parties—relatives and those not related to the parties—which the plaintiff claims corroborated his assertions as to the contract upon which he sues; but, taken all together, this testimony does no more than raise a conflict when read in relation to the evidence of the defendant and of Judge Davis. Indeed, it may well be doubted whether the plaintiff's evidence, if uncontradicted, would have constituted a contract between these parties, for where there is a blood relationship between the parties, it may well be inferred, in the absence of a direct understanding to the contrary, that pecuniary compensation was not expected by the one performing the services. Gjurich v. Fieg, 164 Cal. 432, 129 Pac. 464, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 111.

[2] And certainly here there was not, without other circumstances and other evidence, such a direct understanding between the parties as to the performance of services and compensation therefor as conclusively shows any contract between them. Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 511; Crane v. Derrick, 157 Cal. 667, 672, 109 Pac. 31.

[3] But, however that may be, it must be held here that there is a substantial conflict in the evidence of the parties, and that, therefore, the trial court's finding on the subject of the existence of this contract must be sustained. This issue, being the vital issue in the case, the remaining points argued by appellant, become immaterial, unless errors of law in the exclusion of other evidence which would have established the contract are disclosed by the record. There are no such errors, for the offered evidence, if admitted, would not have made possible any different finding.

Appellant argues that the case should be reversed because of the refusal of the court to find upon an allegation of the complaint as to an alleged Dalmatian custom, which, he claims, was a material issue in the case. The allegation of the complaint, stripped of immaterial matter, is that the oldest male member is regarded as the head of the family in Dalmatia. We really cannot see how this fact could have affected the issues in this case, even if it were true.

[4] Plaintiff also complains that the court improperly denied his motion to reopen the case. The trial was commenced on February 8, 1915, and after several days' hearing was adjourned and resumed on April 26, 1915. The case was argued and submitted on the 28th day of April, 1915, and not until six months later, namely, on October 27, 1915 (during which time the court seems to have been waiting for the filing of briefs by the respective parties), did plaintiff give notice of the motion to reopen the case and submit further testimony. This motion was based upon an affidavit of plaintiff, and the further testimony which he desired to offer consisted of testimony taken from the depositions in the litigation over the defendant's wife's estate, and certain evidence found in records of that estate and the testimony of one Bullut, which, it is claimed, would have established the date upon which the plaintiff left for Europe, as he claims, for the purpose of procuring testimony for use in the trial of that case. It is not possible that six months could have been necessary to ascertain these facts. Due diligence, had it been exercised, undoubtedly would have disclosed this testimony. The plaintiff claims that these matters were called to his attention a short time before the filing of his affidavit and the noticing of his motion by a newspaper clipping apparently contemporaneous with the contest over the wife's property, and which he says he did not previously know of. But if he had searched the records in Lake county in the court in which this case was tried he could not have failed to ascertain all that these records would have disclosed, and the testimony which he claims defendant gave in the deposition referred to would not in any way have strengthened his case, for it referred to nothing except the ancestors of the Gopcevic family.

But reopening of a case is usually a matter of discretion with the trial court, and in this case it can hardly be doubted that had the trial court reopened the case, it would have abused that discretion.

[5] Appellant complains that a certain letter which he demanded from counsel for the plaintiff was not delivered to him to be introduced in evidence in his case. This letter was produced and was left in the hands of the court or clerk. It was subsequently introduced in evidence by the defendant. It is not necessary under these circumstances to determine whether or not it should have been delivered to the plaintiff so that he might use it in support of his motion because of its subsequent production in evidence, which cured any error, if error there was, in refusing to permit its use by the plaintiff.

[6] The plaintiff complains that he was not permitted to testify as to the reasonable value of his services. He counted upon an express contract, and, speaking technically, the objection was properly sustained. He asked permission to amend his complaint by adding a cause of action for the reasonable value of these services. It appearing that he had no contract, the refusal of the court to grant the request did not prejudice his case.

The judgment is affirmed.

EDELLEN v. OAKLAND BANK OF SAVINGS. (Civ. 2359.)

BANKS AND BANKING  148(3) — DEPOSITORS—WRONGFUL PAYMENT OF CHECKS.

Where a depositor, who had a commercial account, signed checks in blank and delivered them to his bookkeeper to be filled out, and the bookkeeper, on leaving his employ, retained one check, filling in a fictitious name, and the check was indorsed and cashed by her son, held, that the bank was not liable on the theory that it should have discovered that fact; the depositor's own negligence being the cause of the loss.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Jas. H. Edelen against the Oakland Bank of Savings. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for appellant.

McKee & Tasheira, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Edelen, the plaintiff, had a commercial account with the defendant, the Oakland Bank of Savings. He also had in his employ a trusted bookkeeper, by name Mrs. L. B. Simpson. He signed a number of checks "in blank," drawn upon the defendant bank, and delivered them to Mrs. Simpson for use in the conduct of his business. Without his knowledge, Mrs. Simpson retained one of these blanks checks after quitting the employment of Edelen, and, after filling in the blanks by writing in the date, July 1, 1916, the amount, $600, and the name, Arthur H. Shaw, as payee, sent her son to the Central Bank of Oakland, where, after indorsing the name of Shaw and writing his own name also upon the back of the check, he negotiated it to the Central Bank, which paid him the amount thereof. The Central Bank presented the check to the Oakland Bank of Savings through the clearing house, and the Oakland Bank of Savings paid it and charged the amount thereof to the account of Edelen. Upon learning of this Edelen brought action against the Oakland Bank of Savings for the amount of the check, and the trial court gave judgment for the defendant for its costs, whereupon Edelen appeals, and endeavors to escape liability for his negligence in leaving the blank check in the possession of Mrs. Simpson by contending that, Shaw's name, being fictitious (which it was), it was the duty of the Central Bank of Oakland to discover this fact, and that, not having done so, the bank is chargeable with negligence, and is liable to the defendant Oakland Bank of Savings for the $600, and that therefore the plaintiff is entitled to receive back his money from the last-named bank.

There is nothing in this point. The plaintiff's own negligence was the proximate cause of his loss. The Oakland Bank of Savings paid the check on the faith of the signature of Edelen, which, because he was its depositor, it was bound to know and to honor at its peril; and it would be unjust to force it to repay the $600 to Edelen and resort for reimbursement to a probable lawsuit against the Central Bank. We are cited to no authority compelling us to so hold.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHINO LAND & WATER CO. v. HAMAKER et al. (two cases). SAME v. MOSS et al. SAME v. CHALMERS et al. (Civ. 2608.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 26, 1918.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS 78—RAILROAD LAND GRANTS—"MINERAL" LANDS.

Petroleum or mineral oil is within the meaning of the term "mineral" as used in Act Cong. March 3, 1871, § 23, reserving mineral lands from railroad land grants.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Mineral.]

2. PUBLIC LANDS 117—PATENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Patent, though irregular in that the lands in question were mineral, passed title subject to the right of the government to attack it by direct suit for annulment, and defendant not in privity with the government could not successfully attack the patent.

3. PUBLIC LANDS 78—RESERVATION OF MINERALS.

The reservation "mineral land excepted" in grant in patent to railroad company based upon proceedings had under certain land grant legislation, referring to Act Cong. July 27, 1866, Joint Resolution June 28, 1870, and Act March 3, 1871, § 23, is a void exception.

4. PUBLIC LANDS 117—PATENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Patent to railroad company based upon proceedings had under certain land grant legislation referring to Act Cong. July 27, 1866, Joint Resolution June 28, 1870, and Act March 3, 1871, § 23, is upon collateral attack a conclusive official declaration that land in question is agricultural, and that all requirements preliminary to issuance of patent have been complied with.

Appeals from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Four actions by the Chino Land & Water Company, two against C. R. Hamaker and others, one against H. L. Moss and others, and one against John K. Chalmers and others. In each case defendants appealed from judgment and order denying motion for new trial. It was stipulated that the actions be consolidated and presented upon a single transcript. The several judgments appealed from affirmed, and in each case the order denying motion for new trial also affirmed.

See, also, 171 Cal. 689, 154 Pac. 850.

Kimball Fletcher and Wm. A. Gaines, both of Los Angeles, and D. J. Hinkley, for appellants.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin and Walter K. Tuller, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. It has been stipulated between respondent and appellants, through their respective counsel, that, whereas the records in the above-entitled cases are absolutely identical, except as to description of the property, the several appeals in said actions shall be consolidated and presented upon a single transcript. In each case the defendants have appealed from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

In view of the stipulation, we shall refer to the facts hereafter as if there were only one case. This is an action wherein the plaintiff seeks to quiet its title to certain described lands in the county of Orange. The defendants claim the lands as mining claims under placer mining locations. It may be assumed, as claimed by them, that in their answer they have alleged the facts necessary to sustain their claim, providing the lands in controversy were open to location under the mineral land laws of the United States and those of California in 1911. The plaintiff derails title by mesne conveyances from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California, to which company a patent had been issued by the United States of America. At the trial the plaintiff introduced in evidence the patent issued by the government to the railroad company, including the lands in controversy, which patent was dated April 4, 1879, and on the 12th day of February, 1881, recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the lands were located. The plaintiff also introduced in evidence a deed from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and others, including in its description the lands in controversy, conveying to one Franklin Cogswell the lands therein described, "reserving all claim of the United States to the same as mineral land." It was admitted at the trial that the plaintiff had acquired whatever right, title, and interest passed from the United States to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company by the granting act referred to in the patent and by the said patent and from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and others to Franklin Cogswell by said deed. Such were the sole sources of plaintiff's title, except certain evidence offered for the purpose of showing title by adverse possession; but we shall not find it necessary to further discuss the subject of adverse possession in this case. The plaintiff having rested, the defendants requested the court to dismiss the complaint on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to show title in the premises in the plaintiff for the reason that there was no evidence before the court that the land was not mineral land. Said motion having been denied, the defendants offered to prove that all the lands in controversy were mineral lands within the meaning and purview of the granting act mentioned in the patent and within the meaning of said patent, and that the defendants had, in the year 1911, located said lands as mineral lands belonging to the United States and had ever since done upon them the annual assessment work required by law to be done. To this the plaintiff objected on the ground that the issuance of the patent by the United States was a conclusive adjudication that all the land described therein was non-mineral. This objection was sustained by the court. Thereupon the court made its findings and entered its decree in favor of the plaintiff.

The patent shows that it was based upon proceedings had under the provisions of certain railroad land grant legislation, referring to the act of Congress approved July 27, 1866 (14 Stat. 292, c. 278) and Joint Resolution of June 28, 1870 (16 Stat. 382, No. 87), and the twenty-third section of an act of March 3, 1871 (16 Stat. 579, c. 122), whereby the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of California was authorized to construct certain lines of railroad, and provision was made for granting to said company certain alternate sections of public land on each side of the line of railroad. The patent purports to grant to the grantees the tracts of land therein described, "mineral land excepted."

Every question necessary to a determination of this case has been answered by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Burke v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co. et al., 234 U. S. 669, 34 Sup. Ct. 907, 58 L. Ed. 1527, 1556. Without indulging in the extensive quotations which would be necessary to a full statement of that case, we will briefly make its application to the case at bar.

[1-4] Petroleum or mineral oil is within the meaning of the term "mineral," as it was used in said act of Congress reserving mineral lands from the railroad land grants. If, for the reasons claimed, the patent was irregularly issued, it was nevertheless the act of a legally constituted tribunal and was done within its jurisdiction. Therefore the patent is not void, and it passed the title, subject to the right of the government to attack the patent by direct suit for its annulment, if the land was known to be mineral when the patent issued. The reservation and exception contained in the grant in the patent to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company excepting mineral lands is a void exception. The patent upon collateral attack is a conclusive and official declaration that the land is agricultural and that all the requirements preliminary to the issuance of the patent have been complied with. The fact that appellants were not in privity with the government in any respect at the time when the patent was issued to the railroad company prevents them from successfully attacking the patent in this case.

In Van Ness v. Rooney, 160 Cal. 131, at page 142, 116 Pac. 392, the court was dealing with the validity of a patent to a railroad company of similar character to the patent here in question, but the plaintiff in that case had made a valid mining location and initiated his title to his mining claim before the patent was issued to the railroad company. While sustaining the plaintiff's right as superior to that claimed under the patent, the court clearly held, in accord with earlier decisions there cited, that as to junior claimants the patent to such land as nonmineral land is conclusive.

The several judgments appealed from herein are affirmed, and in each case the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial is also affirmed.

FARRELL v. CITY OF ONTARIO et al.
(Civ. 2783.)

1. EQUITY — 39(1) — JURISDICTION — SCOPE.

The doctrine that equity, having taken jurisdiction, will retain it for the purpose of disposing of the entire case is limited by the rule that where the title of a complainant is doubtful, or the violation of his right is not clear, he will be required to establish his right, title, and the violation thereof in an action at law before equity will entertain his motion for extraordinary relief.

2. JURY — 10 — JURY TRIAL — GUARANTY.

Const. art. 1, § 7, guaranteeing the right to trial by jury, guaranteed the right to trial as it existed at common law.

3. JURY — 13(9) — RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL.

In an action for diversion of surface water and for an injunction held, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 592, relating to jury trial, and the fact that the common-law right to trial by jury was guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 7, that plaintiff was entitled as of right to trial by jury on the issue of damages, and a verdict could only be vacated under the power vested in the court under proceedings for new trial.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR — 930(3) — PRESUMPTIONS — SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES — GENERAL VERDICT.

No presumption will be indulged in favor of the answers of the jury to special interrogatories as against the general verdict.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 845(6) — TORT — FLOWAGE — VERDICT — ANSWERS TO SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

In an action for damages for the act of defendant which cast surface waters on plaintiff's land and to enjoin continuance, etc., held that answers to special interrogatories as to the flowing of such waters did not overthrow the general verdict for plaintiff.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 845(6) — TORT — FLOWAGE — ANSWERS TO SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

In an action for damages for the act of defendant which plaintiff claimed cast surface waters on his premises, finding that the floods were unprecedented held not inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 835 — TORTS — DIVERSION OF WATERS.

Where a city graded a street so that surface waters were cast on the premises of plaintiff, the fact that the amount of the waters was unprecedented is no defense.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1170(6) — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR.

The denial of a jury trial to a party entitled thereto is in itself a miscarriage of justice, and cannot be deemed harmless error under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1000 — EQUITABLE PROCEEDINGS — VERDICT OF JURY.

Where in one proceeding plaintiff united a demand for damages for the acts of defendant in casting surface water on his land, with a prayer for an injunction against maintenance of the condition, held that the verdict of the jury, while conclusive on the issues of damages, was not conclusive on the equitable issues.

10. JUDGMENT — 203 — SEPARATE JUDGMENTS IN SAME CASE — VALIDITY.

Where in one proceeding plaintiff prayed recovery of damages for act of defendant in casting surface waters on his premises and an injunction, it was improper for the clerk to enter judgment on the verdict of the jury on the issue of damages before the court had determined the equitable issues, and hence the entry of such judgment was of no effect, and the court, on determining the equitable issues, might enter judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by Patrick Farrell against the City of Ontario and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Joseph Scott, of Los Angeles, A. S. Maloney, of San Bernardino, and A. G. Ritter, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Archie D. Mitchell, of Ontario, R. S. Parker, of Pasadena, and E. H. Jolliffe, of Ontario, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants. He concedes its correctness, however, as to the defendants other than the city of Ontario. Plaintiff, as the owner of certain lands situate a short distance south of the southerly limits of that city, charges the defendants with having constructed a certain ditch and culvert, the effect of which was to divert storm waters upon plaintiff's lands to their injury. It is alleged that in January, 1916, large quantities of storm waters were so diverted upon plaintiff's lands, to his damage in the sum of $10,000, and that if defendant city is not restrained from maintaining said ditch and culvert they will continue to divert waters upon plaintiff's lands during the winter season of each year, to plaintiff's further and irreparable damage. The prayer is for damages and for an injunction abating the alleged nuisance and restraining its further maintenance.

The case was tried before a jury which, on February 14, 1917, returned its general verdict in favor of the plaintiff as against the defendant city alone in the sum of $2,500. It also returned therewith its special verdict in answer to eight interrogatories submitted by the court. On the following day the clerk, of his own motion, entered judgment for the plaintiff on the general verdict. Thereafter, within ten days, defendant served and filed notice of its intention to move for a new trial and notice of motion for judgment for defendant on the special findings of fact, under section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, subd. 2. These two motions were argued and taken under submission by the court, which thereafter, on July 11, 1917, without ruling upon either of the motions, filed its written opinion, ordering findings and judgment for the defendants. From the judgment entered pursuant thereto upon findings made by the court this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellant's position is twofold: First. That the judgment in favor of plaintiff, entered February 15, 1917, not having been vacated or modified, and no appeal having been taken therefrom, has become final, and that defendant's motion for a new trial has been automatically denied by the lapse of time under section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Second. That the plaintiff was entitled as of right to a trial by jury, at least upon the issues as to damages, and that the verdict was therefore binding upon the court, and could be vacated only under the power vested in the court under proceedings for a new trial, which power was not here exercised.

[1-3] Taking up the second point first, we find two divergent lines of decision in this state, the decisions in one group apparently ignoring those in the other group and no apparent attempt having been made to reconcile them. The one group is illustrated by the case of Hughes v. Dunlap, 91 Cal. 385, 27 Pac. 642, wherein it was held, in an action for damages for trespasses upon land and for an injunction to restrain future repetitions thereof, that the action for damages was a legal remedy as to which the parties were entitled to a jury trial, and that the verdict of the jury thereon was binding upon the court. This case was followed and approved in the recent case of Moore v. San Vicente Lumber Co., 175 Cal. 212, 214, 165 Pac. 687, which was an action for the abatement of a nuisance by injunction and for damages. The other group is illustrated by the cases of McLaughlin v. Del Re, 64 Cal. 472, 2 Pac. 244; Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, 13 Pac. 655, 1 Am. St. Rep. 51; Churchill v. Baumann, 104 Cal. 369, 36 Pac. 93, 38 Pac. 43; Richardson v. City of Eureka, 110 Cal. 441, 446, 42 Pac. 965, and McCarthy v. Gaston Ridge, etc., Co., 144 Cal. 542, 545, 78 Pac. 7—holding that in such case the prayer for damages is but incidental to the principal relief sought, which is of equitable cognizance, and that, therefore, the verdict of a jury thereon is merely advisory and may be disregarded by the trial judge upon whom rests the responsibility of finding the facts.

The decision in Hughes v. Dunlap appears to be based upon the sounder reasoning. According to the allegations of his complaint, plaintiff had two rights of action and was entitled to two remedies, of which he might pursue either or both at his election, the legal remedy of damages for past injuries suffered and the equitable remedy of injunction to prevent their recurrence in the future. He might have prosecuted separate actions for these two remedies concurrently. In that case the facts alleged in the two actions would have been the same, except that in the action at law he would have alleged the money value of the injuries suffered and in the suit in equity he would have alleged the facts showing a threat of future repetitions thereof. Under those circumstances it will be conceded that the plaintiff would have been entitled as of right to a trial by jury of the legal issues as to damages. Instead of doing this, he accepted the invitation held out to him by our laws and joined his two actions in one. He should not be held to have thereby forfeited his right to a jury trial of the legal issues, unless the reason for so holding is clearly apparent.

The rule followed in the decisions of which McCarthy v. Gaston Ridge, etc., Co., supra, is an exemplar, finds support in the decisions of the courts of some of the other states, notably those of New York and Iowa. It seems to us to have grown out of an unnecessary and unwarranted application of a recognized doctrine of equity jurisprudence, to wit, the rule "that when a court of equity has jurisdiction over a cause for any purpose, it may retain the cause for all purposes and proceed to a final determination of all the matters at issue." Pomeroy's Eq. Jurisprudence, §§ 181, 236; Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 500, 528, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64; Becker v. Superior Court, 151 Cal. 313, 316, 90 Pac. 689. This rule, both in its origin and in its application, wherever the jurisdiction at law and in equity was vested in separate tribunals, had for its reason and its purpose the avoidance of a multiplicity of actions. Where, under the "reformed procedure," issues at law and in equity may be tried before the same tribunal and in the same action, this reason ceases to exist. There is no occasion in this state for the application of the rule that equity, once taking jurisdiction, will retain it for the purpose of disposing of the entire case, because here the court may dispose of the entire case without the necessity of trying it as a case wholly of equitable cognizance. Here the court, having jurisdiction, may hear and determine the equitable issues according to the rules of equity, and the legal issues in accordance with the rules of law, both in the same action.

The doctrine that equity, once having taken jurisdiction, will retain it for the purpose of disposing of the entire case was limited and safeguarded in its application under the former procedure by another rule, equally well established, namely, that where the title of the plaintiff is doubtful or the violation of his right by the defendant is not clear, he will be required to first establish his title, his right, and the violation thereof, in an action at law, before equity will entertain his application for extraordinary relief. High on Injunctions, § 8; 29 Cyc. 1228, and cases cited. Under this rule, if the plaintiff had filed in a court of purely equitable jurisdiction the complaint upon which this action is based and the defendant had made answer thereto, as it did here, denying plaintiff's title to the land alleged to have been injured, denying the diversion of waters, and denying the alleged injuries to the land, the court would have said to the plaintiff, in effect:

"You must first go into a court of law and there establish these disputed claims of right upon which you are basing your claims for relief; if you succeed in establishing there your legal rights, we will then entertain and consider your petition for equitable relief."

And, of course, in such action at law the parties would have been entitled to a jury whose verdict would have been binding upon the court and subject to be set aside only upon motion for a new trial.

By analogy, then, it would seem that where, as under our procedure, parties are permitted to submit both their legal rights and their equitable rights to the same tribunal for adjudication at the same time, the right to a jury trial with respect to the former, which was adequately safeguarded under the old system, should be equally respected under the new. That would seem to be the effect of our constitutional guaranty. Article 1, § 7. The right to trial by jury thus guaranteed was the right as it existed at common law. Koppikus v. State Capitol Commissioners, 16 Cal. 248, 253; Cauhape v. Bank, 127 Cal. 197, 202, 59 Pac. 589. The purpose of the amendment of 1874 to section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure was to make it conform thereto. Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 556, 147 Pac. 238. It follows, therefore, that the common-law rule respecting the right to trial by jury as it existed in 1850 is the rule of decision in this state. Pol. Code, § 4468; Martin v. Superior Court (Sup.) 168 Pac. 135, 136, L. R. A. 1918B, 313.

It is material, therefore, to ascertain what was the rule of the English common law upon this subject in 1850. The case of Walter v. Selve, 4 De Gex & Smale, 315, was decided in 1851, upon a bill filed in July, 1850, for the abatement of a nuisance by injunction. Both parties stipulated that all of the issues should be tried in equity without a jury. The vice chancellor in the course of his opinion said:

"Certainly, I should, whether granting or not granting a provisional injunction, have directed an action or an issue, for the purpose of trying the material questions of fact raised by the bill and affidavits. But the counsel for each party having requested me not to do so, and also not to send a case for the opinion of a court of law, I consented to decide it without assistance. It appears to me that, in the present instance, the defendant, as well as the plaintiff, declining to go before a jury, and asking the Court of Chancery to decide between them without assistance in any shape from a court of law, I ought to grant an injunction."

The case of Imperial Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 House of Lords Cas. 601, was decided in 1859 upon a bill in equity filed in 1856 (and, therefor, prior to the chancery amendment of 1858), to abate a nuisance by injunction. The lord chancellor (Lord Campbell) said:

"There is no doubt whatever that before a perpetual injunction can be granted, the party applying for it must establish his right by a proceeding at law."

Lord Kingsdown, concurring, said:

"The rule I take to be clearly this: If a plaintiff applies for an injunction to restrain a violation of a common-law right, if either the existence of the right or the fact of its violation be disputed, he must establish that right at law; but when he has established his right at law, I apprehend that unless there be something special in the case, he is entitled as of course to an injunction to prevent a recurrence."

So far as we have been able to ascertain, there were no statutory enactments in England between 1850 and 1858 affecting the right of trial by jury in connection with suits to abate nuisances. These decisions may be taken then as determinative of the proposition that, under the English common law as it stood in 1850, at the time it was adopted as the rule of decision in this state, "if a plaintiff applies for an injunction to restrain a violation of a common-law right, if either the existence of the right or the fact of its violation be disputed, he must establish that right at law"; or, in other words, by a jury, if one be demanded. We conclude, therefore, that the parties here were entitled to a jury trial upon the issues as to damages, and that the verdict of the jury thereon was binding. We do not regard the provision of section 731 of the Code of Civil Procedure as in any way affecting that right. If the jurisdictions in law and equity were here separately vested, it might well be held that the plaintiff, by filing in equity a complaint such as is here presented, had thereby elected to submit all the issues for determination by the court, and thereby waived his right to a jury trial on the legal issues; but where, as here, all such issues may be tried in the one action, no reason for such holding appears.

[4, 5] It is the contention of the respondent that the special findings of the jury are inconsistent with the general verdict, and that, therefor, the latter cannot stand in any event. Plaintiff's land was situated on the southerly side of Walnut street, opposite the intersection thereof with Fern street. Plaintiff's contention was that the acts of the defendants caused the storm waters to enter his land opposite that point of intersection. Defendants' contention was that the storm waters had always naturally flowed across plaintiff's land at that point. In findings numbered I, II and VI, read together, the jury found that prior to the acts of the defendants the storm waters naturally flowed "southwesterly to Fern and Walnut streets," but that none of them entered upon plaintiff's land to the south of Walnut street. By finding numbered III they found that the act of the defendant city caused a substantial change of the place at which the waters flowed southerly from Walnut street. Apply the rule adopted by the Supreme Court in Law v. Northern Assurance Co., 165 Cal. 394, 406, 132 Pac. 590, 596, that "no presumption will be indulged in favor of answers of the jury to special interrogatories as against the general verdict; but, on the contrary, every reasonable intendment in favor of the general verdict should be indulged, and all parts of the verdict are to be reconciled in support thereof if it can reasonably be done," we construe the findings to mean that prior to the acts complained of the storm waters were wont to reach the street which formed the northern boundary of plaintiff's land, but did not flow southerly therefrom except at a point outside of plaintiff's boundaries; and that the acts of the defendants caused these waters to be discharged upon plaintiff's lands at a point where they had never flowed before. Thus construed, these findings are wholly consistent with the general verdict. This appeal is not from the judgment upon that verdict, nor from an order upon motion for new trial, and we are therefore not concerned here with the question whether or not those findings are supported by the evidence.

[6, 7] By findings numbered V and VI the jury found that the storm and flood of January, 1916, were unprecedented. This, of course, is not inconsistent with the general verdict, in the absence of any finding that the unprecedented character of such storm and flood was the sole cause of the injuries. That fact would constitute no defense if any negligent or wrongful act of the defendants contributed with it to cause the injuries. Chidester v. Consolidated Ditch Co., 59 Cal. 197, 202. In support of the general verdict, we must assume that the jury also found such contributing wrongful acts on the part of the defendants. Tremble v. Tuman, 175

Cal. 696, 167 Pac. 142. The remaining special findings are not claimed to be inconsistent with the general verdict.

[8] Respondent urges that the decision of the court, as embodied in the findings and conclusions drawn by it, is a just one under the evidence, and that therefore its reversal is precluded by section 4½, art. 6, of the Constitution. It may be doubted that this section applies to a situation such as is here presented; but, assuming that it does, we do not hesitate to hold that the denial of the right of trial by jury to a party entitled thereto is, in itself, a miscarriage of justice.

[9] The verdict of the jury, while conclusive upon the issues as to damages (subject only to the power of the court to set it aside on motion for new trial), is in no sense conclusive as to the equitable issues. They are to be determined by the court upon findings of fact made by it. "Of course, it is always for the judge sitting as a chancellor to determine whether, when certain rights are established, he will grant an equitable remedy prayed for, or compel a party to be satisfied with his legal remedy." Hughes v. Dunlap, supra. Appellant contends that the allegations of the complaint upon which the prayer for equitable relief is directly predicated are admitted by the failure to deny them in the answer. This is true with respect to the allegations of the probability of future injuries. The other allegations so referred to by appellant, while not categorically denied, are sufficiently traversed by affirmative allegations in the answer inconsistent therewith.

[10] To appellant's contention that the judgment entered by the clerk upon the verdict has now become final, in the absence of any appeal therefrom, we cannot assent. The clerk was without authority to enter that judgment at that time. There were issues of purely equitable cognizance which the court alone could determine and which it had not then determined. Churchill v. Louie, 135 Cal. 608, 612, 67 Pac. 1032. Therefore, the trial of the action had not been concluded and the judgment so entered was premature and of no effect. Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 545, 558, 147 Pac. 238. It follows from this that the motion for new trial was also premature and of no effect.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court, with direction to enter judgment in accordance with the general verdict upon the issues as to damages, and appropriate to such findings of fact as it shall make upon such evidence as may be taken before the court as to the equitable issues.

(S. F. 8821.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 10, 1919.
Rehearing Denied March 10, 1919.)1. WILLS ⇨684(1)—ESTATE IN TRUST—INCOME—FUND FROM WHICH PAYABLE.

A will directing the executors and trustees to pay monthly out of the net income of estate, from whatever source accruing, certain annuities, until the accumulation of a certain trust fund, referred only to the net income of the property set apart for trust purposes and not to the income of the entire estate, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1357, subs. 2, 3, and section 1360.

2. TRUSTS ⇨271½—MANAGEMENT AND DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY — AUTHORITY OF COURT.

A probate court has no authority to order the executors, as such, to pay during the administration of an estate certain annuities, which are under the will payable only out of the trust property by the executors in their capacity as trustees of such property.

3. WILLS ⇨684(1)—TRUST ESTATE—INCOME—CORPUS OF ESTATE.

Where, under a will, it is provided that until the accumulation of a certain trust fund certain annuities are to be paid monthly "out of the net income," the intention of the testatrix that the net income alone from the trust property, and not the trust property itself, should be resorted to in paying such annuities, is clearly indicated.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

In the matter of the petition of Virginia A. Lord to obtain an order construing the will of Josephine A. Phelps, deceased, and to direct the executors to pay her certain sums of money alleged to be due her under the terms of the will. From an order directing executor to sell property of the estate and out of the proceeds to pay petitioner the sums claimed, the executors, W. F. Chipman and the Union Trust Company, appeal. Order reversed.

W. C. Sharpstein, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Virginia A. Lord filed a petition in the matter of the administration of the estate of Josephine A. Phelps, deceased, to obtain an order construing the will of the said decedent and directing the executors to pay to her certain sums of money alleged to be due her under the terms of said will. Thereupon the court made an order directing the executors to sell property of the estate and out of the proceeds to pay to the petitioner the sums claimed by her to be due to her at that time under said will. From this order said W. F. Chipman and Union Trust Company, as executors of the said will, appeal.

The decision of the case depends upon the meaning and effect of the will, and upon the law of this state regarding the jurisdiction and powers of the superior court sitting as a court of probate in the administration of an estate.

The second article of the will nominated Chipman and the trust company "as executors and trustees of this my will." The third article gave to the petitioner, Mrs. Lord, the use of the dwelling house of the decedent, and the inclosed premises surrounding it, and certain personal property thereon, during her life. The fourth article gave to Eugenie H. Schroeder the use during her life of certain property of small value. The fifth article opens as follows:

"Fifth. All the rest and residue of my estate, including the property described in the two preceding articles, after termination of the life estates of my said sisters Virginia A. Lord and Eugenie H. Schroeder respectively therein, but excluding the personal property described in the sixth and seventh articles hereof, I devise and bequeath to my executors and trustees in trust for the following uses and purposes:

"A. To lease until sold as hereinafter provided all of my real estate upon such terms as to them may seem best, and until the accumulation of the fund hereinafter provided, I direct my executors and trustees from the time of my death to pay monthly out of the net income of my estate from whatever source accruing, to my sisters and brothers hereinafter named, the annuities set opposite their respective names, to wit:

"1. To my sister Virginia A. Lord three hundred dollars.

"2. To my sister Eugenie H. Schroeder three hundred dollars.

"3. To my brother Edward T. McLean and his wife Mattie McLean jointly and to the survivor of them one hundred dollars.

"4. To my sister Amanda A. Swasey one hundred dollars.

"5. To my brother Alfred A. McLean one hundred dollars.

"Should the income in any month be insufficient to pay all of said annuities in full, I direct my executors and trustees to pay the annuities to my sisters Virginia A. Lord and Eugenie H. Schroeder in full and prorate the balance among the remaining annuitants, and whenever there shall be more than sufficient to pay all of said annuities in full, I direct my said executors and trustees to pay such annuitants as have not received their annuities in full a sufficient sum to make up such deficit but without interest."

The will then proceeds to direct the "executors and trustees" to sell sufficient of the property to create a fund of $240,000, and to invest and keep invested the sums derived from such sales and use the income from that money in payment upon the above annuities until the entire fund is raised, and then and thereafter to invest and keep such fund invested and pay the net income therefrom to said annuitants in the following proportions, to wit, three-eighths to Mrs. Lord, three-eighths to Mrs. Schroeder, one-twelfth to Edward T. and Mattie McLean jointly, one-twelfth to Amanda A. Swasey, and one-twelfth to Alfred A. McLean. Upon the death of these respective beneficiaries the corpus of the fund is to go to certain successors of them respectively in the proportions above stated. The surplus of the estate remaining after providing for said fund is to be sold and the proceeds paid by the executors and trustees to a number of persons in specific amounts aggregating $280,600, and the excess, if any, is to be paid in equal parts to Mrs. Lord, Mrs. Schroeder, and the said W. F. Chipman, her nephew. The final clause of the fifth article was as follows:

"Although it is my intention to have all of my estate, with the exceptions already stated, converted into cash, I desire that my executors and trustees shall make sales with the sole object that my two sisters and my nephew above mentioned shall receive substantial sums out of the remainder of my estate. My estate at present valuations is ample for that purpose, and I do not wish it sacrificed to satisfy the importunities of those, who while dear to me, are not the first in my affections."

The entire estate was of the value of $535,860.17, according to the appraisal returned by the executors.

The decedent died on December 5, 1916, the will was admitted to probate, letters testamentary were issued to the aforesaid persons named as "executors and trustees," and they have ever since been acting as executors of the estate. On June 15, 1917, all the persons named as annuitants in the above-quoted clause of the will, and the said executors, entered into a stipulation, in pursuance whereof the court made an order directing said executors to pay out of the general assets of the estate from the time of the death of said decedent to June 5, 1917, to Mrs. Lord and Mrs. Schroeder, the sum of $200 a month each, and to the other annuitants respectively, two-thirds of the sums directed by the will to be paid to them during the aforesaid period, and thereafter, during the administration of the estate, to continue to pay monthly to each of the said annuitants two-thirds of their respective annuities. The appellants pleaded this stipulation and the order thereon as an adjudication of the matter and as a bar to the relief applied for. The court found that the stipulation was not entered into in settlement or compromise of the respective claims of the said annuitants, and its conclusion was that the order thereon did not bar them from afterwards claiming the remainder of the said annuities out of the general assets of the estate or otherwise.

The order appealed from recites that there was no net income from the estate of the decedent and would not be for a long time in the future, nor any money or funds in the possession of the executors with which to pay the annuity to Mrs. Lord, and it directs that the executors forthwith proceed to sell, subject to confirmation by the court, property of the estate to obtain money to pay the sum of $1,300, due at the time upon the aforesaid annuity to Mrs. Lord, and thereafter, until the net income of the estate was sufficient to pay said annuity, to continue to convert the general assets of the estate into money and therefrom to pay the said annuity monthly as it became due. It proceeds upon the theory that the will does not make the annuities payable exclusively out of the net income of the estate, and that the general assets may be resorted to for that purpose; that the sums paid under the prior order above recited were payments on account and should be credited upon the sums due under the will from the date of the death of the decedent to the time of making the order; that the balance unpaid should be paid out of the funds raised by sales, so as to make complete payment of the entire annuity up to that time; that thereafter the entire annuity should be paid out of the general assets of the estate whenever it was necessary to resort to them for that purpose; and that all this was to be done and could be done by the executors, prior to distribution, and as part of their duties as executors in the administration of the estate.

The respondent relies on subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1357 of the Civil Code, which are as follows:

"2. A legacy is demonstrative when the particular fund or personal property is pointed out from which it is to be taken or paid; if such fund or property fails, in whole or in part, resort may be had to the general assets, as in case of a general legacy;

"3. An annuity is a bequest of certain specified sums periodically; if the fund or property out of which they are payable fails, resort may be had to the general assets, as in case of a general legacy."

The provisions regarding payment of general legacies out of general assets are found in section 1360. It describes the order in which the general assets may be resorted to, and makes all the property of the testator available for that purpose.

The appellants insist that this theory is contrary to law, and that it involves an erroneous construction of the will. Their position is that the annuities are payable only out of the trust property, and not out of the general assets, and that these interim annuities are not to be paid except out of the net income and the interest derived from the proceeds of sales accruing during the time when the $240,000 trust fund is being accumulated.

The third and fourth articles of the will gave to Mrs. Lord and Mrs. Schroeder, respectively, for life, the use of certain parts of the property of the estate. This life interest is not included in the property given in trust. The fifth and seventh articles make an absolute disposition of certain personal property, and this also is excluded from the property given in trust.

[1] It necessarily follows, therefore, that the annuities are not made a charge on the general assets of the estate, nor upon the net income of the entire estate, since these parcels of property are entirely excluded from the provisions of the trust under which the annuities are payable. It is a necessary conclusion, therefore, that the phrase "net income of my estate from whatever source accruing," in the second paragraph of the fifth article of the will, refers only to the net income of the property set apart for the trust purposes, and not to the income of the entire estate. At all events, this trust property is the only property that can be looked to for the payment of the annuities.

[2] The performance of the trust created by the fifth article of the will is a duty devolving upon the persons named as executors and trustees in their capacity as trustees. It forms no part of their duty in their capacity as executors in the administration of the estate proper. Furthermore, the trust property was given to the trustees and vested in them immediately upon the death of the testatrix, and the court, sitting in probate, cannot direct them in their capacity as trustees, with respect to their duties in carrying out the trust. The order appealed from does not even purport to direct them as trustees, but is addressed to them solely as executors. This is fully settled by the authorities. In Estate of Mackay, 107 Cal. 303, 40 Pac. 558, the testator in his will declared that he bequeathed "to my said executors in trust" $15,000, and directed them to invest the same and pay the income to Hattie Schenck during her life. The court below made an order directing the executors, as such, to invest the money and pay the income to the beneficiary during administration of the estate. This court declared that the interest thus given to her was not a legacy payable directly to her, and that she was under no circumstances entitled to receive any part of the principal, but that the principal was to be received and held by the trustees; that they were the only parties to whom the probate court could order it paid, and that such order would constitute a distribution of the estate, partial or final; that the only right of the beneficiary during administration was the right to ask for a distribution of the fund to the trustees; that all that "she is entitled to is payment by the trustees of the income of the specific fund after distribution of such fund to them"; and that the court had no power to do more than to distribute the principal to the trustees, and was not authorized to order payment to the respondent of any sum from the funds of the estate. The latter portion of the opinion declaring that the provision for Hattie Schenck was a legacy for maintenance under section 1369 of the Civil Code, and that it bore interest from the death of the testator, was inserted in the way of a direction to the trustees as to the control of the fund after distribution thereof to them. The authorities elsewhere are to the same effect. "The appointment to a trust under the will, not essential to the office of an executor, does not constitute the trustee an executor according to the tenor, for the offices of an executor and of a trustee are distinct, and may be vested in different persons, and when they are vested in the same person, the functions of each are nevertheless to be performed by him in the respective capacity, the probate court having jurisdiction over him in the one, but not in the other, capacity; and an administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo, appointed after the death of an executor who was also appointed trustee in the will, does not virtute officii succeed to the trust. But where the testator uses the word 'trustee,' and imposes duties involving the functions of an executor, this will be held a good appointment as executor." 1 Woerner on Administration, p. 591.

The authorities cited by the author fully support the text. Wheatly v. Badger, 7 Pa. 459; Creamer v. Holbrook, 99 Ala. 52, 11 South. 830; Smith v. Smith, 15 Wash. 239, 46 Pac. 249. From these authorities it is clear that the court had no authority to make orders directing the executors, as such, to pay the annuities during the administration of the estate.

[3] We are also of the opinion that even if the order were otherwise proper the court erred in its conclusion that the general property of the trust fund could be resorted to to supply any deficiency of the net income to pay these annuities. Taking the trust provision as a whole it does not fairly bear this construction. It is the intention of the testatrix that must be ascertained, and when that is found it controls the disposition of the property. The express language is that the annuities are to be paid "out of the net income," and there is no word or phrase indicating an intention to make their payment a charge upon the general trust property itself, or a purpose that they should be paid at all events, regardless of the sufficiency of the net income. "The leading principle of the cases is that, when a testator bequeaths a life annuity in such a manner as to show a separate and independent intention that the money shall be paid to the annuitant at all events, that intention will not be permitted to be overruled merely by a direction in the will that the money is to be raised in a particular way or out of a particular fund." 3 Cor. Jur. 216, § 34, note to 50 (a). There is no such intention discernible from the terms of this will. The immediately succeeding clause of the trust article shows a positive intent that the annuitants should not receive more than the net income would supply. It declares that if in any month the income was insufficient to pay all the annuities in full, that then Mrs. Lord and Mrs. Schroeder should have preference over the others; that the others should take the balance, if any, pro rata, and that thereafter whenever there should be more than sufficient income therefor, the arrears upon the annuities should be paid "but without interest." Except for the quoted phrase the annuities would bear interest from the date of the death of the testatrix. Civ. Code, § 1370. Here, therefore, is a direct statement that if the income is insufficient to pay the annuities in full, not even interest thereon shall be paid from any subsequently accruing income, much less from the principal. It is a clear indication of the intent by the testatrix that the income alone should be resorted to for such payment. This is further indicated by the next provision to the effect that when money is derived from sales before the entire sum of $240,000 is accumulated, such money is to be invested as fast as obtained and the income therefrom applied to pay the said annuities as far as it would go. It is obvious from this provision that the testatrix did not contemplate or intend that the proceeds of the sales so made should go to pay the annuities and that her understanding was that only the interest of such proceeds should be so applied. The provision shows that she could not have contemplated that the entire annuities should have been paid in the meantime by the application of the proceeds of sales thereto. The final clause in the trust article declares the desire and expectation of the testatrix; that after realizing the $240,000 intended as a provision for the annuitants, and the additional sum of $280,600 to be paid in specific legacies out of the surplus, there will still remain a substantial sum to be divided between her two sisters and her nephew, the ultimate beneficiaries. Manifestly she did not suppose in framing this article that the corpus of the trust property might be largely depleted by sales thereof to pay the annuities pending administration or pending the conversion of the entire assets into money.

The general conclusion from the whole case is that the court below erred in making the order appealed from, and that it has no power to direct the executors in their executorial capacity to pay the money derived from the trust property to the beneficiaries of the trust.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary to determine whether or not the order made in pursuance of the stipulation of the respective annuitants is an adjudication upon the merits of their claims to full payment, either out of the net income or out of the corpus of the trust property. That question must remain until the administration of the trust properly comes before some court for determination.

The order appealed from is reversed.

The case is practically the same in all respects, so far as the legal questions are concerned, as case No. S. F. 8821, 178 Pac. 846, in which an opinion has been written. SHAW, J. This is an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover damages for the alleged conversion by the defendant Cramer of property belonging to the plaintiffs. Judgment was given below for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appeal.

The defendant Cramer, as constable of Sausalito township, in Marin county, received a writ of attachment issued out of the justices' court of the city and county of San Francisco, in an action by one Catoni against the two plaintiffs, by virtue whereof on June 19, 1915, he levied upon the property in controversy. Thereafter on July 1, 1915, after due notice, the plaintiffs herein filed in the justices' court an undertaking in an amount fixed by the court as provided in sections 554 and 555 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and thereupon applied for an order to discharge the attachment and to release from the operation of such attachment all the property so attached. On the same day the justice of the peace made an order that the writ of attachment theretofore issued in the case be released. On the next day, July 2d, the plaintiffs herein demanded of Cramer the delivery of the property held by him under said attachment. Cramer refused to deliver the same, and demanded $58.25, which he claimed as his fees for the expenses incurred by him as such officer in levying the writ and keeping the property. Thereafter on July 14, 1915, the said Catoni, the attachment plaintiff, required the sureties in said undertaking to justify, and in pursuance thereof said sureties did justify before said justice on July 19, 1915. The present action was begun on July 8, 1915. This, it will be observed, was after the demand for release of the property and before the notice requiring the sureties to justify had been given and before the justification was made thereunder.

[1] We are of the opinion that the finding of the court that the defendant Cramer did not convert the property to his own use is sustained by the evidence. Section 554 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that when the defendant has appeared in an action in which an attachment has been issued and levied against him, he may, upon notice, apply to the court for an order to discharge the attachment, and that, upon the execution of the undertaking required in section 555, "an order may be made, releasing from the operation of the attachment any or all of the property attached; and all of the property so released, and all of the proceeds of the sales thereof, must be delivered to the defendant, upon the justification of the sureties on the undertaking, if required by the plaintiff. Such justification must take place within five days after notice of the filing of such undertaking." Section 555, referring to the same undertaking, declares that "the sureties may be required to justify before the court or judge, and the property attached cannot be released from the attachment without their justification, if the same is required." The undertaking was filed on July 1, 1915. The attachment plaintiff could not have notice of its filing until then, and he had at least five days from that day within which to require justification. Until he suffered that time to pass without requiring justification, the constable was bound to keep the property for the benefit of the attachment plaintiff. The demand made on July 2d was therefore premature, the constable was not then required to deliver the property, and his refusal to do so was not evidence sufficient to justify a finding that he had converted the property to his own use. The finding of the court that the defendant did not convert the property to his own use is sustained by the evidence, and is sufficient to support the judgment.

[2] Cramer, as constable, was the agent of the plaintiff to hold the property until the law authorized him to deliver it to the defendant upon the proceedings for a release. His authority was limited to that given by the statute and he had no authority by law, or from the plaintiff in the attachment suit, to waive the time provided by law for the requirement for justification. Consequently his demand for his fees as a condition of releasing the property, and his offer to release the same upon such payment, could not operate as a waiver of the objection that delivery was not yet due. It is unnecessary to consider the other question argued in the briefs.

UPTON v. TRAVELERS' INS. CO.
(L. A. 4763.)

Rehearing Denied Mar. 13, 1919.)

1. TIME §10(10)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE — EXPIRATION OF POLICY—"ACT."

Where an accident insurance policy expired on October 12th, a legal holiday, Civ. Code, § 10, declaring the time in which an act provided by law to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless a holiday, when it is excluded, and section 11, providing that when the particular day on which an act is to be done is a holiday it may be performed upon the next day, do not render insurer liable for an accident happening October 13th; the accident not being an "act" within these sections.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Act.]

2. INSURANCE §177—ACCIDENT INSURANCE —OPTION TO CONTINUE TERMS OF POLICY.

The existence of an unexercised option to extend an accident policy beyond the period specified therein does not operate to extend the period of insurance so as to cover an accident which happens between the expiration of the policy and the termination of the option; and Civ. Code, § 11, only extends the time for exercising option in case of termination upon a holiday, and not the time of insurance against accident.

3. INSURANCE §145(3)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—WAIVER OF COMPLIANCE WITH RENEWAL CLAUSE.

While the receipt of a premium by the insurer from its agent, after the expiration of the time provided in the policy for renewing its terms, with knowledge of the fact that it had not been paid to the agent until after such expiration, would for the purpose of that renewal operate as a waiver of the condition of advance payment, it would not abrogate such condition as to future renewals.

4. INSURANCE §145(3)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—RENEWAL OF POLICY—PROMISE OF AGENT TO CALL AND COLLECT PREMIUM.

Where an insurer provided that "no agent has power to waive any condition of this policy," and the policy contained an option for renewal by payment of premium in advance, the advance payment condition was not waived by insurer's local agent's failure to call at insured's residence for the payment in time as promised.

5. INSURANCE §376(2) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—RENEWAL OF POLICY—ESTOPPEL.

An accident insurance company is not estopped to claim that a policy had lapsed, where insurer's failure to renew by advance payment of premium as provided in the policy was due to reliance upon insurer's local agent's promise to call for the premium, made without insurer's knowledge, where the policy expressly provided no agent could waive its terms.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Henrietta D. Upton against the Travelers' Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George P. Cary and Frank C. Dunham, both of Pasadena, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Milliken, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The action was upon a contract to insure the plaintiff against accidents. The policy was issued on April 12, 1912, and bore that date. It contained the provision that—

"This policy is issued for a term of six months, beginning at twelve o'clock noon, standard time, on the twelfth day of April, 1912, and ending at the same hour, but it may be renewed, subject to all its provisions, from term to term thereafter by payment of the premium in advance."

It was renewed from time to time, the last renewal taking place on April 12, 1914.

[1] The accident causing the injury for which plaintiff seeks recovery in this action occurred on October 13, 1914. This was one day after the policy had expired, and consequently the defendant is not liable. The fact that October 12th was a legal holiday does not aid the plaintiff. The policy expired by its terms on the 12th day of October at noon. The accident does not come within the provisions of sections 10 or 11 of the Civil Code or the corresponding provisions of the other Codes. Section 10 declares that the time in which any act is provided by law to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, and then it is also excluded. The accident, of course, was not an act provided to be done by any law, or by the policy. Therefore this section has no application. Section 11 provides that whenever any act of a secular nature is appointed by law or contract to be performed upon a particular day, which day falls upon a holiday, it may be performed upon the next business day with the same effect as if it had been performed upon the day appointed. The policy did not appoint the accident as an act to be performed at any time, or at all; consequently that act does not fall within this section.

[2] The fact that the policy contained an option to the plaintiff to renew the policy, and that this option continued in force by the terms of the policy until October 12, 1914, does not extend the policy so as to cover an accident which happened on the following day. Section 11 does not purport to do more than to extend the time for exercising the option where it expires on a holiday. As a matter of fact, there was never any exercise of the option nor any attempt to exercise it. Consequently, such extension of the time for exercising it could have no effect whatever after the extension had expired, even if the accident did happen before that time. An option is a mere offer, and, unless it is accepted within the time limited, it is of no force for any purpose. The mere existence of such unexercised option, extending beyond the period of insurance specified in the policy, cannot operate to extend the period of insurance so as to cover an accident which happens between the expiration of the insurance and the termination of the option. The only thing extended by the statute is the time for exercising the option, not the time of insurance against the happening of an accident.

[3,4] It is also claimed that by the conduct of its agent, V. W. Good, and by the acceptance of previous renewal premiums after the time had expired, the defendant company had waived the requirement that the premium for renewal on October 12, 1914, must be paid before the prior renewal time expired. The policy was issued to Samuel W. Upton and was made payable to his wife, the plaintiff. They resided in Pasadena. Mr. Good had his office in Pasadena. It was the custom of the company to send renewal notices for this policy to Good in Pasadena some time before the expiration of the current term, whereupon Good would send a notice thereof to Mr. Upton. It had been the habit of Good to call at the residence of Upton to collect the renewal premium, and he had promised Upton that he would continue to do so. Sometimes it would be paid only in part and he would deliver the renewal receipt of the company and personally trust Mr. Upton for the balance until a time beyond the current renewal term. He had done this at the renewal in April, 1914. This, it is insisted, constituted a waiver by the company of the condition for payment in advance and operated to continue the policy in force, notwithstanding its positive terms to the contrary.

[5] It may be conceded that the receipt of the premium by the company from its agent, after the time had expired, with knowledge of the fact that it had not been paid to the agent until after such expiration, would operate as a waiver, for the purpose of that renewal, of the condition that payment must be made in advance. It is difficult to perceive any sound reason for holding that this would abrogate the condition as to future renewals. Here there was no proof that Good had any authority, except to collect the renewal premiums and deliver the renewal receipts prepared, signed, and sent to him by the proper officers of the company. No attempt was made to prove that the general or managing agents of the company were informed or knew that the premiums in question were not paid in advance or that Good had promised to call at Upton's residence for the payment. The policy declared that "no agent has power to waive any condition of this policy." Under these circumstances, no estoppel was created against the company to prevent it from refusing acceptance of a renewal premium offered after the time expired, and there was no waiver of the condition as to payment in advance. Upton had no right to rely on Good's promise to call at his house to demand payment. It devolved on Upton to exercise his option if he desired to renew the policy. The company owed him no duty to request such exercise.

The court below properly directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

MAHANA et al. v. VAN ALSTYNE.
(L. A. 4796.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES $\hookrightarrow$ 139(3)—RENEWAL—CONSIDERATION.

Where a note given for a valuable consideration is surrendered and a new note given with an extension of time, such extension and surrender constitute a valuable consideration for the new note.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE $\hookrightarrow$ 156—CONSIDERATION—SURRENDER OF PREVIOUS NOTE AND TRUST DEED.

The surrender of a note and trust deed given by a husband and wife for the husband's debt, which were valid obligations, constitutes a sufficient consideration for a new note, signed by the wife alone.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by George T. Mahana and another against Katharine Van Alstyne. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs sued the defendant to recover judgment upon a promissory note executed by defendant to plaintiffs on April 17, 1915, for $2,500, payable July 1, 1915. The defendant in answer admitted the execution and nonpayment of the note, but alleged, in effect, that the same was executed without any valuable consideration.

The facts stated in the findings and shown by the uncontradicted evidence are as follows: Katharine Van Alstyne and Guy Van Alstyne were husband and wife. On July 31, 1914, said Guy Van Alstyne and the defendant executed a note to the plaintiffs for $5,000 and a deed of trust upon certain land, which was the separate property of the defendant, as security therefor. Said note was given for the personal debt of Guy Van Alstyne to the plaintiffs. Thereafter it was discovered that the note was not for the correct amount, and an accounting was had between Guy Van Alstyne and the plaintiffs, whereby it was ascertained that his debt to them was only $4,174. Thereupon, on November 5, 1914, the first note and deed of trust were canceled and Guy Van Alstyne and the defendant executed to plaintiff a new note for $4,174, and a new deed of trust on the same real property to secure said new note. This note was made payable two years after said date. Thereafter, on April 17, 1915, the plaintiffs, at the request of defendant, canceled and returned to the defendant said note and deed of trust of November 5, 1914, in consideration whereof the defendant executed to plaintiffs the note for $2,500 herein sued on. There was no consideration for this note other than that disclosed by the foregoing facts. The court below decided that said note was only collateral security for the previous debt of the defendant's husband, and was not supported by any consideration. Judgment was given for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appeal.

The facts stated do not support the conclusion that the note was without consideration. The conclusions of law and the judgment were erroneous. There was a valuable consideration for the original note for $5,000 to the extent of the debt due from Van Alstyne to the plaintiffs at the time it was executed. The new note for $4,174, executed on November 5, 1914, and made payable two years after said date, was given in consideration of the cancellation of the old note and deed of trust. It was therefore supported by a valuable consideration. The plaintiffs surrendered the old note for $5,000 and accepted the new note of the parties, maturing two years from that date.

[1, 2] This extension of time and this surrender of the former note and deed constituted a valuable consideration. Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 64 Pac. 560. It was both a benefit to the defendants and a detriment to the plaintiffs. As to the $2,500 note it appears that the defendant desired to sell her property, but could not do so with the outstanding deed of trust thereon; that she requested the plaintiffs to assist her in the matter, and they thereupon agreed to take her unsecured note for $2,500 in consideration of their release of the previous note and of the deed of trust given to secure the same. The fact that the original note was given for the debt of Guy Van Alstyne, and that at no time was there any new consideration running to him other than the several renewals and cancellations, does not aid the defendant. The giving up of the deed of trust and the old note, which were at that time valid obligations, was a sufficient consideration for the note of $2,500 sued on.

The judgment should have been for the plaintiffs.

The judgment is reversed.

et al. (L. A. 4642.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1919.)

1. HIGHWAYS — 113(5) — PUBLIC CONTRACTS
— BONDS — SUPPLIES.

Items furnished a subcontractor, consisting of hay and feed for horses and mules used in doing roadwork under Road District Improvement Act of 1907, are covered by a bond requiring a public contractor under such statute to pay for materials furnished for or in doing the work, irrespective of the presence or absence of the word "supplies" in the bond, or of St. 1897, p. 201, amended by St. 1911, p. 1422.

2. HIGHWAYS — 113(5) — IMPROVEMENTS —
STATUTES — VALIDITY.

Road District Improvement Act of 1907, requiring a contractor under such statute to give a bond, is not unconstitutional.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Wood & Coal Company against George H. Oswald and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. H. Lamme and Eugene Daney, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Crouch & Chambers, of San Diego, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought upon a bond accompanying a contract for road work to be done under the Road District Improvement Act of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 806). A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

The act to which we have referred is one authorizing the improvement of roads and streets outside of incorporated cities or towns, and the assessment of the cost upon the lands within a district to be fixed by the board of supervisors of the county. The procedure is, in its main features, similar to that provided by the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147). By section 9 it is provided that before entering upon the contract the contractor shall execute and file a bond, running to the county, in an amount not less than one-half of the contract price "conditioned for the faithful execution of the contract by the party contracting to do the work, and the payment by him for all labor and materials furnished for or in the doing of the work.

* * * Such bond shall inure as well to the benefit of any and all persons furnishing labor or materials for the work as to the county."

In this connection mention should also be made of "An act to secure the payment of the claims of materialmen, mechanics, or laborers, employed by contractors upon state, municipal or other public work" (Stats. 1897, p. 201, amended Stats. 1911, p. 1422). The statute of 1897 is one requiring every person to whom is awarded a contract for work for the state, or by any county, city and county, city, town, or district, to file a bond in not less than half the contract price, providing that, if the contractor "fails to pay for any materials or supplies furnished for the performance of the work contracted to be done, or for any work or labor done thereon of any kind, that the sureties will pay the same, in an amount not exceeding the sum specified in the bond." It will be noted that, while the act of 1897 undertakes to secure payment for labor, materials, or supplies furnished for the performance of the work, the Road District Improvement Act of 1907 exacts a bond covering labor and materials merely. The bond here sued upon contains all of the provisions required by the Road District Improvement Act. It contains, in addition, a provision that if the contractor "fails to pay for any materials or supplies furnished for the said work," the sureties on the bond will pay the same.

The claim which the plaintiff here seeks to enforce is one for hay, grain, and other supplies furnished to a subcontractor for feeding and maintaining horses and mules used in the performance of the work. It is contended by the respondents, and virtually conceded by the appellant, that the articles thus furnished are not embraced within the meaning of the term "materials." The appellant seeks, however, to bring his claim within the scope of the broader term "supplies," found in the statute of 1897. The briefs are devoted, in large part, to a discussion of the question whether the bond is to be deemed governed by the provisions of this act, or by those of the road district improvement act of 1907. The respondents claim that the later statute alone is applicable, and that the bond must be read without reference to the use therein of the word "supplies," which, in their view, found its way into the bond without statutory authority. We may, for the purposes of the present case, accept this position as correct. It still remains to be decided whether the plaintiff's demand is covered by a bond given under the terms of the Road District Improvement Act, and binding the sureties to pay for all "materials furnished for or in the doing of the work."

[1] In acquiescing in the respondents' assumption that this question must be answered in the negative, the appellant concedes too much. Since the filing of the briefs herein, this court has had occasion to consider the effect of statutes like the one here involved, and has, in at least two cases, declared that such statutes must be given a broader construction than had, perhaps, been thought to be proper theretofore. In Sherman v. American Surety Co., 173 Pac. 161, it was held by department 2 of this court that the rental of tools used in the performance of work, and the cost of transporting them to the place of use, could be recovered in an action on a bond given under the statute of 1897. It is true that this statute is the one which includes the word "supplies," but the decision is not placed upon this ground. The court points out that statutes requiring bonds for the protection of persons dealing with contractors on public work are different in their purpose and effect from acts for the establishment and enforcement of mechanics' liens, and that the reasons for giving a limited construction to the latter are not applicable to the former. See French v. Powell, 135 Cal. 636, 68 Pac. 92; Ass'd Oil Co. v. Commary-Peterson Co., 32 Cal. App. 582, 163 Pac. 702.

In the Sherman Case the court reviews at some length a series of decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States, and in inferior federal courts, dealing with the construction of section 6923 of the United States Compiled Statutes. This section requires contractors doing public work to execute a bond conditioned that they will "promptly make payments to all persons supplying them with labor and materials in the prosecution of the work provided in such contract." The provision is substantially the same as that found in section 9 of our Road District Improvement Act. The federal decisions, cited in the Sherman Case, unite in giving to the statute and the bond a liberal interpretation, and hold, accordingly, that the obligation of the sureties will cover such items as cartage and towage of materials, rental of cars, and other equipment used by the contractor, freight charges in transporting materials, and even the cost of provisions used by a contractor in feeding his employes, where the location of the work rendered the furnishing of such board necessary. A similar result was reached by department 1 in Bricker v. Rollins, 173 Pac. 592. The opinion in that case did, it is true, refer to the inclusion in the statute and the bond of the "more comprehensive word 'supplies.'" It relied, however, on the authority of the Sherman Case and the cases there cited. In their reasoning, as well as in their citation of authority, the Sherman and the Bricker Cases must therefore be regarded as authority for the conclusion that items like the one here claimed are recoverable under a bond requiring payment for "materials furnished for or in the doing of the work," irrespective of the presence or absence of the word "supplies."

[2] The contention of respondents that the provision of the Road District Improvement Act requiring the contractor to give a bond is unconstitutional is sufficiently answered by a reference to Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Bancroft, 167 Cal. 185, 191, 138 Pac. 742.

The views expressed above render it unnecessary to consider other points argued. The judgment is reversed.

Sidney J. Parsons, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

F. A. Knight, of Long Beach, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiffs are husband and wife, as are the defendants. The defendant

C. H. Hacker had been engaged in the business of placing registers in hotels. These registers were furnished to hotels without charge, the profit lying in the sale of advertising space. Hacker had the exclusive right to place the registers of the "National Hotel Register Company" in several states, including Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Montana. In July, 1914, the parties entered into a written agreement for the sale by the Hackers to the plaintiffs of such right in the four states last named. The purchase price was fixed at $7,500, payable by transfer of five parcels of land owned by Mrs. Thomas, and valued at an aggregate of $6,665, the balance of $835 to be evidenced by a promissory note. The agreement, which bore date July 24, 1914, was signed at Long Beach, in Los Angeles county. Coincidentally with its execution, the plaintiffs delivered to the defendants deeds conveying the real estate described in the contract to the defendant Louise R. Hacker. They also, at the same time, gave the defendants their promissory note for $835, and a bill of sale of certain furniture, found by the court to be worth $400. Shortly thereafter the plaintiffs left California, and undertook to carry on the business transferred to them. They continued their efforts with small success for several months, and finally, in February, 1915, notified the defendants that they rescinded their contract on the ground of fraudulent representations alleged to have been made to them, tendering back to the defendants everything of value which they had received, and demanding a return of the property, real and personal, which they had transferred to the defendants, as well as a cancellation of the promissory note. Shortly thereafter, this action was commenced to enforce the terms of the demand, which had been refused. Judgment went in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal.

[1] The complaint sets out that the defendants had, in order to induce the plaintiffs to enter into the contract, made a number of false and fraudulent representations to them, that the plaintiffs had believed these representations, and had entered into the contract in reliance upon them. It also contained a statement of all other facts necessary to make a case entitling them to the relief of rescission upon the ground of fraud. The law on the subject is too well settled to require statement or the citation of authority. Indeed, the parties to this appeal do not differ in their contentions in this regard. The court found in favor of a number, but not all, of the averments of false representation. The failure of plaintiffs to establish that the defendants had made every false statement charged does not, of course, affect their right to relief on the ground of the material representations which were made. Davis v. Butler, 154 Cal. 623, 98 Pac. 1047.

[2, 3] The only substantial point made by the appellants is that the evidence does not sustain the findings in favor of the plaintiffs' accusations. In view of the familiar limitations on the right of an appellate court to review findings made on conflicting evidence, this contention deserves little notice. The misrepresentations charged related, in a number of particulars, to matters of fact, rather than of opinion, and to matters which were clearly material to the subject of the proposed contract. For example, it was charged that the defendants had told the plaintiffs that the business in the four northwestern states had for some years netted them over $5,000 per annum in profits; that the defendants had received and refused two separate offers to sell the privilege for which the plaintiffs were negotiating, for $10,000; that the mere replacing of the registers in the hotels in which they already were in use would bring a profit of over $5,000 a year. The testimony of the plaintiffs was ample to support the finding that all of these representations were made, that each was false, that the defendants knew it to be false, that the plaintiffs believed it, and purchased in reliance upon it. Any contention to the contrary involves an argument on the respective credibility as witnesses of the plaintiffs and the defendants, an argument that must be addressed to the trial court, and finally disposed of by that court.

[4] Certain rulings on the admission and rejection of evidence are claimed to have been erroneous. But these assignments are unsupported by argument or citation of authority the appellants contenting themselves with stating, in effect, that each of the rulings was wrong. Questions so presented can receive no consideration here. We have, however, examined all of the rulings complained of, and find that no prejudicial error was committed in any instance.

On the whole case the appeal appears to be without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Suit by the Title Insurance & Trust Company against the California Development Company, Southern Pacific Company, and others, wherein Boaz Duncan intervened. From an order for payment of fees for attorneys for plaintiff, defendant Southern Pacific Company appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 171 Cal. 173, 152 Pac. 542.

E. S. Ives, Irving M. Walker, and Loeb, Walker & Loeb, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin and Walter K. Tuller, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a certain order in the above-entitled case for the payment of $22,000 additional fees for the attorneys of plaintiff. The order recites that plaintiff has become indebted to attorneys for their services necessarily rendered in the action in the sum of $50,000, which is declared to be a reasonable sum, of which $20,000 is the reasonable value of services performed prior to the judgment on January 4, 1913, and $30,000 the reasonable value of the work performed by counsel since that time; that there has been paid plaintiff on account thereof only $28,000; and that there is due the sum of $22,000. This the receiver is ordered to pay forthwith.

The property covered by the trust deed, foreclosed by the original judgment of 1913, had been in the hands of a receiver, and was to be retained by him until sold by him as a commissioner. The original judgment provided that the receiver should forthwith pay to plaintiff $20,000 as attorneys' fees, said payment to include all services rendered by counsel "in conducting said sale and securing confirmation thereof." The decree also contained a provision "that the said receiver shall forthwith pay out of the funds in his hands to the clerk of this court the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00), to be held by said clerk as a fund out of which any expenses (not included in the payments above directed) properly incurred by the plaintiff in and to this litigation, including attorneys' fees for any service hereafter rendered by its counsel, may be paid." No payment was to be made from said fund except upon order of court, and in the event of its not being exhausted the residue was to be paid pursuant to order of court "to the party or parties entitled thereto." On appeal the original judgment was affirmed as to certain matters and ordered modified as to others, the superior court being directed "to frame the decree in such form as will preserve the relative rights of all of the parties, as declared by those portions of the decree which are affirmed, and by our opinion and judgment." Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173-223, 152 Pac. 542, 563.

It is contended by appellant that by this judgment the entire amount which the receiver was empowered to pay was $30,000; that this part of the original judgment was affirmed on appeal; and that any attempted further allowance was beyond the authority of the superior court and was as to such excess void.

In the judgment after remittitur, in specifying the order of payment, there was a direction (which preceded any authorization with reference to settlement of appellant's claims) that plaintiff's judgment be paid in full by the receiver, and also a provision that said receiver "shall pay to plaintiff such further sum as the court may allow on account of its expenses, including compensation to its attorneys, since the rendition of said original decree."

It is asserted by appellant that a new liability was created by the judgment after remittitur and by the order to pay fees greater than $30,000, and that such liability in favor of plaintiff was improperly given priority over the claims of appellant, who already had vested rights in the moneys out of which the new liability was directed to be paid. It is also asserted that the original judgment, as modified by this court, was a final adjudication that $30,000 was the maximum sum which might be expended for the compensation of plaintiff's attorneys.

We are unable to uphold these contentions. We must remember that the very terms of the trust itself, expressed in the deed, gave the trustee (plaintiff here) the right to employ counsel, and that by the deed the proper charges and expenses of the trustee were to be paid by the California Development Company out of the trust estate on which such expenses were made charges. No matter what sequence of payment was directed by the judgment the proper charges against the trust estate would naturally follow, and did follow, the order for the payment of plaintiff's judgment. Therefore the mere sequence of payment ordered in the judgment of claims subsequent and subordinate to those of plaintiff would give appellant no vested right in the funds of the receiver as against these proper charges.

The judgment creating a fund of $10,000, out of which any expenses for services of counsel not included in payments previously directed "may be paid," did not fix the sum of $10,000 as the maximum for such services. It merely segregated that sum from the moneys in the hands of the receiver as a form of assurance to plaintiff that to the extent of the fund at least it might be secured for the expenses it should incur. But the limitation of $10,000 for this fund did not absolve the trustee from its full duty of asserting and diligently and faithfully protecting the interests of its beneficiaries—a duty imposed not merely by the judgment, but by the trust itself. Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1-16; 84 Pac. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275. The judgment contemplated further action by the court in the event that the services should be worth less than $10,000, and it cannot justly be said that in setting aside a fund out of which the attorneys for plaintiff might be paid the court abdicated its duty of awarding reasonable compensation for services worth more than $10,000.

It follows that the order must be, and accordingly it is, affirmed.

MARYLAND CASUALTY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 8864.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 11, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ☞95—ILLEGAL EMPLOYMENT—ENTIRETY OF CONTRACT.

Under St. 1915, p. 1205, § 10, inhibiting employment in certain places, during hours schools are in session, of a child of 15, not supplied with age and schooling certificate, his employment for all hours of the day, being an entirety, is illegal even after school hours.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ☞95—ILLEGAL EMPLOYMENT—ATTENDING NIGHT SCHOOL.

Employment in a factory of a boy of 15, not supplied with age and schooling certificate, inhibited by St. 1915, p. 1205, § 10, is not saved from illegality by the fact that he is attending night school; considerations of public health and safety, as well as of education, entering into the statute.

3. INSURANCE ☞389(10)—WAIVER—ISSUANCE OF POLICY—EXISTING BREACH.

Where employer's liability policy covered only employes legally employed, the rule that conditions in the policy which would render it void ab initio under facts known to or readily ascertainable by insurer are waived by its issuance could not be invoked to show insurer's waiver of illegality of employment of a certain employé; the policy not being void ab initio, since it covered some employes legally employed.

4. INSURANCE ☞377(4)—WAIVER OF CONDITION—KNOWLEDGE—PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

Relative to waiver of condition that policy insures against injury only to employes "legally employed," insurer, even if knowing an employé is only 15 years old, is not chargeable with knowledge of his illegal employment, which under St. 1915, p. 1208, § 13, would render the employer guilty of crime, but may presume innocence of crime, and that the necessary certificate had been furnished.

5. INSURANCE ☞128(1)—ORAL AGREEMENT—PRESUMPTION AS TO TERMS.

An oral agreement to insure employer against liability under Workmen's Compensation Law will be presumed to contemplate insurance on the usual terms contained in the company's policies.

6. INSURANCE ☞389(10), 392(8)—WAIVER OF CONDITION—ISSUANCE OF POLICY—ACCEPTANCE OF PREMIUM.

Neither issuance after death of employé of employer's liability insurance policy, pursuant to oral agreement before death, nor acceptance and retention of premium, waives condition of policy limiting insurance to employes legally employed; the policy being a continuing liability.

In Bank.

Application by the Maryland Casualty Company for writ of review against the Industrial Accident Commission of California and others; an award for death of an employé having been made against petitioner as insurance carrier of the employers. Award and order annulled.

John Ralph Wilson and Charles B. Morris, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco (Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

WILBUR, J. An award was made by the Industrial Accident Commission against the petitioner as insurance carrier of respondents Bronstein and Le Blanc, employers of Frank T. Sharon, a minor of the age of 15 years and 2 months, in favor of the mother and sister of the employé, to compensate them for his death resulting from an elevator accident in the course of his employment. The petitioner claims that the loss is not covered by the terms of its policy of insurance for the reason that said employé was not legally employed, because such employment was in violation of the child labor law in force at the time the policy was issued. The respondents claim that the employment was legal, but, if not, that the provision of the policy excluding liability in cases of illegal employment was waived by the petitioner.

Prior to the accident and on the day that the employé was killed an insurance solicitor, who placed insurance in a number of different companies, for a commission, secured from the employers an agreement to take an insurance policy from the petitioner, covering liability under the Workmen's Compensation Law (St. 1917, p. 831). The solicitor observed Frank T. Sharon at work, and called the attention of the respondent employers to the liability incurred by them under the Workmen's Compensation Law for injuries to such employé, and urged them to take out an insurance policy to cover such liability, and received their verbal consent thereto. Subsequently the solicitor or broker reported to an agent of the petitioner authorized to issue policies the employers' application for this insurance, and requested that the same be issued as of noon, November 14, 1916. No inquiries were made by either the agent of the company in accepting the application or by the broker with reference to the age of Frank T. Sharon, and no statement was made in relation thereto by the employer. The broker had no knowledge of the age of the employé other than that derived by observing him, and no knowledge as to whether or not an age and schooling permit had been issued by the proper authorities. After the accident occurred and in pursuance of the previous arrangement, the petitioner, knowing that an accident had occurred resulting in the death of Frank T. Sharon, nevertheless issued its policy of insurance as agreed, containing the usual provision that it should cover "such injuries, including death, sustained by any employé legally employed" by Bronstein and Le Blanc. Petitioner subsequently learned that the decedent at the time of the accident was 15 years and 2 months old, and that he had been employed without the issuance to him of any age and schooling certificate, as required by section 10 of the child labor law (St. 1915, p. 1205). Immediately upon learning these facts petitioner notified the employers that they would not waive that fact, and would stand on the terms of the policy.

[1] It is clear from the unambiguous terms of the child labor law that the employment of Frank T. Sharon, a minor of the age of 15 years, was illegal without the issuance to him, and the presentation to his employer, of an age and schooling certificate (St. 1915, p. 1205, § 10), by the school authorities after proper investigation and proof to ascertain the truth of the facts therein certified. Section 13 of the child labor law provides:

"Any person, firm, corporation, agent or officer of a firm or corporation that * * * omits to comply with any of the foregoing provisions of this act, or that employs or suffers or permits any minor to be employed in violation thereof, is guilty of a misdemeanor. * * * St. 1915, p. 1208.

The accident in question occurred at 4:30 in the afternoon. Section 10 provides:

"No minor of the age of fifteen years shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any of the places enumerated in section 1 during the hours public schools are in session, unless such minor is provided with an age and schooling certificate as herein provided."

Among other places in which employment is prohibited by the provisions of section 1 so referred to is "any manufacturing establishment or workshop," which would include the employment in which the decedent was engaged at the time of his death. It is therefore argued that, even though the employment during the hours the schools were in session was illegal, without an age and schooling certificate, it was not illegal at the hour in question; for, although the schools of the city were in session November 14th, they had adjourned before 4:30, and that therefore the decedent was not working "during the hours the public schools are in session." But the contract of employment was an entirety, and required the decedent to work six days in a week during the whole day and while school was in session. The contract was therefore one prohibited by the law, and the fact that the decedent might have been legally employed after school hours on the day in question does not alter the fact that the contract of employment in question was illegal and in violation of the plain terms of the law.

[2] Respondents, however, claim that in construing the child labor law the court should look to its purposes, and that, as the main purpose is to secure the education of the child, that purpose had been fully accomplished in the case of Frank T. Sharon by reason of the fact that he had entered a public night school on November 13th, and was intending to there continue his education. No consideration of the general purposes of the law would justify a departure from the plain provisions of the law, nor is it true that education was the main consideration entering into the child labor law. The compulsory school law (Stats. 1905, p. 388, and its amendments, 1907, p. 95; 1911, p. 949; 1915, p. 762) provides for the attendance of all children between 8 and 15 years, with certain exceptions. The age and schooling certificate required by the child labor law is also required by the compulsory school law, but the main purpose of the child labor law is, as therein stated, to prohibit children under certain ages from engaging in certain forms of labor. Considerations of public health and safety enter into the general plan as well as matters of education.

[3,4] The employment being illegal, the question remains as to whether the illegality was waived by express agreement or necessary implication at the time the policy was issued, or thereafter. Respondents rely upon the well-established rule that conditions in the policy of insurance which would render it void ab initio, under facts known or readily ascertainable by the insurer, are waived by its issuance. But there are two insuperable obstacles to the application of that rule in this case: First, the policy was not void ab initio. It insured all employes legally employed, and upon the issuance of a proper age and schooling certificate would have at once attached to the employment in question, or would apply to any other employe taking the place of said employe. Second, the petitioner had no knowledge of the illegality of the employment in question (even assuming that the knowledge of the solicitor of the insurance was the knowledge of the company), and had a right to assume that the contract of employment was legal. For the petitioner was entitled to indulge in the presumption that the employer was innocent of crime, at least until notice of some fact inconsistent with such innocence. Knowledge of the exact age of the boy would not be inconsistent with innocence, because it was lawful to employ such a boy if provided with proper proof of his age, viz., the age and schooling certificate required by law. While it is true that fire insurance companies that have issued policies without written application and without inquiry have been held chargeable with notice of facts which might have been readily ascertained concerning the condition of the title to the property insured at the time of the issuance of the policy, and therefore to have waived conditions in the policy which would render the policy void by its terms, upon the facts, no case has been found that goes so far as to require the insurance company to ignore the presumption of innocence of crime.

[5] It is urged by respondents that the insurance in question was oral, and that, as it applied specifically to the employe it was binding. The utmost that can be said of the verbal agreement, ignoring all questions as to the authority of the agent, which may well be doubted (Sharman v. Continental Ins. Co., 167 Cal. 124, 138 Pac. 708, 52 L. R. A. [N. S.] 670), is that it was an agreement to insure or to issue insurance upon the usual terms contained in the company's policies. As was said concerning an agreement to insure by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Eames v. Home Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 621, 629 (24 L. Ed. 298):

"It will be presumed that they contemplate such form of policy containing such conditions and limitations as are usual in such cases, or have been used before between the parties. This is the sense and reason of the thing, and any contrary requirement should be expressly notified to the party to be affected by it."

The contention, therefore, that the insurance in question was oral, and therefore did not contain the clause confining liability to legal contracts, cannot be sustained.

[6] There is no significance in the issuance of the policy after the death of the employe, and the cases of fire insurance in which such issuance after a loss have been held to waive certain conditions do not apply to this character of insurance, where the policy is a continuing liability even after an accident, nor, for the same reason, does the acceptance or retention of the premium under the circumstances operate as a waiver.

On the whole, therefore, the contract of employment, in violation of the child labor law, was illegal, and not included in the policy of insurance (Mt. Vernon Co. v. Frankfort Co., 111 Md. 561, 75 Atl. 105, 134 Am. St. Rep. 636), and, there being no waiver or estoppel, the petitioner is not liable under the policy for the accident in question.

The award against the petitioner and the order substituting it for the employers are annulled.

HEFFNER v. GROSS. (L. A. 4693.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1919.)

1. TRIAL $\S$ 136(3)—WRITTEN AGREEMENT—QUESTION OF LAW.

The question whether a writing is upon its face a complete expression of the agreement of the parties under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1856, providing that when the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing it is to be considered as containing all the terms, is one of law for the court.

2. EVIDENCE $\S$ 442(1)—TERMS OF CONTRACT—PAROL EVIDENCE—PAROL AGREEMENT.

A contract importing on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement will be presumed to contain all the terms of the agreement, and parol evidence is inadmissible to add another term thereto under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1856.

3. EVIDENCE $\Rightarrow$ 442(6)—TERMS OF CONTRACT—PAROL EVIDENCE—PAROL AGREEMENT.

Where agreements for sale of land entered into contemporaneously with deposit of deeds in escrow contained a complete statement of terms of contract and left no uncertainty as to object or extent thereof, parol evidence was inadmissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, to prove vendor's agreement to resign from certain position and recommend purchaser as a successor, where no such promise was specified in written agreements.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER $\Rightarrow$ 50—ENTIRE CONTRACT.

Written agreements entered into by vendor and purchaser contemporaneously with deposit of deeds in escrow, together with escrow instructions and deeds, constitute an entire contract, having been executed at the same time and as part of the same transaction.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR $\Rightarrow$ 907(5)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—CONTENTS OF ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS.

Where neither escrow instructions nor the substance thereof is set forth in appellant's brief, such instructions will be presumed on appeal to contain no term not contained in agreements executed by the parties contemporaneously with deposit of deeds in escrow, and together with escrow instructions constituting one entire contract, in support of court's ruling that parol evidence of term not contained in agreements was inadmissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Harry L. Heffner against Fred W. Gross. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

F. W. Allender, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendant.

The complaint states a cause of action for damages from the breach of an agreement alleged to have been made as a part of the consideration for a contract between the plaintiff and defendant for an exchange of their respective tracts of land. The contract of exchange was made in November, 1910. The defendant owned a tract of 280 acres of land, on a certain 40-acre tract of which the Southern Pacific Railroad Company had an easement to maintain a well and pumping plant by which to supply water for its station at Ravenna. The defendant resided on the land. For more than 12 years prior to the said exchange, the said railroad company had employed the said defendant to operate its said pump. It is alleged that for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to make said exchange the defendant promised that if it were made he would resign his position as pumper operating said plant, on or about April 1, 1911, recommend the plaintiff as his successor, and use his best endeavors to secure for the plaintiff such appointment; that he (the defendant) had great influence in that behalf and that the employment of the plaintiff by said company would be continuous so long as the plaintiff attended to the duties thereof; that his compensation would amount to about $105 a month, including free transportation to and from Acton and Los Angeles, and that it would not require more than about two hours per day of his time; that plaintiff believed said representations and promises, and relying thereon he entered into the agreement and made the proposed exchange of land; that the defendant at the time of making said promise had no intention of performing the same, but that plaintiff did not know of said want of intention until April 1, 1911; that in pursuance of said agreement of exchange the plaintiff and defendant each executed to the other a deed for his own land; that thereafter, on April 1, 1911, plaintiff demanded of said defendant that he sever his connection with said company as operator of said pumping plant, but the defendant refused to do so and still refuses, and refused to recommend the plaintiff as his successor; that if he had resigned his position as pumper and recommended said plaintiff as his successor the said company would have employed the plaintiff in that capacity; and that by said refusal the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $10,000.

Upon the trial it was shown that a contract in writing was made between the parties, relating to the exchange, and the respective deeds were deposited in escrow with the Title Insurance & Trust Company, each grantor accompanying his deed with written instructions to said company directing the delivery thereof upon the happening of the conditions specified in the instructions. Each grantor signed the instructions which accompanied his own deed to the other party, but did not sign the instructions of the other party. All of these documents bore the date of November 10, 1910. The respective instructions to the escrow company contained no provisions concerning the pumping plant or resignation by the defendant of his position as pumper for the Southern Pacific Company. The promise of the defendant to resign his position and endeavor to secure the appointment of the plaintiff as pumper as aforesaid was not in writing. At the close of the evidence, the court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant on the ground that the contract of exchange between the parties had been reduced to writing; that it was presumed to contain all the agreements between the parties relating to said exchange and that the alleged contract in regard to the position of pumper for the Southern Pacific Company was not contained in said writings, but was entirely in parol; that it should have been incorporated in the writings if the parties intended to rely upon it; that as it was not so incorporated it must be wholly disregarded; and that consequently there was no competent proof of the contract alleged in the complaint for the breach of which the plaintiff sought to recover damages. It is claimed that this instruction was erroneous.

The record is presented in typewriting, under the provisions of sections 953a and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appellant does not in his brief set forth said escrow instructions, nor point out anything purporting to give the substance thereof. On examining the typewritten record, we find that the escrow instructions were introduced in evidence, but that they are not set forth in the record, either in terms or in effect. The plaintiff resided at Newport, in Orange county, and the defendant on his land, near Ravenna, in Los Angeles county. It appears from the parts of the record printed by the respondent in his brief that the escrow instructions did not constitute the entire contract between the parties, but that, as above stated, other writings were made between them. In the latter part of October, 1910, letters were exchanged between the parties concerning the deal; the plaintiff making a proposal, and the defendant a counter proposal. The letters state the proposed terms of exchange in detail, and they show that the parties were approaching an agreement. Reference was made to the agreement with the railroad company, giving it an easement to maintain and operate the well and pump, but the letters contain not a word concerning any proposed resignation by Gross of his position as pumper or the recommendation of Heffner, or of any one, as successor. On November 10, 1910, contemporaneously with the deposit of the deeds in escrow, the parties executed two agreements in writing, which are as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 10, 1910.

"This agreement by and between Fred W. Gross and H. L. Heffner, Witnesseth, that whereas the said Fred W. Gross has conveyed unto the said H. L. Heffner that certain ranch property known as the Gross ranch, at Ravenna, California, and comprising two hundred eighty (280) acres, more or less, and whereas, a certain parcel of the said ranch known as the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 14, is incumbered by a deed to Phoebe L. Parker and Rebecca Le Baron, who hold no title, and, whereas, said deed constitutes an incumbrance, it is therefore hereby promised and agreed by the said Fred W. Gross to remove the aforementioned deed by a quit claim from the parties thereto, within six (6) months from date of this agreement, and failing to do so within the time specified, it is herein agreed and promised by the said Fred W. Gross to quiet title to said forty (40) acre tract by process of law, and to use all power to press the suit to an early conclusion; it is further promised that the said purchaser, Harry L. Heffner, shall not be called upon for any portion of the expenses whatsoever.

"[Signed] Fred W. Gross.

"Approved: H. L. Heffner."

"Los Angeles, California, Nov. 10, 1910.

"This agreement, made and entered into this 10th day of November, 1910, by and between Harry L. Heffner and Fred W. Gross.

Witnesseth, that Harry L. Heffner, the purchaser of the Gross ranch, does hereby grant to Fred W. Gross thirty (30) days from November 15, 1910, in which to remove the live stock belonging to said Fred W. Gross from the ranch, and sixty (60) days from November 15, in which to remove the personal property owned by the said Gross. [Signed] H. L. Heffner.

"Approved: F. W. Gross."

Section 1856 of the Code of Civil Procedure puts in statutory form a well established rule of evidence in the following words, to wit:

"When the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms, and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interest, no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing."

[1, 2] The section contains certain exceptions, also well established in the law of evidence, relating to cases where it is sought to correct a writing or where its validity is in dispute, or where extrinsic evidence is necessary to explain an ambiguity, but as neither of these circumstances appear in this case the exceptions are not material. The proper construction of this section and its application to a case like the present one is stated in Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 330, 26 Pac. 831, 23 Am. St. Rep. 469, as follows:

"The question whether a writing is upon its face a complete expression of the agreement of the parties is one of law for the court, and the rule which governs the court in its determination has been well stated as follows: 'If it imports on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement—that is, contains such language as imports a complete legal obligation—it is to be presumed that the parties have introduced into it every material item and term; and parol evidence cannot be admitted to add another term to the agreement, although the writing contains nothing on the particular one to which the parol evidence is directed.'"

The following rule from Greenleaf on Evidence, § 275, is approved in that case:

"When parties have deliberately put their agreement in writing in such terms as import a legal obligation, without any uncertainty as to the object or extent of such engagement, it is conclusively presumed that the whole engagement of the parties and the extent and manner of their undertaking was reduced to writing."

See, also, Bradford, etc., Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 209, 48 Pac. 1083; Gardiner v. McDonogh, 147 Cal. 319, 81 Pac. 964; and Johnson v. Bibb Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 98, 73 Pac. 730.

[3-5] Under the rule thus stated, there can be no doubt that the court was correct in disregarding the evidence concerning the alleged promise and agreement of Gross to resign his position as pumper and recommend Heffner as his successor. The two documents above set forth contain a complete statement of the terms of the contract and leave no uncertainty as to the object or extent thereof. They appear to have been made as the conclusion of previous negotiations between them. We are uninformed as to the contents of the escrow instructions, but as it is possible that they may have contained other conditions of the contract and as said instructions together with the aforesaid agreements and the deeds were all made at the same time and as a part of the same transaction and must be taken together as constituting the entire contract between the parties, and further as we are bound to presume in favor of the court below, we would also, if necessary to support the ruling, assume that the escrow instructions were of such a character as to exclude the existence of any collateral parol agreement between the parties regarding said position as pumper or any other matter.

A number of other questions are discussed by the appellant concerning the amount of damages and the right to recover damages upon such a contract; but, as what we have already said is decisive of the case and requires an affirmance of the judgment, it is unnecessary to consider them.

The judgment is affirmed.

AHRENS et al. v. STEPHENS et al.

(L. A. 4696, 4695.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1919.)

1. BROKERS ⇐8(3)—AGENCY—PAYMENT OF COMMISSION.

Fact that broker negotiating loan received commission from borrower does not conclusively establish that he was agent for borrower.

2. BROKERS ⇐7—AGENCY.

A broker is ordinarily held to be agent of party who first employs him.

3. BROKERS ⇐8(3)—FOR WHOM ACTING—EVIDENCE.

In action between a mortgagor and mortgagee, evidence held to warrant finding that broker was agent of the mortgagee in payment to mortgagor of money for which mortgage was given.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇐171(2)—UNAUTHORIZED ACTS OF AGENT—RATIFICATION.

If agent lends money in manner and to persons other than originally contemplated by his principal, principal ratifies his acts by accepting mortgage and note given by borrowers.

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇐108(2)—LOANING MONEY—POWERS OF AGENT.

It was within implied authority of agent lending money for principal to exact condition that money should be paid out only as building for which money was borrowed progressed, under Civ. Code, § 2319.

6. MORTGAGES ⇐116—AMOUNT—ADVANCES.

Where mortgage and note were given for money for use in construction of building and conditions were exacted that money should be paid only as building progressed, mortgage was security for not more than amount really advanced.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank Jackson, Judge.

Actions by L. A. Stephens against Henrietta Ahrens, and by Henrietta Ahrens and Fred Ahrens against L. A. Stephens and Lulu B. Stephens. From judgments in favor of the Stephens in both actions, the Ahrens appeal. Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

J. W. Morin (L. W. Brooke, of Pasadena, of counsel), for respondents.

SLOSS, J. These appeals arise out of cross-actions based on the same transaction. The cases were tried together, and the evidence is brought up in a single bill of exceptions. Both actions and both appeals involve the rights of the parties under a note and mortgage made by Levi A. Stephens and Lulu B. Stephens, his wife, to Henrietta Ahrens, wife of Fred Ahrens. For present purposes, we may proceed as if there were but one plaintiff and one defendant in each case, and shall therefore refer to the parties respectively as Stephens and Ahrens.

In January, 1914, Ahrens had placed $4,000 in the hands of one Gaut, a loan broker, to be invested in mortgages; $1,800 still remained in Gaut's hands in May of the same year. In the latter month Stephens applied to Gaut for a loan, to be secured by mortgage of a lot of land upon which Stephens desired to build a home. The loan was negotiated on May 26, 1914, Gaut taking from Stephens a note and mortgage for $1,800, payable to Ahrens three years after date, with a provision authorizing the payee to declare the principal due on default in the payment of interest. Gaut arranged with Stephens that the money should not be advanced at once, but should be paid over in installments as the construction of the building progressed. The mortgage was immediately recorded, and it, with the note, remained in the possession of Gaut until his death, which occurred on September 14, 1914. At that date Gaut had advanced to Stephens the sum of $1,125.90 on account of the $1,800 covered by the note. The sum so advanced included payments on account of the building, together with charges for recording the mortgage, a commission to Gaut, and an installment of interest, figured on the face of the note, and paid by Gaut to Ahrens. Ahrens was not informed until after Gaut's death of the arrangement for partial advancements to Stephens.

The real question is whether the amount due on the mortgage is $1,125.90, the sum actually received by the mortgagor, or $1,800, the amount placed by Ahrens in the hands of Gaut.

Ahrens v. Stephens is an action to foreclose the mortgage for the full amount. The suit was commenced before the expiration of the three years' period named in the note, and Ahrens alleged, in the complaint, an exercise of the option to declare the entire principal due for nonpayment of interest. Interest had, however, been tendered on the sum actually received by Stephens. Accordingly, if this is all that was due, the action was premature. The court below took this view and gave judgment dismissing the action without prejudice to the right to begin a new suit.

The other action under review was brought by Stephens against Ahrens. In it the mortgagor sought judgment for the payment of $674.10, the portion of the $1,800 not received, or a decree of the court that the note is a valid obligation for $1,125.90 and no more. The trial court gave judgment declaring that the note and mortgage were valid obligations for the last-named amount.

Ahrens appeals from each of the judgments, asserting the right to foreclose for the full amount of the note.

[1-4] There is no question of the entire good faith of both parties. Ahrens parted with $1,800, and very naturally seeks a recovery of this amount. On the other hand, Stephens received only $1,125.90, and recognizes no obligation to repay more. In consequence of the interposition of a third party, one or the other must lose the difference between the face of the note and the amount received by the mortgagor, unless recovery can be had from Gaut's estate. As between the parties to these actions, which must be the loser? To answer this question we must ascertain whose agent Gaut was with respect to the money which remained in his hands; or, in other words, whose money was this balance? The court below found that Gaut was the agent of Ahrens and was not the agent of Stephens. The present appeals turn upon the correctness of these findings, which are assailed by the appellants. We think the court below was justified in finding as it did. The fact that Gaut received a commission for his services from Stephens does not conclusively establish his agency for Stephens. It is not unusual for lenders to exact a bonus or commission for making a loan, and Gaut may have been the agent of Ahrens, even though he was required to look to the borrower for his compensation. The broker is ordinarily held to be the agent of the party who first employs him. 9 C. J. 518, and cases cited. Under the evidence in this case the court was warranted in drawing the inference that Gaut was first employed by Ahrens. Ahrens placed this money in Gaut's hands for investment as early as January, 1914. Stephens, apparently, did not come in contact with Gaut until May of that year. Ahrens contends that, if there was any agency, Gaut's only authority was to purchase specific mortgages for cash. In this behalf reliance is placed upon certain receipts signed by Gaut. The receipt covering the transaction here in question was not delivered to Ahrens until some months after the mortgage was executed and delivered. It could not operate to limit the terms of an agency which had been created and carried out long before. It is true that similar receipts had been given on prior occasions. But these papers, not signed by the alleged principal, were mere acknowledgments that Gaut had received money "to apply as the purchase price on a certain first mortgage." They did not purport to define the scope of Gaut's authority, which was to be determined from the whole course of the transactions between him and Ahrens. The plaintiff, Mrs. Ahrens, herself testified that Gaut had made other loans for her, and that she and her husband had turned over $4,000 to him to loan. This testimony, considered in connection with the dealings between Ahrens and Gaut, warranted the court in concluding that the money had been placed with Gaut to be loaned on mortgage, and that Gaut was the agent of Ahrens for that purpose. If, as is suggested, an advance to others than Stephens was originally contemplated, Ahrens ratified Gaut's act by accepting the Stephens note and mortgage.

[5] In exacting the condition that the money should be paid out only as the building progressed, Gaut was making a provision in the interest of the lender rather than the borrower. Conditions of this kind, designed to enhance the security, are very commonly attached to mortgage loans made for the purpose of enabling the borrower to erect improvements upon the mortgaged land. The contract made by Gaut was therefore within his implied authority. An agent has authority, not only to do the things expressly authorized, but "to do everything necessary or proper and usual, in the ordinary course of business, for effecting the purpose of his agency." Civ. Code, § 2319.

[6] If the foregoing views be correct, the rights of the parties are the same as if Ahrens himself had conducted the transaction with Stephens. In that event the mortgage would undoubtedly have been security for no more than the amount really advanced. Savings Bank of So. Cal. v. Asbury, 117 Cal. 96, 48 Pac. 1081; Leahy v. Warden, 163 Cal. 178, 124 Pac. 825.

We do not find it necessary to review the cases cited by the appellants. They all present states of facts differing substantially from that before us.

The views expressed dispose of the substantial point common to both appeals. It is further contended that, even if the right conclusion was reached in the foreclosure action, there was no ground for the interposition of equity in the suit brought by the mortgagor. But the judgment in that suit does no more than to declare and establish the rights of the parties. No different results would follow from it than from the findings and decree in the foreclosure suit itself. If the judgment in Ahrens v. Stephens is to stand, the appellants are not aggrieved by the rendition of the other judgment.

Complaint is made of certain rulings on the admission of evidence; but, under the conclusions reached on the merits, these assignments become unimportant.

The judgment in each of the cases is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HOWARD. (Cr. 743, 2230.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1918. Rehearing Denied Jan. 16, 1919; On Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank, Feb. 17, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §1144(10) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS—READING INDICTMENT.

It cannot be said from statement in accused's brief: "The record here explicitly states that * * * the information was read by the clerk to the jury. In the body of the information thus read is an averment of the 'prior'"—that clerk of court read allegation as to prior convictions, which accused had admitted, contrary to Pen. Code, § 1093; it being presumed in support of the verdict that clerk did his duty.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1206(4) — REPEAL OF STATUTE—PRIOR CONVICTIONS—INDETERMINATE SENTENCES.

Provisions of Penal Code in relation to prior convictions as a basis for increased penalty are in no way affected by indeterminate sentence law, but are still in force and effect, with result that when a prior conviction is established by record in trial court it must be taken into consideration by state board of prison directors in determining duration of imprisonment under indeterminate sentence law.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §1172(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where it appeared from evidence without possibility of contradiction that burglary, if committed at all, was committed in nighttime, an instruction of court, defining burglary in first degree and stating that defendant was to be convicted, if at all, of burglary in first degree, did not prejudice any substantial right of accused.

4. BURGLARY §41(1)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a conviction of burglary in the first degree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Tom Howard was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a final judgment of conviction had in the superior court of Alameda county, by which the defendant was convicted of burglary in the first degree. The defendant's motion for a new trial having been denied, he appeals from the judgment and order.

[1] The defendant was charged with a prior conviction of assault to murder, and the first point made in his behalf is that, although he pleaded guilty to the prior conviction, that part of the information was read to the jury, contrary to section 1093 of the Penal Code. This point is stated as follows in appellant's brief:

"The record here explicitly states that the defendant admitted the 'prior' when arraigned; and that thereafter the information was read by the clerk to the jury, it being the duty of the clerk under section 1093 of the Penal Code to read the information to the jury. In the body of the information thus read is an averment of the 'prior,' contrary to the usual practice of annexing to the pleading a printed slip alleging the 'prior.'"

The practice in many superior courts is to allege the "prior" in the information, and this is the better practice. Upon the foregoing statement this court cannot say that that portion of the information alleging the prior conviction was read to the jury, for it must be assumed in support of the verdict that the clerk did his duty properly, and that he read only that portion of the information which was material at the time the information was read. In the absence of an affirmative showing that the "prior" was read, it will not be assumed that such course was taken.

[2] Appellant also makes the point that the legal effect of the indeterminate sentence is to repeal, by necessary implication, all the provisions of the Penal Code in relation to prior convictions as a basis for increased penalty. We cannot agree to this. It may well be that the Legislature, when it enacted the statute providing for the indeterminate sentence without directly repealing the provisions with relation to the allegation of prior convictions, had in mind that the establishment of the fact of prior conviction beyond a reasonable doubt, by an allegation in the pleadings and a conviction thereon, would be of value to the state board of prison directors, whose function in fixing the duration of imprisonment under the indeterminate sentence is practically the same as was that of the trial judge before the indeterminate sentence was adopted in this state, and as there is nothing in the indeterminate sentence statute repugnant to the provisions of the Code in relation to allegation and proof of prior convictions, we are bound to decide that those provisions which it must be conceded will be useful as above set forth were not repealed by implication by the indeterminate sentence law.

[3] As it appeared from the evidence, without possibility of contradiction, that the burglary, if committed at all, was committed in the nighttime, the instruction of the court defining burglary in the first degree, and stating that the defendant was to be convicted, if at all, of burglary in the first degree, did not prejudice any substantial right of the defendant.

[4] It is claimed that the evidence does not sustain the verdict. The commission of the burglary on the night of January 14, 1918, between 5 minutes to 7 in the evening and 10 minutes after 9 the same evening is shown beyond any doubt by the testimony of the complaining witness. A gold bracelet, a signet ring, a cigar case, and some beads, identified as the property of the complaining witness and stolen from the premises burglarized, were discovered on the 16th day of January (within two days after the burglary) in premises hired and occupied by the defendant. In these premises were also found a set of "burglar tools," consisting of two revolvers and a hand satchel containing four revolvers and two "jimmies," also skeleton keys and some more jewelry. The defendant was arrested on the evening of the crime charged, at about 9:15 o'clock, in Oakland, where the burglary was committed. When asked where he lived he stated that he resided in San Francisco, but could not give his address. When questioned further by the officers he admitted that he was living on Thirty-Ninth avenue, in Oakland, with two other persons named Harris and Graham. He was also asked if there was not another party named Egan, concerning whom he stated, "Oh, well, now what is the use of bringing an innocent man into it? Egan didn't have anything to do with this." He was unable to account for the property of Mrs. Blakemore being found in his rooms. He further refused to state where he was at the time of the commission of the crime, other than to declare that he was at the house of some friends whose names he did not wish to bring into the case. When he was further questioned by the officer, who asked, "Well, now, Tom, you must know something about this," defendant replied, "Now, what the hell is the use of asking me these questions? You have got enough here on me to hang me and keep me here as long as you want."

This evidence certainly sustains the verdict of guilty.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PER CURIAM. In denying the application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, we deem it proper to say that we are entirely satisfied with the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal that the provisions of the Penal Code in relation to prior convictions as a basis for increased penalty are in no way affected by the indeterminate sentence law, but are still in force and effect, with the result that when a prior conviction is established by the record in the trial court it must be taken into consideration by the state board of prison directors in determining the duration of imprisonment under the indeterminate sentence law.

COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al.
(Civ. 2206.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District. Division 1. California. Jan. 7, 1919.)

1. CERTIORARI ⇨37—RIGHT TO WRIT—"PARTY BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED."

Plaintiff, who was manager of a warehouse for the owner, a corporation, and brought action for writ of review requiring police judge to certify transcript of record in search warrant proceeding under which three cases of opium were taken from the warehouse, was not a "party beneficially interested" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1069, requiring application to be made by such party.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Party Beneficially Interested.]

2. CERTIORARI ⇨53—RETURN—SUFFICIENCY.

In proceeding for writ of review requiring police judge to certify transcript of record in search warrant proceeding, answer of police judge setting out in narrative form the history of the case did not constitute a return to the writ.

3. CERTIORARI ⇨53, 55—"TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD AND PROCEEDINGS"—FURTHER RETURN.

In proceeding for writ of review requiring police judge to certify transcript of record in search warrant proceeding, exhibits incorporated in petition held not to constitute the "transcript of record and proceedings" required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1071, so that court should have ordered further return in view of section 1075.

4. CERTIORARI ⇨60—DUTY TO FURNISH RECORD.

In action for writ of review requiring police judge to certify transcript of record in search warrant proceeding, it was the duty of plaintiff to furnish the record to be reviewed, and where he failed to use due diligence in having a complete record made out, his proceeding should have been dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Special proceeding for a writ of review by Louis James against the Police Court of the City and County of San Francisco and Morris Oppenheim, Judge of Department No. 4 thereof. Appeal from the judgment rendered. Judgment reversed.

John F. Davis, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis Bartlett and A. E. Graupner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from the judgment in a special proceeding for a writ of review. The lower court held that the defendant acted in excess of jurisdiction in issuing a search warrant, refused to quash the writ, and directed the return to plaintiff of the property seized.

Plaintiff and respondent was president of the Broadway United States Bonded Warehouse, in San Francisco, and manager thereof for the Danforth Warehouse Company, a corporation, the owner. There were in storage in this warehouse three cases of opium, in the original packages, the tins containing the opium having been stamped, replaced in the cases, and sealed by United States customs officers. This opium, so far as the record discloses, was owned by Look Tin Eli, who had purchased it from the original consignee, and who paid the duty on the same.

On the 9th of April, 1912, defendant Oppenheim, as police judge of the city and county of San Francisco, issued a search warrant under which F. A. Sutherland, a deputy sheriff, and a detail of police officers took and removed said opium from the warehouse and deposited it with the property clerk of the police department. Plaintiff, James, moved the police court for an order for the restoration to himself of the property so seized, which motion was denied. Thereupon he brought the action for a writ of review.

[1] One point made by appellant is that James was not a "party beneficially interested" within the purview of section 1069 of the Code of Civil Procedure. "The requirement that the application must be made by 'the party beneficially interested' has been construed to mean 'that in an application made by a private party his interest must be of a nature which is distinguishable from that of the mass of the community.'" Ashe v. Board of Supervisors, 71 Cal. 238, 16 Pac. 783. We are not willing to hold that James in an individual capacity comes within even the broad scope of the cases cited. Personally he was in no way beneficially interested.

The writ was directed to the defendant Oppenheim, judge of the police court, requiring him to certify a transcript of the record in the search warrant proceedings. No such return was ever made. Instead, so far as the record in the bill of exceptions shows, the only return was a copy of the petition for a writ of review filed in the superior court to which were attached certain exhibits, followed by a copy of the writ itself; the whole being attested by the clerk of the superior court as being a "full, true, and correct copy of the original record in the" superior court action for the writ of review.

The exhibits attached are copies of: (1) The motion for an order directing the property clerk to return the property to the defendant (in the search warrant proceedings); (2) affidavit of Louis James for such return;

(3) purported affidavit of F. A. Sutherland for search warrant which does not appear to have been sworn to before any one; (4) the search warrant; (5) order of the police judge denying the motion to quash the warrant and seeking return of the property seized. There is nothing to show that these exhibits are correct copies of the documents on file in the police court in the search warrant proceedings.

[2] The judge of the police court appeared by verified answer in the action for the writ, setting out in narrative form the history of the case and alleging "that no further proceedings have been had in said police court, other than as set forth in the petition for a writ of review." The court below, on motion of plaintiff, struck the answer from the files; one of the grounds of motion being that the purported answer did not constitute a return to the writ. In this the court was right.

[3] It thus appears that the superior court, in rendering the judgment, had no record of the inferior tribunal before it, other than the exhibits incorporated in the petition for the writ. This does not constitute the "transcript of the record and proceedings" required by section 1071 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The return being defective, the court could have ordered a further return to be made. Section 1075, Code Civ. Proc.

Respondent's position is not aided by his suggestion for diminution of the record by the stipulation of the parties, entered into in the court below, granting defendant time to prepare a return; for, as we have stated, none was presented.

[4] It was the duty of the plaintiff to furnish the record to be reviewed, and, failing "to use due diligence in having a complete record made out" his proceeding should have been dismissed. I. X. L. Lime Co. v. Superior Court, 143 Cal. 175, 76 Pac. 973.

Inasmuch as the petitioner was not beneficially interested to the degree required by the statute, to enable him to maintain the proceeding, and as the court below acted in excess of its jurisdiction in proceeding with no record before it, the judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. LIBERTY. (Cr. 711.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Jan. 6, 1919.)

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION §159(2) — AMENDMENT.

In prosecution for violation of Pen. Code, § 288, where indictment charged commission of lewd and lascivious acts upon female child by "placing the hands of him upon the private parts of her, etc.," amendment allowed by court in its discretion under section 1008, charging commission of crime by "placing hands and private parts of him * * * upon private parts of her," held not to prejudice defendant's rights by stating different offense.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Nick Liberty was convicted of committing lewd and lascivious acts upon person of female child in violation of Pen. Code, § 288, and from judgment of conviction and from orders denying motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment he appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. W. Cochrane, of San Francisco, and Ernest B. D. Spagnoli, of Jackson, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WASTE, P. J. The defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction under section 288 of the Penal Code, and from the orders denying his motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment.

The original information in the case charged the commission of the lewd and lascivious acts with and upon the person of a female child "of the age of 12 years by then and there placing the hands of him * * * upon the private parts of her, etc." During the trial of the case the court, in the exercise of the discretion granted by section 1008 of the Penal Code, directed the district attorney, over the objection of the defendant, to file an amended information which charged the offense committed "by then and there placing the hands and private parts of him * * * upon the private parts and legs of her, etc." The italics indicate the new matter inserted by way of amendment.

Appellant claims that the amending of the information was prejudicial to his rights, in that it charged an offense different from that stated in the original information. There is no merit in this contention. People v. Rippe, 32 Cal. App. 514, 163 Pac. 506; People v. Miller, 34 Cal. App. 641, 168 Pac. 574; People v. Donaldson, 171 Pac. 442. The record also sufficiently indicates that the evidence taken at the preliminary examination clearly showed the commission of the offense as charged in the information as amended. Furthermore, the court offered the defendant a reasonable continuance to enable him to prepare to meet the situation, but he did not avail himself of the opportunity.

One of the witnesses for the prosecution was shown to have made at other times statements contrary to her testimony given in court. The jury heard and passed on her credibility, and there was sufficient evidence in the whole case to warrant the conviction.

The criticism by the court of the prosecuting officer in connection with the amending of the information in no way prejudiced the defendant.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

(Civ. 2612.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS — 114(13) — CROSSING ACCIDENT—EVIDENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In action for injuries to an automobile in collision with street car, evidence held to support finding that plaintiff driver of car was contributorily negligent.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1011(1)—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The appellate court will not weigh the testimony or resolve conflicting circumstances shown in the proof, but will merely inspect record to ascertain that there is testimony to warrant court's conclusions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Don W. Carlton against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From judgment entered and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Oscar C. Mueller and Alfred Wright, both of Los Angeles (William W. Lovett, Jr., of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, A. W. Ashburn, and W. R. Millar, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff prosecuted this action for the purpose of securing damages caused to him by reason of a collision which occurred in December, 1913, between an automobile which the plaintiff was driving and a car of the defendant corporation. The damages sought to be recovered were the cost of repairs to the automobile. The accident occurred at the intersection of two streets. It was alleged that the defendant was negligent in the operation of its car. The court, sitting without a jury, made its findings of fact, in which it determined that, while the servant of the defendant was negligent in not looking in the direction from which plaintiff was coming, plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence as to bar recovery of damages. The appeal is from the judgment as entered and from an order denying to plaintiff a new trial.

[1, 2] At the point where the accident occurred, North Broadway street, in the city of Los Angeles, runs in a north and south direction. Daly street, upon which the tracks of defendant are located, extends easterly and westerly. North Broadway is a paved street. At the time of and just prior to the accident rain had been falling, and the pavement was wet. Plaintiff was proceeding northerly along the easterly side of Broadway. The car of the defendant came from the west on Daly street and crossed Broadway, on the south side of which it struck the automobile of the plaintiff. The right front corner of the street car struck the left front door of the automobile. Before the street car was stopped, the automobile had been carried along 7 or 8 feet into the entrance of Daly street. The occupants of the car were uninjured. We are asked on this appeal to say that the court was not justified in finding that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. After a careful reading of the entire transcript of the testimony, we conclude that it cannot be said that there was no substantial evidence to support the finding. This court has no function to weigh testimony or to resolve conflicting circumstances shown in proof. We can only look into the record for the purpose of ascertaining whether any testimony was furnished which would warrant conclusions to be drawn as the court has made them. At the point where the accident occurred the plaintiff, from the side of Broadway on which he was traveling, had the remaining width of that street between him and the corner from which the car emerged, to observe the car which struck him. He testified that when about 22 feet from the rail nearest him of the track upon which the car traveled he first saw the car at a standstill at the entrance of Daly street into Broadway, and that he saw it start up; that the motorman could have seen him easily, had he looked, and that had the motorman slowed down his car or stopped, plaintiff could have made the crossing without mishap. Observing the car continue on its course, and it being too late to cross in front of it, plaintiff testified that he endeavored to swing into Daly street to the east, and had partially succeeded when the right front corner of the car struck the left door of the automobile. He testified that he was going about 6 or 7 miles per hour, and that he thought the car was going about the same rate. There was other testimony that plaintiff was traveling 14 or 15 miles per hour, and that the car made the crossing at 3 or 4 miles per hour.

There was testimony that plaintiff's automobile skidded sidewise into the street car, striking it almost broadside. Plaintiff testified that he heard no alarm sounded by the car as it emerged from Daly street into Broadway; the motorman and conductor testified that the gong was sounded twice. As has been before noted, it was shown without dispute that the pavement was wet and consequently, we may assume the court concluded, slippery. Plaintiff testified that he had almost new "nonskid" tires on his rear wheels, and that up to that point, at least, he had been able to control his car without skidding. The fact that the automobile did skid, however, appeared by some of the testimony. This brief summary of the testimony, we think, is sufficient to show that the finding of the court as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff does not lack for support in the evidence. The minds of men may differ as to the conclusion on the matter as to whether, under a given set of circumstances, a person has acted with reasonable care. In the field of negligence it is an unusual case, indeed, which presents as to that matter such a clear and unconflicting state of facts as to compel a single conclusion.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1052(2) — CURING ERROR.

Error in allowing plaintiff to introduce in evidence an assignment, certificate of acknowledgment of which was insufficient, was cured by subsequent testimony of witness for defendant, who testified as to execution of instrument.

2. ASSIGNMENTS ⇨134 — DELIVERY OF INSTRUMENT.

Production by plaintiff of an assignment of a cause of action raises a presumption of proper delivery of such instrument to plaintiff.

3. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⇨12 — BLANKS.

Blanks of any description left in writings not under seal, may, except as prohibited by the statute of frauds, be filled in pursuance to parol authority.

4. ASSIGNMENTS ⇨41 — BLANKS IN INSTRUMENT — EFFECT OF DELIVERY.

If one signs an assignment containing blanks, he must intend it to be filled in by person to whom it is delivered.

5. ASSIGNMENTS ⇨73 — CONSTRUCTION.

An assignment of all of assignor's right, title, and interest in and to any claims or demands of any nature whatever held by him against the defendants, together with all moneys that might be received or collected on account of said claims, was not narrowed by the further assignment of demands against the defendants arising between certain dates.

6. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇨70 — RELATION — PROOF.

An attorney's authority to appear for the person, whom he holds himself out as representing, is presumed.

7. ASSIGNMENTS ⇨45 — DELIVERY TO ATTORNEY FOR ASSIGNEE.

Where an assignment covered claims in suit and the action was mentioned in the assignment, a delivery of assignment to plaintiff assignee's attorney was sufficient delivery to plaintiff.

8. WORK AND LABOR ⇨24(1) — PLEADING — VARIANCE — "MATERIALS."

Where a person was engaged to perform certain personal services, and furnished automobiles to carry men to do work on placer mining claims, and to haul water and supplies, which were necessary in the desert country, he could recover for use of automobiles in an action for value of services rendered and "materials furnished."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Materials.]

9. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇨449 — ACTION AGAINST ADMINISTRATOR.

In an action against an administrator, plaintiff need not prove nonpayment of his claim, where the administrator appeared and contested the claim, but did not set up payment in his answer.

10. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨123(3) — EVIDENCE — AGENCY — HIRING AUTOMOBILE.

In an action against owners of mining claims for services and materials furnished, evidence held to support a finding that defendants' agent had authority to hire plaintiff's automobile for the transportation of materials and men.

11. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨116(1) — APPARENT AUTHORITY.

An understanding between a general agent and his principal that the agent was to pay for certain things himself was not binding upon third persons dealing with the agent as such, unless called to their attention.

12. ASSIGNMENTS ⇨132 — ACTION BY ASSIGNEE — ISSUES AND PROOF.

In action on assignment of claim to Floyd C. Thomas, court properly sustained objection to admission in evidence by defendants what purported to be assignment of same claims to Eloyd C. Thomas, in absence of allegation that plaintiff was not real party in interest; a simple denial of assignment to plaintiff not being sufficient.

13. ASSIGNMENTS $\hookrightarrow$ 3—WAGES—CONSENT OF WIFE—STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 955, providing that married person cannot make valid assignment of wages without consent of spouse, was not retroactive, and consent was not necessary to an assignment of wages earned prior to taking effect of such act.

14. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT $\hookrightarrow$ 99—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—APPARENT AUTHORITY.

A principal may either expressly or impliedly confer authority.

15. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 882(12)—INVITED ERROR—REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS.

Where defendants requested that court instruct that, before plaintiff could hold them liable, jury must find that they, either expressly or impliedly, authorized the expenditure with which they were charged, such request was tantamount to a request that words "expressly or impliedly" be inserted in other requested instructions, relating to authority given agent.

16. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 296(2)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE OF ERROR.

Where to requested instruction that before plaintiff could recover, it must be shown that automobiles were hired from plaintiff by defendants, court added words "or their agent," there was no error, where jury was explicitly instructed in other parts of charge that agent must have acted in scope of his apparent authority before plaintiff could recover.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

17. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS $\hookrightarrow$ 448—SUBSTITUTION OF PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE—PLEADING.

Where in action ex contractu defendant dies pending determination in trial court, Code Civ. Proc. § 1502, contemplates serving and filing of a supplemental complaint, alleging presentation of claim against estate.

18. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1041(5)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where in action ex contractu defendant died pending determination in trial court and no supplemental complaint, alleging presentation of claim against estate was served or filed, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1502, such failure was harmless, where administrator was substituted as party defendant and appeared and contested claim and there was no controversy as to fact of due presentation of claim, and no point as to such is made in the petition for hearing.

Mr. Varney died in Los Angeles on the 15th day of March, 1914, and afterwards, on the 18th day of May, 1914, Floyd C. Thomas was substituted as plaintiff; the cause of action having been assigned to said Thomas.

The action was prosecuted for a balance of $3,670 alleged to be due for the reasonable value of services rendered and materials furnished to the defendants between the 17th day of December, 1911, and the 26th day of February, 1912, by M. A. Varney.

The complaint contains a second count, alleging that the defendants agreed to pay the sum of $4,170 upon the same considerations as those set forth in the first count, of which it is alleged that $500 has been paid.

[1] The case was tried by a jury, and resulted in a verdict of $2,810 against the appealing defendants. On the trial of the case the plaintiff offered, and the court admitted, in evidence a purported assignment from M. A. Varney to Floyd C. Thomas, as the basis for the plaintiff's right to recover. The proof of execution of the instrument which constituted the foundation upon which its introduction was predicated was a certificate of acknowledgment before a notary public which it is claimed was insufficient for this purpose because of failure to conform to the provisions of the Code as to the contents of such certificates. But Mrs. Varney testified substantially to the execution of this instrument by her husband, the assignor; and, although this evidence was introduced as a part of the defendants' case and long after plaintiff's case had been closed, it still cured any defect of foundation for the introduction of the assignment in evidence.

[2-4] It is contended that the assignment, at the time it was executed by Varney, was made in blank, that is to say, the name of the assignee was omitted therefrom. This name was afterward inserted. Varney received $1,000 for the assignment. The assignment was produced by plaintiff's counsel. Who, if any one, was authorized to deliver this to the plaintiff does not appear. But the fact that he did have it in his possession, and produced it at the trial, was evidence of its delivery in the form in which it was offered. And further it has been held that blanks of any description left in writings not under seal may, except so far as they may be prohibited by the statute of frauds, be filled in pursuant to parol authority, and it has been laid down generally that if one signs an instrument containing blanks, he must intend it to be filled in by the person to whom it is delivered. 2 Corpus Juris, § 119, p. 1242; Hunt, Adm'r, v. Adams, 6 Mass. 519. This is just in this case, for Varney received $1,000 in money for the assignment and unquestionably intended to convey his interest in the contract in suit by the assignment.

[5] The assignment covers a claim against the defendants from December 10, 1911, to the 1st day of February, 1912. The action is to recover on a claim for services rendered from the 17th day of December until the 26th day of February, 1912. It is claimed that the action omits 7 days' services, from December 10, 1911, to December 16, 1911, at $60 per day, the amount claimed, and which the evidence showed was the contract price for the services counted upon in the action. It is also contended that the action includes 26 days' services not covered by the assignment. Upon this statement it is contended that M. A. Varney retained an interest in the claim and in this suit, and that the representative of his estate is a necessary party to the action for a final determination of the same. But the assignment covers all of Varney's right, title, and interest in and to any claims or demands of any nature whatsoever held by him at the time against the defendants, or either or any of them, together with all moneys that might be received or collected on account of said claims by legal proceedings or otherwise. The provision of the assignment thus paraphrased is broad enough to include all of the claims of Varney against the defendants under the contract, nor are these provisions of the assignment narrowed by the further assignment of all Varney's demands against the defendants arising between the dates mentioned in the later paragraph of the assignment.

[6] An objection was made to the substitution of plaintiff in this action on the ground that the attorney who asked the substitution showed no authority to appear for the assignee, Thomas, plaintiff in the action. His authority to so appear is presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Plaintiff also now objects to the appearance of the attorney on the ground that the estate of Varney still retains an interest in the suit. That point is covered by the above-recited provisions of the assignment.

[7] It is also contended that there was no evidence that the assignment was delivered, but, as has been said, its production by the plaintiff's attorney raises a presumption of delivery that is sufficient in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. Objection is made to the sufficiency of the delivery on the ground that it was not delivered to Thomas, the plaintiff, personally. But it appears in evidence that it was delivered to his attorney, and as this action was mentioned in the assignment and as the assignment covered the claims herein sued upon, a delivery of the assignment to the attorney was a sufficient delivery to his client, the plaintiff.

[8] It is contended that the evidence shows that Varney did not furnish any materials in the sense that the term is generally used, but it appears in evidence that he did furnish two automobiles, driving one himself and an employé driving another, and that they used the automobiles to carry men to Searles Lake to do certain work on placer mining claims located by the defendants, and that Varney also, with these machines, hauled supplies to the men, carried them back and forth from the camp to the place where their labor was performed, hauled water for them, and did other necessary work of transportation in connection with assessment work being done for the defendants at Lee's direction. It appears that the country where the work was being performed was a desert country; that the water had to be hauled for the men from a distance, and it is fairly shown that the work done by Varney with his machine was necessary for the accomplishment of the assessment work, and also that it was of the reasonable value provided for in the contract. We think this brings the claim within the allegations of the complaint, even if no material, such as merchandise, was furnished.

H. C. Fursman, named originally as one of the defendants in the action, died pending the action and after the complaint was filed. Upon his death, his administrator was substituted in his place as the defendant, and a claim, duly verified, was presented to the administrator for the demands declared upon in plaintiff's complaint. The complaint was not amended after this claim was presented to the administrator so as to show its presentation, and it is claimed that this is a fatal omission from the complaint, and that therefore the judgment should be reversed. The proceedings for substitution of his representatives, upon the death of a defendant pending an action, are set forth clearly in sections 385 and 1502 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was proper for the court, upon the death of Fursman and the appointment of his administrator, and upon the suggestion of the death, to permit the substitution of his administrator in his place as a defendant. Code Civ. Proc. § 385. And it is provided in section 1502, Code of Civil Procedure, that if an action is pending against the decedent at the time of his death, the plaintiff must file his claim with the clerk, or present it to the executor or administrator for allowance or rejection, authenticated as required in other cases. And it is further provided that no recovery shall be had in the action unless proof be made of such filing or presentation.

It is nowhere provided in the Code that the original complaint must be either amended or supplemented to show this presentation of the claim. The purpose of a pleading is to advise the defendant of the cause of action claimed against him. The presentation of the claim to the administrator of the estate leaves nothing further to be desired, it seems to us, in the way of notice of the plaintiff's claim, where action is pending upon it, and the omission from the Code of a provision for the amendment of the pleadings, or the filing of supplemental pleadings to show the presentation of the claim in such cases, seems to us, under these circumstances, to be therefore both significant and proper, and we are of the opinion that the Legislature did not intend to make it necessary to file such amendment or supplemental pleading, and if it had so intended it would have so stated in the Code.

[9] It is further contended that the judgment must be reversed, because it does not appear that the claim was not allowed. If there was anything in this point, it seems to us that the answer would be that Fursman's administrator is here contesting this claim without having alleged that it was allowed, or having made any claim in the trial court that it had been allowed. The allowance of the claim by the administrator, if it had been allowed, was a matter of peculiar knowledge upon the part of the administrator, and, if he had allowed the claim, he should have set that fact up in his answer, or by way of amendment thereto. Appellants further contend that there is no proof of the nonpayment of this claim. Proof of the negative allegation of nonpayment of such a claim is not necessary. Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 Pac. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127; Miller & Lux v. Dunlap, 28 Cal. App. 313, 152 Pac. 309.

[10, 11] It is contended that the hiring of Varney's cars was not within the scope of Lee's authority. The facts on this subject are these: Lee located 175 placer mining claims of 160 acres each on or in the neighborhood of Searles Lake, in San Bernardino county, in the names of and for the benefit of the defendants in this action. They left him absolutely a free hand in dealing with the claims. According to their own testimony, they fully trusted him to do everything in and about the location of these claims, and for the protection of their rights therein. Huff, in his testimony, said that he left the assessment work to Lee to do, and Thompson testified that she requested Lee to do whatever was required in California as her agent. Without going into the details of these facts, it is clear that Lee was the general agent of the defendants for the purpose of doing the assessment work yearly, necessary to the preservation of the title to these claims. The three living defendants, Huff, Thompson, and Baker, testified that they had an understanding with Lee to the effect that he was to furnish the money to pay for the assessment work on these claims, and they contend that this limitation upon his authority was binding upon plaintiff's assignor, Varney. If it be conceded that this is true, there was still evidence sufficient to support a conclusion by the jury that their statements on the witness stand as to this agreement with Lee that he should pay for the assessment work were untrue, for it appeared in the verified complaint, filed in certain other litigation by the parties some time before their depositions were taken, that Lee paid $1,000 for them in their pro rata shares for this assessment work, and directed the further application by one Pack of the further sum of $1,836 "due and owing" to appellants, for the payment of this same work. This, in itself, negatives their statements that they had an agreement with Lee that he should bear the expense of the assessment work personally. But aside from this it has been held that such a limitation upon the powers of a general agent is not binding upon third persons dealing with him as such unless called to their attention. Whitton v. Sullivan, 96 Cal. 480, 31 Pac. 1115; Browning v. McNear, 158 Cal. 525, 111 Pac. 541.

[12] Defendants offered in evidence what purported to be an assignment of these same claims identical in form with the plaintiff's assignment, except that it ran to Eloyd C. Thomas instead of Floyd C. Thomas. Objection of the plaintiff to this was sustained. There was no allegation that plaintiff was not the real party in interest in this case except a denial of the assignment to him. There was nothing in the pleadings to apprise the plaintiff that this assignment to Eloyd C. Thomas, identical in all respects with the one offered by plaintiff, but for the slight difference in the spelling of the Christian name of the assignee, was in the possession of defendants or their counsel. It was not within the issues made by the pleadings. Objection was therefore properly sustained. Selleck v. Manhattan Fire Alarm Co. (Sup.) 117 N. Y. Supp. 964.

[13] Plaintiff moved to strike out the assignment after it had been admitted in evidence on the ground that the claim was for wages, and that Mrs. Varney's written consent was not attached thereto, and for the validity of this objection stand upon section 955 of the Civil Code, the material portion of which reads:

"No assignment of, or order for, wages or salary made by a married person shall be valid unless the written consent of the husband or wife of the person making such assignment or order is attached to such assignment or order."

Section 955, Civil Code, became a law and took effect on August 10, 1913. The cause of action sued upon here accrued in February, 1912. The section was not retroactive. The claim under the contract constituted property in Varney acquired before section 955 took effect, and the section not being retroactive, Mrs. Varney's consent to the assignment was not necessary. Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170; Duncan v. Duncan, 6 Cal. App. 404, 92 Pac. 310.

[14, 15] Appellants complain of many errors which they claim were committed by the court in instructing or refusing to instruct the jury. The first objection is that the court modified two instructions asked by the defendants, to the effect that the defendants might authorize the hiring of automobiles, by inserting thereafter the words "expressly or impliedly." This is not an incorrect statement of the law, and, besides, at appellants' request the court instructed the jury that before they could hold the defendants liable, they must find that they either expressly or impliedly authorized the expenditure with which they were charged. This was tantamount to a request by themselves for an instruction in effect like those modified by the court.

[16] To the instruction that before the plaintiff could recover, it must be shown that the automobiles were hired from Varney by the defendants, the court added the words "or their agent," and it is contended that this was erroneous because the court did not, in addition thereto, add that the agent must be acting within the scope of his agency.

The jury was explicitly instructed in other parts of the charge that Lee must have acted within the scope of his apparent authority before the plaintiff could recover. This covers the point.

It seems to us that the many other objections to the instructions given or refused by the court are all covered by the fact that the court gave these instructions in perhaps different form, but in effect. The jury was elaborately instructed, and it seems to us, after reading the entire charge, that no valid complaint can be made on this score.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. [17, 18] In denying the application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, we deem it proper to say that we do not approve of that portion of the opinion which substantially declares that where in an action ex contractu the defendant dies pending determination in the trial court, the law does not contemplate the filing of a supplemental complaint alleging the presentation of a claim against the estate as required by section 1502, Code of Civil Procedure. The proper practice undoubtedly is to serve and file such a complaint, alleging compliance with the statute. Proof of presentation of the claim as required is made by the statute essential to recovery, and this implies an allegation of the fact upon which issue may be joined if desired, and a finding where issue is joined. No point as to this is made in the petition for hearing, and the opinion shows that there is no controversy as to the fact of due presentation of the claim. No such prejudice appears as would justify a reversal on account of this matter.

DAMERON v. ANSBRO. (Civ. 1879.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 24, 1919.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS §18(8)—MALPRACTICE—EVIDENCE.

A verdict for damages against a physician for malpractice in treatment and rebreaking of a fracture held not without substantial support from evidence.

2. EVIDENCE §553(2)—EXPERT TESTIMONY—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS.

That a hypothetical question did not contain certain important facts did not render it erroneous, where it does not appear that their recital was necessary to enable the expert to form and express an intelligent opinion upon the matter at issue, particularly since additional facts may be brought out in the cross-examination.

3. TRIAL §83(1)—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS—OBJECTIONS.

Objection to a hypothetical question for failure to contain essential facts must specify the additional facts which ought to have been included.

4. EVIDENCE §506, 553(1)—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS—PHYSICIANS.

It is better practice to eliminate from a hypothetical question directed to a physician statements not a part of the treatment, and assume inferences therefrom as facts, and the question should not call upon the witness to interpret the meaning of statements which should be interpreted by the jury.

5. EVIDENCE §125, 553(3)—ACTIONS FOR MALPRACTICE—RES GESTÆ.

In an action against a physician for malpractice, the declarations of the defendant at the time of the treatment are admissible as a part of the res gestæ, and may be included in hypothetical questions, but such questions should be carefully framed, where the jury must depend largely upon the answers.

6. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — 18(7) — WITNESSES — 376 — MALPRACTICE — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

In a cross-action against plaintiff physician for malpractice, defendant's evidence as to whether plaintiff was a member of a county medical association was inadmissible to show whether plaintiff was indemnified against actions for malpractice; but if a question thereon was proper to show the interest or bias of the witness who was also a member, the statement of counsel as to insurance was likely to be prejudicial, and plaintiff should have been permitted to show that no such indemnity existed.

7. WITNESSES — 252 — EXPLANATION OF TESTIMONY — SKELETONS.

Whether a physician as an expert witness be allowed to illustrate his testimony by means of a human skeleton is a matter left to the sound discretion of the court, but where its use could not have aided the jury, denial of permission was not abuse of discretion.

8. EVIDENCE — 558(7, 8) — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF EXPERT.

In a cross-action against a physician for malpractice, the exclusion of a question asked a physician on cross-examination, intended to show that there was no bony union in the fracture which a doctor had rebroken, was error; the question being calculated to test the witness' competency and discredit his statement on direct examination that he had found such osseous callous.

9. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — 18(10) — ACTIONS FOR MALPRACTICE — INSTRUCTIONS.

In a cross-action against a physician for negligence in treatment of defendant, an instruction that the plaintiff was required to use that degree of skill and learning possessed and used by physicians in the same school practicing in the same or similar localities was proper.

10. TRIAL — 260(8) — INSTRUCTIONS — REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY OTHERS.

A requested instruction on the degree of skill and learning required of a physician held substantially covered by fair implication from several other instructions construed together, so that its refusal was not error.

11. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — 18(10) — ACTIONS FOR MALPRACTICE — EVIDENCE — INSTRUCTIONS.

As to the nature of the treatment and required amount of force that might be exercised to break adhesions in fractured bones, only an expert could properly determine and testify, but a requested instruction, implying that only an expert could testify as to the amount of force that actually was used and the method of treatment that was actually employed, was properly refused.

12. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — 21 — ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION — MALPRACTICE — INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action by a physician for professional services and for room, board, and nurse hire, in which defendant brought cross-action against plaintiff for malpractice, plaintiff was entitled to recover the reasonable value of the use of the room and board and nurse hire, regardless of whether he exercised ordinary care and skill in the treatment of defendant.

13. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — 18(10) — ACTIONS FOR MALPRACTICE — INSTRUCTIONS — NEGLIGENCE.

In a cross-action for malpractice against a physician suing for services, an instruction held erroneous as permitting the jury to apply its own standard of care, or that of each individual juror, to the treatment accorded the defendant by plaintiff, and completely ignoring the test fixed by law based upon the methods and practice of the school of medicine to which plaintiff belonged.

14. TRIAL — 296(1) — INSTRUCTIONS — CURE OF ERROR — CONFLICTING INSTRUCTIONS.

An erroneous instruction as to the standard of care required of a physician is not cured by correct, but conflicting, instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Actions by J. D. Dameron against James T. Ansbro for medical services, and for room, board, and nurse hire, and by James T. Ansbro against J. D. Dameron for damages for malpractice, were consolidated by consent and tried together; the complaint in the latter case being treated as a counterclaim and cross-complaint in the former. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Lafayette J. Smallpage, of Stockton, and Hartley F. Peart, of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. L. Levinsky, of Stockton, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. On the night of September 18, 1912, respondent while asleep in his buggy, was crossing the railroad track of the Southern Pacific Company about 16 miles from the city of Stockton, and he collided with a steam train traveling at the rate of 30 or 35 miles per hour. He was immediately taken at his request to the Dameron hospital in said city. He was examined by Dr. Dameron, the plaintiff and cross-defendant herein, and by Drs. L. E. and Harry Cross. One of the witnesses described Mr. Ansbro's appearance and condition as follows:

"His clothes were torn, dirty, and blood-marked. His face was skinned, grimy, and covered with blood from a wound in the forehead. His hand was also cut and bleeding. His legs were displaced and distorted; he was dazed and confused, suffering from traumatic shock. He constantly called for water and cigarettes."

After giving him the usual hypodermic treatment, the physicians made an examination to ascertain the extent of his injuries. It was found that he had, at least, ten fractures of the legs and arms as follows: A compound fracture of the left fibula; a comminuted fracture of the left fibula; a fracture of the internal malleolus of the left foot;

an oblique comminuted fracture of the left femur; a piece of bone had been broken off from one of the segments of this fractured femur, and this loose piece intervened between the separated parts; a comminuted fracture of the right femur, the injury being similar to that of the left femur; a multiple fracture of the fibula of the right leg consisting of two separate distinct fractures; a transverse fracture of the right tibia and a comminuted fracture of the right radius of the right arm. The legs of the patient were badly bruised and discolored; the compound fracture of the left fibula constituted an open wound, the fractured ends of the bone protruding through the flesh of the leg. His condition was very grave, and it was subsequently aggravated by the appearance and development of ether congestion of the lungs and also cystitis, which persisted for ten days with intense severity. Indeed, it is quite apparent that the case was a serious one, and to a layman it would seem somewhat remarkable that in a comparatively short period of time Mr. Ansbro was restored substantially to his former condition of health and strength. However, the final treatments were given by another physician at another hospital, after respondent became dissatisfied with Dr. Dameron; and the contention that the recovery was delayed by the negligence and carelessness of the latter merits attention and consideration. No complaint is made of the treatment in the early days of the trouble, but fault is found with the manner in which the fracture of the left femur was attempted to be reduced and corrected on September 30th, and, also, with the conduct of appellant in breaking up the adhesions in respondent's knees on November 25th. These are the two specific acts of negligence upon which respondent bases his claim for damages. They were alleged in his pleadings, and to these specified acts the evidence was addressed.

As to the first of these claims, we need say but little. The contention is that there was "bad apposition and also overlapping" of the fragments after the operation was performed by Dr. Dameron. The result was stated by Dr. Ellis Harbert as follows:

"There is about two inches overlapping there, and the bones are entirely displaced one on top of the other."

Incidentally involved in this affirmation of negligence is the further claim that Dr. Dameron made an erroneous diagnosis of the osseous union of the fracture, and that he negligently failed to adopt the "Lane plate" method of treatment. It is admitted by respondent that all of the remaining fractures were reduced and set in proper apposition, and that the treatment as to them by Dr. Dameron and his assistants was in accordance with the requirements of the best surgical skill. On the other hand, appellant asserts that the left femur was set in as nearly perfect apposition as was possible in view of the nature of the condition of that fracture and of the other fractures in the same leg.

We may state that respondent in his brief seems to attach little importance to this assignment of negligence, and it is quite apparent that it was a circumstance of slight moment in the determination of the cause. As a basis for affirmative relief it was, indeed, eliminated by reason of the fact that the operation was performed more than a year before the action was instituted by respondent. Section 340, Code Civ. Proc., subd. 3.

It is true that the court instructed the jury that it might be considered as a defense to appellant's claim for compensation, and it is possible that it had some effect upon the amount of the verdict. The stress, however, was laid upon the other assignment of negligence, and we deem it sufficient to say that it is a close question whether there is sufficient support for the claim that appellant in his treatment of said fracture failed to exercise that care and skill which the law and the accepted standard of professional competency demand of the physician and surgeon.

[1] On November 25th, Mr. Ansbro was etherized, and Dr. Dameron, assisted by Dr. Knight, who participated in the reduction of the fractures on September 30th, made a careful examination of all of the fractures which had existed as before stated.

It was ascertained that seven of the ten fractures had united and healed perfectly, but they concluded that the right tibia and the right and left femurs had failed to make an osseous and satisfactory union. As to this, though, we may say it is the contention of respondent that a mistake was made in the diagnosis and, as a matter of fact, a bony union had taken place in all the fractures. At any rate it was found that very dense adhesions had been formed in Mr. Ansbro's knees, due to the passive condition in which they had been kept for eight weeks and to the shock and force of the blow causing the fractures. After consultation, Dr. Dameron determined to reduce the adhesions before resetting the fractures. As to these adhesions, we may say that there is no doubt they existed, and all the expert evidence shows that it was of great importance that they be broken up. The showing is, also, that it was an opportune time for such treatment, and the particular method adopted by appellant to accomplish the purpose is sanctioned by the approved standard of surgical skill. It is not disputed that Dr. Dameron by manipulation overcame these adhesions in both knees. He then stimulated the fractures of the right femur and right tibia by rubbing together the ends of the bones, after which he set the fractures in apposition and placed a plaster of paris cast upon the leg. There can be no controversy that such treatment of these fractures is considered proper by those competent to decide the question. He determined, so he testified, that it would not be advisable to attempt to secure apposition in the left femur by using a plaster of paris cast, but that the same should be Lane plated.

He did not desire to perform this latter operation, however, without the express consent of Mr. Ansbro, and he, therefore, placed the fracture in a good temporary position while awaiting the patient's recovery from the effects of the anæsthetic. As we have already stated, his failure to thus plate this fracture is condemned by respondent, but appellant gives a plausible explanation of his conduct in that matter, and it appears from his statement that by reason of respondent's dissatisfaction with his condition, and the consequent change to the care and treatment of another physician and surgeon, appellant did not put in the Lane plate. There are some minor matters discussed in connection with this treatment of November 25th, but the only material and vital claim of respondent, as we understand it, is that all the ten fractures had made an osseous and permanent union, and that Dr. Dameron, in overcoming the said adhesions, was so careless and negligent in the amount of force which he used, that he refractured the right and left femurs and the right tibia in the same places as originally fractured. Indeed, respondent admits in his brief that Dr. Dameron is a good surgeon, and so recognized in the community, but he asserts:

"He was careless and negligent in his attempt to reduce the adhesions, and he used such force that he rebroke the fractures. He may have been skillful, but he was careless and negligent, and by reason thereof Ansbro is entitled to recover in this action."

The evidence offered in support of this claim consisted of certain admissions and statements of appellant, the testimony of eye-witnesses as to the manner in which the manipulation was performed, and the opinion of experts based upon hypothetical questions. It is earnestly insisted by appellant that the evidence is totally inadequate to support the conclusion that in said treatment he failed to manifest "that reasonable degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by others of his profession," or that he did not use or exercise ordinary care and diligence in the application of the skill and knowledge to accomplish the purposes for which he was employed. It is further claimed that in view of the entire record it is preposterous to assert that Dr. Dameron was guilty of malpractice, and that the verdict of the jury is manifestly wrong and unjust. It must be admitted that a remarkably strong defense to the charge was made by appellant. His witnesses put an entirely different construction upon certain circumstances and conditions from the view presented by respondent, and they negatived the existence of any fact that would have indicated negligence on the part of Dr. Dameron. It may be added that such an imposing array of expert witnesses as were called by appellant is seldom seen. They embraced some of the most eminent surgeons in California, and at least one of the most distinguished in the world, the late Dr. John B. Murphy of Chicago, and these experts were emphatic that the treatment of respondent by appellant, as disclosed by the facts recited in the hypothetical questions to said witnesses, was in accordance with the highest surgical skill and entirely beyond censure or reproach.

One carefully and impartially reading the voluminous record can hardly resist the conclusion that the verdict ought to have been the other way, but, without reciting the evidence, we think it cannot be said that the verdict of the jury against appellant has no substantial support.

[2, 3] Among the asserted errors of the trial court is its action in overruling an objection by appellant to a hypothetical question addressed to Dr. Harbert. The grounds of the objection to the question are stated by the appellant as follows:

"It is not based upon all the essential, vital and undisputed facts in the case, and hence is absolutely unfair. (2) It included conversations and statements which constitute hearsay and which required the expert witness to whom the question was addressed to determine the meaning and application of such statements, and to resolve and determine facts not specifically assumed. (3) The question included a purely hearsay statement attributed to the assisting surgeon."

The question is manifestly an important feature in the showing made by respondent. It constitutes the basis for substantially the only expert evidence offered on his behalf, and it, therefore, merits serious consideration. It is too long to quote in full, but we may state generally that it attempts to recite what was done and said by appellant in relation to the treatment of respondent, beginning with the 30th day of September and including the successful effort to break up the adhesions on the 25th of November, and it concludes with this interrogation:

"Assuming the statement I made to you to be true, how long, in your opinion, was the patient delayed in being restored?"

This was followed by a similar hypothetical question concluding as follows:

"Assuming that the facts I have stated to you are true, state whether or not, in your opinion as a physician and surgeon, that it was good surgery."

No doubt the appellant in the foregoing grounds of objection has suggested certain principles that are recognizable by the authorities as applicable to hypothetical questions. Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374, 122 N. W. 197; Miller v. Leib, 109 Md. 414, 72 Atl. 466; Dexter v. Hall, 82 U. S. (15 Wall.) 9, 21 L. Ed. 73; Swanson v. Hood, 99 Wash. 506, 170 Pac. 135. However, they must, of course, be regarded in the light of the particular facts of each case.

As to the first ground, it is true that certain important facts were omitted, as suggested by appellant, such as the condition of the patient, the existence of other fractures, the results obtained, the date of the injuries, and others, but it does not appear that the recital of these was necessary to enable the expert to form and express an intelligent opinion as to the treatment of the case. Considerable latitude must be allowed in the choice of facts as the basis of hypothetical questions, and if the question is fair, and understandable by the witness, it is not to be excluded because it does not comprehend all of the important facts in the case. Of course, additional facts may be brought out in the cross-examination, as was done herein, that might cause modification of the answer of the expert. Besides, appellant in his objection in the trial court did not specify any additional facts which ought to have been included. He should have done so if he desired to insist upon the point.

[4] The second and third grounds probably possess more merit. It is apparent that the question is somewhat faulty in the respects thus indicated. It included a statement alleged to have been made by Dr. Dameron "that there was good union, good results," and furthermore, that he stated, "It is broke," and again:

"Whereupon one of the persons in the room asked the physician in charge, or stated to him, 'Didn't you break that bone, in the leg,' and he said, 'No, that is the giving way of the adhesions.'"

The question also included the statement:

"Whereupon the physician who was assisting the physician in charge said: 'It is broken above the knee,' and the physician in charge of the patient made an examination of the place above the knee and said, 'It is broken,' whereupon those two physicians agreed that they would place a plaster of paris cast on the right leg."

Other statements of the assisting physician, "to go easy," and "I think you have worked long enough this time, I would put him under an anæsthetic some other time and reduce the adhesions gradually," were included in the question. These statements were not a part of the treatment, and they do not necessarily imply what was done. Of course, it is clear that the fact that these various statements were made could not possibly have affected the condition of the patient, nor in any manner have prolonged his recovery. It is only by interpreting these statements as evidence of careless conduct on the part of appellant could they be of any assistance to the witness in forming an opinion as to the character of the treatment. The better practice would have been to eliminate the conversations and assume the inferences therefrom as facts and upon that basis interrogate the expert. By the form of the question, the witness was called upon to interpret the meaning of these various statements, and thus to act in the place of the jury. This is not his province.

"The question should be so framed as to clearly present the state of facts which the counsel claims to be proved and which the testimony on his part tends to prove." Jones on Evidence (2d Ed.) § 370.

[5] It is true that declarations of the physician at the time of the treatment are admissible as part of the "res gestæ" and may be included in a hypothetical question. Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 32, 29 N. W. 832.

We do not say that it was prejudicially erroneous to so include them, but we think the other method the better practice. At any rate, the statements of the attending physician "to go easy," etc., should have been left out, as they were incompetent.

It was important that great care should be exercised in framing these hypothetical questions, as the jury undoubtedly based the verdict largely upon the answers of this expert.

[6] Dr. Priestly, a witness for plaintiff and appellant, testified that he was a member of the San Joaquin County Medical Association, and he was asked if Dr. Dameron and Dr. Fitzgerald were members. To this question an objection was made, and in reply to the court's inquiry as to the purpose of the question, counsel for respondent stated:

"The purpose of showing whether or not the association protects any member in litigation brought against him in a case of the present character."

It was not admissible for that purpose, as is virtually conceded by respondent. In Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 188, 118 Pac. 706, the Supreme Court said:

"Evidence that a defendant in an action for damages is insured against loss by reason thereof is not admissible (Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co., 140 Cal. 563 [74 Pac. 147]), and it would undoubtedly be improper for counsel for plaintiff to endeavor to get such a fact before the jury by question designed solely for that purpose."

In Shay v. Horr, 78 Wash. 667, 139 Pac. 604, it was said:

"We have held in these cases [supra] that it is improper to either directly or indirectly get before the jury any fact which conveys information that the defendant is insured against loss in case of a recovery against it, and that the striking of the answers conveying such information, and the instructing of the jury not to consider it, will not save the error."

It is altogether probable that the jury would be more inclined to find a verdict against appellant if it were believed that he was indemnified than if it were understood that he was to bear the burden alone.

Granting that the question was proper to show the interest or bias of the witness, the statement of counsel was likely to be prejudicial, and the court should, at least, have permitted appellant to show as a matter of fact that no such indemnity really existed. It has been held that even in examining jurors such questions are highly improper. Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., supra.

[7] The court refused to allow Dr. Dameron to illustrate his testimony by means of a human skeleton. We do not understand that appellant was thereby denied any legal right. It is a matter left to the sound discretion of the court. No doubt, such object may often be properly used to make more intelligible the testimony of an expert. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walker, 217 Ill. 605, 75 N. E. 520. It falls within the same category as pictures and diagrams. While we think permission might well have been granted, we cannot say that the use of the skeleton would have aided the jury in any manner, or that the court abused its discretion in denying the request.

[8] We think the court should have allowed the question asked of Dr. Harbert on cross-examination:

"Doctor, suppose an osseous callous had been thrown out around the seat of that fracture in the left femur prior to the time you Lane plated it, would it not have been good surgery—and assuming that the osseous callous had been distributed some week or nine days before, would it not have been good surgery to have placed the fragments in apposition and let nature's process of bone repair continue without putting on the Lane plate?"

The question was calculated to test the competency of the witness and discredit his statement on direct examination that he had found such osseous callous or, at least, it might have revealed the extent of such formation. The cross-examination had particularly in view the point that there was no bony union in that fracture. This was an important feature of appellant's position. If there had been no such union there could, of course, have been no refracture. From the direct testimony of Dr. Harbert, the jury would get the impression that there was an osseous union instead of a fibrous, as contended for by appellant, and any question calling for an answer that would modify or remove this impression was proper cross-examination. An objection was also sustained to several other similar questions on the same ground. The questions were asked, for the reason stated by counsel for appellant, "to show that if conditions existed as from the testimony of this witness that good surgery would have prompted a different course than that that was pursued." If good surgery would have prompted a different course upon such contingency, it could assuredly be argued that no such condition existed. The questions were somewhat similar to the cross-examination as to custom in Meyer v. McNutt Hospital, 173 Cal. 156, 159 Pac. 436.

[9, 10] Appellant complains of the action of the court in refusing certain instructions requested by him to the effect "that the question of whether Dr. Dameron was negligent in his treatment of Mr. Ansbro was to be determined by finding whether or not he possessed and used that degree of skill and learning possessed and used by physicians of the same school practicing in the same or similar localities." Such standard is clearly established by the authorities and the trial court might well have given that specific instruction. It is claimed by respondent that it was substantially covered by others which were given, and this is probably true. At least, it is a fair implication from several of them, construed together, that the measure of appellant's responsibility for his treatment of respondent is the standard for which he contends.

[11] Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing this instruction:

"As to whether or not Dr. Dameron, in breaking up the adhesions in the knees of Mr. Ansbro, on the 25th day of November, 1912, exercised ordinary care and skill in the method of breaking up said adhesions and in the amount of force used therefor are questions that you must look solely to the testimony of the medical and surgical expert witnesses to determine."

In support of his claim he cites McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870, and Houghton v. Dickson, 29 Cal. App. 321, 155 Pac. 128. In the former it is said:

"The authorities are practically uniform in holding * * * that as to what is or is not proper practice in examination and treatment, or the usual practice and treatment, is a question for experts, and can be established only by their testimony."

In the latter case, referring to whether plaintiff's elbow was dislocated, the court said:

"Whether or not defendant should, under the circumstances, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and skill, have discovered such condition, assuming it to have existed, was a question for expert testimony, and none was offered."

As to the nature of the treatment required and the amount of force that might be exercised to break such adhesions as existed in this case, manifestly, only an expert could properly determine and testify. But the instruction proposed was faulty as implying that only an expert could testify as to the amount of force that actually was used and the method of treatment that was actually employed. As to what occurred, of course, the nonexpert was as competent as the expert witness. If there had been no dispute as to the facts it would have been a question solely for the physicians and surgeons. But as we view the record, we think it was not error for the court to refuse the instruction; there being a conflict as to the facts.

[12] We think the court should have instructed the jury as requested by appellant, that Dr. Dameron was entitled to recover the reasonable value of the use of the room and of board and nurse hire, regardless of the question whether he exercised ordinary care and skill in the treatment of the defendant. It appears that the complaint filed by Dr. Dameron embraced two causes of action, one for his professional services in the sum of $250 and the other for room, board and nurse hire furnished to Mr. Ansbro at his request in the sum of $490. Another action was brought by Mr. Ansbro against Dr. Dameron for damages for malpractice, and these two actions were consolidated by consent and tried together, the complaint of Mr. Ansbro being treated as a counterclaim and cross-complaint. There was no contention that the board and nurse hire, etc., were not reasonably worth the amount charged, and their value to respondent was not affected by any question of the correct treatment of the fractures. The jury should have been instructed to allow plaintiff credit for those items.

[13] Probably the most serious error consisted in giving the jury the following instruction:

"It is not necessary for James T. Ansbro, the defendant and cross-complainant in this case, to prove gross culpability on the part of the plaintiff, Dr. Dameron, but proof of any failure to exercise proper care on the part of Dr. Dameron or any carelessness or negligence in the discharge of the duty assumed by Dameron is sufficient to enable the defendant and cross-complainant Ansbro to recover in this action, if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that Dr. Dameron was unskillful or careless or negligent, and that James T. Ansbro was injured thereby."

The instruction permitted the jury to apply its own standard of care or that of each individual juror to the treatment accorded the defendant by plaintiff. It completely ignored the test fixed by the law based upon the methods and practice of the school of medicine to which appellant belonged. In the recent case of Hesler v. Cal. Hospital Co. (Sup.) 174 Pac. 654, this instruction was condemned:

"To sustain an action it is not necessary to establish gross culpability; mere evidence of want of proper or ordinary care or attention and advice in the discharge of duty by a physician is sufficient to take the case to the jury."

[14] It is true that in that case some other objectionable instructions were given, but they could hardly be considered more confusing or misleading than the one given herein. According to the instruction the jury may have believed that Dr. Dameron possessed and exercised that degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians and surgeons of good standing practicing in that locality, and yet that he did not treat the case in a proper manner according to the views of the jurors, and, therefore, was liable for damages. It makes no difference that other instructions may have presented the correct standard, as that would simply be an instance of an irreconcilable conflict.

We think the judgment and order should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

ELL et al. (L. A. 4580.)(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1919.
Rehearing Denied March 17, 1919.)OFFICERS $\hookrightarrow$ 100(2) — INCREASING COMPENSA-TION DURING TERM—ROAD COMMISSIONERS—STATUTE AND CONSTITUTION.

Inhibition of Const. art. 11, § 9, against increasing compensation of county officer after election or during term, applies to compensation of road commissioners, whether or not county officers in a strict sense, since, under Pol. Code, § 4290, salaries and fees paid in full compensation for work of county officers apply to all services of every kind performed either as officers or ex officio officers.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Samuel E. Crow, Judge.

Action by the County of Santa Barbara against F. C. Twitchell and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Canfield & Starbuck and R. B. Canfield, all of Santa Barbara, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and E. W. Squier, Fred H. Schauer, and G. H. Gould, all of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment against them for $2,002.02. The suit was for money illegally paid by the plaintiff to defendant Twitchell, who was a supervisor and ex officio road commissioner of the county.

With the exception of the amount involved, the case is exactly similar to the four cases in which judgments were affirmed by the District Court of Appeal of the Second District. County of Santa Barbara v. Rucker et al., 35 Cal. App. 676, 170 Pac. 860. This court refused to transfer those cases, but counsel for appellants suggest that a re-examination of the questions involved may cause this court to change the views heretofore entertained by its members and to disapprove the conclusions of the District Court of Appeal.

After a study of the briefs and a re-examination of the admirable opinion of that court, written by Mr. Presiding Justice Conrey, we are still convinced that it correctly declares the law, and upon that authority the judgment in the case before us should be affirmed.

In one of his briefs learned counsel for appellants contends that road commissioners are not county officers, and that, therefore, the inhibitions of the Constitution do not apply to their compensation.

It makes no difference whether, as road commissioners, they are in a strict sense county officers or not, because salaries and fees paid in full compensation for the work of county officers apply to all services of every kind, performed either as officers or ex officio officers. Section 4290, Pol. Code. The compensation, therefore, is paid to the county officer, and is made to cover all services.

The judgment is affirmed.

LENNON, J. In this action to recover a commission of $3,227.55 for the alleged sale of real estate, the plaintiffs' cause of action arises out of the execution by and between the plaintiffs and defendants of two written

"This agreement, made this 19th day of November, 1913, between Katherine B. Fisk, Emma T. L. Beardslee, and Ovedia A. White, as executrices of the last will and testament, and of the estate of W. E. "Whereas the parties of the second part are anxious to sell said property for first parties upon commission of five per cent. of the selling price or such lesser amount as they may accept.

"Now therefore the parties of the first part hereby authorize the parties of the second part to sell the estate's interest in any of the above described contracts for the amount that first parties or said estate has paid on said contract or contracts, plus the amount of the commissions charged by second party for making such sale and that this contract shall be in full force for the period of sixty days from the date hereof and to remain in full force and effect thereafter until the expiration of ten days' notice, which notice shall be served in writing upon said second parties, and if at any time during the continuance of this contract the parties of the first part shall have an opportunity to sell said contracts, or any of them, the party of the first part shall have the right to sell this property upon giving the party of the second part ten days' notice in writing that they have an opportunity to sell the property and unless second parties make a valid sale within said ten days this contract shall expire at end of said ten days and first party can then sell the property.

"It is understood however that any sale of said property will be reported by first parties to the superior court of the county of Sacramento, state of California, for confirmation and it is not binding unless confirmed by said court.

"In case of sale first parties are to furnish abstract of title to property to date. (Showing clear title.)

The second memorandum of agreement, dated and executed December 12, 1913, is as follows:

"In consideration of the sum of one hundred ($100.00) dollars the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the undersigned hereby agree to accept the payment of the amount due upon the purchase of the real property hereinbefore described as the Swanston land upon the following terms:

"Five thousand ($5,000) dollars upon the delivery of a good and sufficient conveyance of the title of said land;

"Seven thousand ($7,000) dollars six (6) months from that date;

"One-half the balance one (1) year thereafter, and the remaining one-half one (1) year from the date of the last mentioned payment.

"Notes to bear interest at six (6%) per cent. and to be secured by a mortgage upon said property, subject to the trust deed now existing on said property in favor of C. F. Dillman and F. H. Pierce.

"Also subject to existing leases and leases heretofore agreed upon with lessees.

"Ovedia A. White.

"Emma T. L. Beardslee.

"Katherine B. Fisk.

"December 12, 1913."

In addition to setting forth the foregoing agreements in hæc verba, the plaintiffs' complaint alleged that the second memorandum was by the defendants executed and delivered by the plaintiffs as "a modification and addition to said agreement entered into November 19, 1913." Further, in support of the cause of action relied upon the plaintiffs' complaint alleged that:

On or about the 12th day of December, 1913, "the plaintiffs found and procured a purchaser for the land described in said 'Exhibit A' (the first memorandum) described as follows:

"An undivided one-half interest in 661.1 acres or thereabouts standing in the name of T. T. C. Gregory and said T. T. C. Gregory is the owner of the undivided one-half, subject, however, to trust deed to said land executed by said Gregory to certain trustees to secure payment of the balance of the purchase price to George Swanston.

The defendants demurred to the second amended complaint, generally, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and, specifically, that several causes of action were improperly joined and that the complaint was uncertain and ambiguous in many specified particulars. The demurrer by a general order was sustained, and, the plaintiffs refusing to further amend within the time granted for that purpose, judgment was accordingly entered for the defendants, from which the plaintiffs have appealed upon the judgment roll. It is argued, here, primarily, that both agreements evidenced the result of the ultimate negotiations of the parties which all the while related solely to a single subject-matter and were, notwithstanding the fact that they were separately made and contained no reference, express or otherwise, to one another, sufficiently shown as a matter of pleading, to be but a single indivisible contract which, when supplemented by all the allegations of the complaint, sufficed to support plaintiffs' cause of action.

[1-3] "Several contracts relating to the same matters between the same parties and made as parts of substantially one transaction are to be taken together." Civ. Code, § 1642. Obviously, the most certain criterion of the completeness of an individual writing will be found within the writing itself. It is therefore the general rule that two or more separately executed instruments may be considered and construed as one contract only when upon their face they deal with the same subject-matter and are by reference to one another so connected that they may be fairly said to be interdependent. Of course, this rule is not so rigid as to be absolutely unyielding in the face of a suggestion contained in the writing itself that it is not complete, or of circumstances which call for the application of a well-defined exception to the rule that "a contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates." Civ. Code, § 1647. This is so, we apprehend, because while ordinarily the subject-matter and identity of the parties to several instruments will be disclosed by a reference to the instruments themselves, nevertheless "the question as to whether or not several instruments between the same parties were * * * intended * * * to cover a single transaction, oftentimes cannot be ascertained from an inspection of the instruments themselves; and consequently, if the intention of the parties be either not expressed or doubtfully expressed, resort may be had to extrinsic evidence which will show the circumstances under which the several instruments were made, for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties concerning the scope and effect of the several instruments." Torrey v. Shea, 29 Cal. App. 313, 155 Pac. 820. It will be noted that the second agreement in controversy here recites the fact of "the purchase of the real property hereinbefore described as the Swanston land," but in that particular instrument the "Swanston land" was not theretofore or subsequently described, and consequently it may be fairly said that there is to be found in the second instrument itself a suggestion that, standing alone, it is not a complete expression of the intention and ultimate agreement of the parties concerning its subject-matter, and, therefore, under the exception to the general rule permitting the coupling of single separate contracts and then considering and construing them as one; the allegation of the complaint in the case before us that the second agreement in controversy was a modification of, and an addition to the first, might properly have been held as a matter of pleading to be good and sufficient as against a general demurrer. But even so, the complaint was otherwise deficient in its failure to aver those particulars of the transaction in suit, which, if existent, were vitally essential to the creation and pleading of a cause of action in the plaintiffs.

Thus it will be observed that the complaint, while first alleging that "the plaintiffs found and procured a purchaser for the land" described in the first agreement and later alleged that the plaintiffs had notified the defendants "that plaintiffs had procured a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase said land and pay the purchase price to said defendants," still it stopped short of alleging in terms, and we cannot say that it clearly follows by necessary implication from the complaint as a whole, that the plaintiffs had procured a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase the precise property designated in either or both agreements for the amount and upon the terms stated therein. In this behalf it will be observed that the first agreement expressly stipulated "that the purchaser shall and will hold first parties and the estate of Wm. E. Lovdal, deceased, free and harmless from all liabilities on said contract," and that the second agreement specifically set forth further terms upon which the sale was to be made; and the complaint does not allege that the purchaser procured was ready, able, and willing to purchase upon these terms. It is manifest that standing alone the allegation that "plaintiffs had found and procured a purchaser for the land described in said Exhibit A" will not suffice as an averment that the purchaser was ready, able, and willing to pay the amount designated and upon the terms specified in the contract, and that allegation is not effectively aided by the other and later allegation of the complaint that the plaintiffs "immediately notified the defendants that plaintiff had found and procured a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase said land and pay the purchase price to defendants." The latter allegation is no more, and evidently was not intended by the pleader to be anything more, than an averment of the fact that notice had been given the defendants of what the plaintiffs had done in the matter of procuring a purchaser, and that, we take it, is materially different from a direct and positive averment that the plaintiffs had in fact, as they said when notifying the defendants, "found and procured a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase said land and pay the purchase price to the defendants." But if it be conceded for argument's sake that the latter allegation may be fairly construed to be a positive averment of the fact that the plaintiffs had found a purchaser for the property, rather than merely an allegation, as the pleader intended, that the plaintiffs had given notice of the fact, still, and even though it be coupled with the first allegation and both allegations then considered and construed as a single averment, nevertheless, neither allegation separately or conjunctively, expressly nor by necessary implication, avers that the purchaser procured, was ready, able, and willing to pay the precise price provided in the first contract, namely,

"the amount that said first parties, or said estate, had paid on said contracts, plus the amount of the commissions charged * * * for making such sale" at the times and in the manner and upon the terms prescribed in either or both contracts. This, the plaintiffs were required to do, and then allege in direct and precise terms the doing of it, in order to have a good cause of action upon the contract. The doing of anything less than, or different from, that designated in the contract, will not suffice, and the material fact of the procurement of a purchaser at the price and upon the terms fixed by the contract must be stated in unequivocal language and not be left to inference. Moore v. Besse, 30 Cal. 570, 572; Booth v. Moody, 30 Or. 222, 46 Pac. 884; Jacobs v. Shenon, 3 Idaho (Hasb.) 274, 29 Pac. 44; Hayden v. Grillo, 26 Mo. App. 289; Hardy v. Sheedy, 58 Or. 195, 113 Pac. 1133; Wright v. Beach, 82 Mich. 469, 46 N. W. 673; Newton v. Donnelly, 9 Ind. App. 359, 36 N. E. 769; Weitbree v. Morris, 62 Colo. 345, 163 Pac. 1119. This is so because the contract in suit fixed the right of the plaintiffs to remuneration (Merriman v. Wickersham, 141 Cal. 567, 570, 75 Pac. 180), and a "broker's contract for the sale of real estate is not performed, nor is his commission earned, until it affirmatively appears that he had procured * * * a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy the property offered for sale upon the terms * * * and at the price fixed by the" contract (Douglas v. Spangenberg, 23 Cal. App. 294, 137 Pac. 1103; Newton v. Donnelly, supra; Masten v. Griffing, 33 Cal. 111; Dolan v. Scanlon, 57 Cal. 261).

[4] While it is true that prima facie the contract in suit does not in terms disclose the precise price for which the defendants' interest in the property was authorized to be sold and may be said to be uncertain to the extent that extrinsic evidence would be required to show what was "the amount" the defendants had paid for their interests in the property to be sold, nevertheless, that "amount," whatever it may have been, was presumably within the knowledge of the pleader, and therefore it was incumbent upon him by appropriate averments to plead the price paid for defendants' interest in the property, and then allege that was the price which the purported purchaser had agreed to pay. Not having done so, and the contract having been pleaded in hæc verba, the complaint as a whole is permeated with the uncertainty of the contract and the fact that evidence might have been admissible to remove that uncertainty, will not suffice to cure the defect in pleading. Durkee v. Cota, 74 Cal. 313, 16 Pac. 5.

The complaint not measuring up to the requirements of the contract in the particulars stated, the defendants' demurrer was properly allowed for that reason alone, and therefore it will be unnecessary for us to show, as we might readily do, that the complaint was sadly obnoxious to the many assignments of obvious uncertainty and ambiguity in many material matters presented by the demurrer, all of which might have been easily corrected by several simple allegations.

[5-7] Counsel for appellants urge that even though it cannot be held that the complaint states a cause of action in the particulars previously stated for a commission because it does not show that the plaintiffs had performed in precise pursuance of the terms of the contract, still it is insisted that the complaint sufficiently states a cause of action for the sum sued for upon the theory that "on or about" December 12, 1913, the defendants, when notified of plaintiffs' procurement of a purchaser, had, as is, in effect, alleged in the complaint, expressly stated that they would not consummate a sale with any purchaser the plaintiffs might procure and did "on or about" the 20th day of December, 1913, within the time limited as the life of the contract, sell and convey to the city of Sacramento the land described in the complaint without giving at any time prior to said December 20, 1913, the 10 days' notice in writing to the plaintiffs called for by the first agreement, that they, the defendants, had an opportunity to sell the property described in that agreement. These facts, admittedly true for the purposes of the demurrer, show that the defendants had in effect wrongfully revoked the agency created by the agreement—that is to say the defendants having by the agreement undertaken not to exercise their inherent power to revoke the agency save upon certain prescribed conditions, the exercise of that power without compliance with those conditions was in violation of the agreement and therefore wrongful. But it will be observed that the complaint does not allege that such revocation operated to retard or prevent the plaintiffs' performance of the contract, and, of course, it could not have operated to deprive the plaintiffs of the compensation contracted for or its equivalent in damages for the nonperformance of the contract if, in keeping with the contract and within the time therein limited, they had notwithstanding the revocation, procured a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase at the price, and upon the terms prescribed by the contract; or if it had been made to appear that plaintiffs, within the time limited by the contract, "had in good faith expended money and labor in advertising for, and finding a purchaser," and were at the time of the revocation "in the midst of negotiations which were evidently and plainly approaching success." Mechem, Law of Agency, § 209; Blumenthal v. Goodall, 89 Cal. 251, 26 Pac. 906; Hawley v. Smith, 45 Ind. 183; Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 275;

Stewart v. Murray, 92 Ind. 543, 47 Am. Rep. 167. In other words, the defendants would not be relieved from the liability of the contract by a capricious refusal to consummate a sale of the property or by their voluntary act which precluded the possibility of performance on their part, and this is so "upon the familiar principle that no one can avail himself of the nonperformance of a condition precedent, who has * * * occasioned its nonperformance." Moses v. Bierling, 31 N. Y. 462; Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441. So, therefore, whether the complaint be considered as proceeding upon a cause of action on the one hand for commissions earned and on the other hand for damages to the extent of such commissions, because of the alleged prevention of performance, it fails in either event to state a cause of action, in this, that it does not allege that the plaintiffs did, within the time limited by the agency contract, either before or subsequent to its revocation, procure or could have procured, within the time limited, a purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase for the price and upon the terms stated in the contract. Waterman v. Boltinghouse, 82 Cal. 659, 23 Pac. 195.

The judgment is affirmed.

GREEN v. CARIBOU OIL MINING CO.
(S. F. 7971.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 19, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⇨108—ISSUE OF STOCK TO OFFICER—REMEDIES AS TO INVALID STOCK—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Where a certificate representing shares of stock purporting to be owned by a corporation's secretary and bearing the signature of its vice president and secretary and its seal was accepted as collateral security for a loan made to the secretary, and the certificates were false and fraudulent, the company must suffer rather than the innocent purchaser.

2. CORPORATIONS ⇨108—ISSUE OF CERTIFICATES—INVALID STOCK—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

One accepting as collateral security a stock certificate purporting to be owned by the secretary of the corporation, could rightly rely upon the secretary's honesty, the signature of the vice president, and upon the verity of the instrument bearing the corporate seal, and where the certificate was false, the company and its officers were negligent in permitting its issue, and the company was liable in damages therefor.

3. CORPORATIONS ⇨104—TRANSFER OF STOCK—ENTRY UPON CORPORATE BOOKS.

The provision of Civ. Code, § 324, to the effect that a transfer of shares of stock "is not valid except as to the parties thereto until the same is" properly entered on the books of the corporation, cannot be made to justify a corporation in disputing the authority of its own officers to issue certificates of stock within the apparent scope of their authority, which it is admitted they did issue.

4. CORPORATIONS ⇨104 — DENIAL OF OFFICERS OR AGENTS' AUTHORITY—ISSUE OF CORPORATE STOCK.

A corporation is estopped from disputing the authority of its officers to issue a certificate of stock within the apparent scope of their authority after it has passed to an innocent purchaser for value, although not estopped from disputing the validity of a transfer, or from refusing to enter the same on its books.

5. CORPORATIONS ⇨108 — SALE OF STOCK — BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

The rule that a third person dealing with an officer of a corporation concerning corporate property for a consideration wholly personal to such officer is put upon inquiry does not apply to the taking of a certificate of stock as collateral security for a loan to the corporation's secretary, where the certificate on its face appeared to have been the personal property of the secretary for more than two months prior to the pledge.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by P. R. Green against the Caribou Oil Mining Company, a corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Upon rehearing after judgment by the District Court of Appeal. Judgment of the superior court reversed.

Byrne & Lamson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for respondent.

H. U. Brandenstein, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

SHAW, J. From further consideration of this case upon the rehearing, after decision in the District Court of Appeal, we are satisfied with the opinion of that court written by Mr. Justice Beasley, and we now adopt it as the opinion of this court. It is as follows:

"This is an appeal from a judgment which followed an order of the court sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint, the plaintiff declining to further amend.

"The complaint charges, in substance, that one James H. Lewis executed his promissory note to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,750, for which plaintiff loaned Lewis the sum named, and secured the note by what purported to be a certificate representing 3,500 shares of stock in defendant company. Lewis was at the time of this transaction the secretary and transfer agent of the defendant. The certificate was taken from the company's stock certificate book, bore the signature of Lewis as secretary, and of J. H. Dearn as vice president, the president of the company being unable at the time to act, and also bore the company's corporate seal. The consideration for the note was paid to Lewis by the plaintiff upon the faith and security of this certificate, and because he believed it to be a valid certificate of stock in the defendant company. The note was never paid, but has been reduced to judgment, and the stock was at all times worth more than the principal and interest of the note. Lewis is insolvent. By reason of the fact that the certificate is fraudulent the plaintiff is unable to sell the certificate as pledgee and thus realize the amount of his note. It is further charged that the stock was fraudulent, and that the execution and issuance of the certificate were unauthorized by the defendant; that Lewis procured the issuance of the stock for the purpose of enabling him to hold himself out as the owner thereof; that for a long time prior to the date of issuance of this certificate the president and vice president and directors of the defendant corporation negligently failed to examine or supervise the certificate books and records of stock transfers of the corporation; that an examination of those books and records, if made, would have disclosed to those officers before that date that numerous other fraudulent stock certificates had been in like manner issued by Lewis; that Dearn, the vice president, negligently affixed his signature to the certificates without trying to ascertain or knowing whether they were regularly issued or fraudulent or not, or whether issued from the treasury of the defendant pursuant to authority, or in exchange for surrendered certificates, and without making any inquiry or investigation whatever. The prayer of the complaint was for judgment for the $1,750, and some other relief not important at this time.

[1, 2] "The case is one of first impression in this state, but the question has been determined in favor of the plaintiff in well-reasoned opinions in the following cases, among others, namely, Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co. v. Citizens' National Bank of Cincinnati, 56 Ohio St. 351, 47 N. E. 249, 43 L. R. A. 777, National Bank of Webb City v. Newell-Morse Royalty Co., 259 Mo. 637, 168 S. W. 699, and Havens v. Bank of Tarboro, 132 N. C. 214, 43 S. E. 639, 95 Am. St. Rep. 627. It seems hardly necessary to recite the facts of those cases, as they were substantially the same as the facts of this case. In each of them the court placed its decision upon the application of the simple and just principle of the law that whenever one of two innocent parties must suffer by the action of a third, he who by his negligence has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must bear it; and in Havens v. Bank of Tarboro, supra, it was added that where the secretary issued the certificate and delivered it to a third party who acted without knowledge and in good faith, paying value for it, such party had the right to act upon the presumption that the representations of such certificate were truthful, and not false and fraudulent, and, the company having confided to him the trust of executing the business the agent was held out to the public as competent, faithful, and worthy of confidence; and that though he deceived both his principal and the public by forging and issuing false certificates, it is but reasonable that the principal, who placed him in the position to perpetrate the wrong, should suffer the loss. These cases are rich in quotable arguments supporting the doctrine that the defendant company, under the circumstances of this case, is liable to the pledgee of its stock where the stock was fraudulently issued by its officer intrusted to issue it. The plaintiff in this case relied, and had a right to rely, upon three things in taking this certificate in pledge. He had first the right to rely on the honesty and fidelity of Lewis as secretary of the corporation; second, he had the right to rely upon the signature of the vice president of the corporation; and, third, he had the right to rely upon the verity of the instrument presumed from the fact that the corporate seal was attached thereto. One purpose of the signature of the vice president to the certificate was, among others, to protect the public and the company against possible fraudulent acts of the secretary. That the vice president of this company was culpably negligent, as were the officers of the company also, in not looking to their books appears from the allegations of the complaint. It is therein alleged that they negligently permitted the secretary to issue this stock, and negligently failed to examine their books theretofore, and that had they so examined them the fraud would have been discovered, and the company and the plaintiff protected against it.

"In order to escape the logic and rule of the cases cited the defendant relies upon three or four cases, the first of which is Moore v. Citizens' National Bank, 111 U. S. 156, 4 Sup. Ct. 345, 28 L. Ed. 385. That case is distinguishable from the case at bar in this, that the court found, according to the fact, that the offending secretary was the authorized agent of the plaintiff in securing the issuance to her of certain stock of the corporation. From a misconception of the facts of that case and the rule therein laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States have arisen three or four other cases and numerous text-book quotations, where the general rule of law, that where one deals with an agent concerning a matter affecting his personal interest he is not justified in relying on the agent's statements and actions as being those of the principal, but must inquire of the principal himself, or of some disinterested agent having the power to speak for him, is applied to conditions of fact very like those now under consideration. But the application of this principle of law to such facts has been brought about, as we have said, by a misapprehension of the scope of the case of Moore v. Citizens' National Bank, supra, and of the facts with which it dealt. We do not deem it necessary to discuss those cases further than to say that they have in our judgment unduly extended the application of that rule, and that it is not applicable to the facts of the case at bar.

"It follows that the demurrer should have been overruled."

[3, 4] In its petition for rehearing the defendant insists that the doctrine stated in the foregoing opinion is contrary to the provision of section 324 of the Civil Code, to the effect that a transfer of shares of stock "is not valid, except as to the parties thereto, until the same is" properly entered on the books of the corporation. In support of this claim it refers to Whitfield v. Nonpareil, etc., Co., 67 Wash. 286, 123 Pac. 1078, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 187, a case which, though cited in the briefs, is not noticed in the opinion of Justice Beasley. That case supports the respondent's claim, but we cannot agree with its reasoning. It rests in part on the fact that the Washington statute (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3693) similar to section 324, was enacted long after the rule was established holding a corporation liable in damages for issuing a false certificate of stock, from which the inference was deduced that the purpose of the statute was "to relieve the corporation of the hardship of the rule as well as to protect it from liability from fraudulently issued stock." The fact stated may have been true of the Washington statute, but it is not true of the California statute on the subject. Section 324, enacted in 1872, was, so far as this provision is concerned, but a re-enactment of the statute of 1853. So far as we are aware or have been advised, the rule referred to was not established by any decision until many years later than 1853. The statute could not have been intended to change a rule that had never been announced. Furthermore, we think the Washington court mistook the basis of the liability of the corporation for fraudulently issued stock. It does not arise from anything that occurs in the making of a subsequent transfer. It comes from the false issue itself, which is the act of the corporation officers within the apparent scope of their authority, which, in effect, is a representation by the corporation itself to the purchaser from the original holder that the false stock is genuine. The rule does not estop the corporation from disputing the validity of a transfer or from refusing to enter the same on its books, but only from disputing the authority of its own officers to issue stock which it is admitted they did issue.

[5] The main reason for ordering a rehearing was a doubt whether the rule could be applied to a case where the officer to whom the stock had been issued pledged it to borrow money for his own use. We are satisfied that this has no bearing on the question. Where a third person deals with the officers of a corporation concerning the property of the corporation for a consideration personal to such officer and not for the benefit of the corporation, such third person, being aware of, or having reasonable cause to believe, the fact, is bound to inquire as to the authority of such officer to make such disposition of the corporate property. But here the stock was not the property of the corporation. On its face it appeared to have been the property of Lewis for more than two months prior to the pledge. The fact that it had been issued to Lewis, and that he was then the secretary of the corporation, did not give cause for suspicion that it belonged to the corporation, for it is usually the fact that the leading officers of a corporation own stock therein, and the certificate was itself the solemn declaration of the corporation, under its seal, that the stock belonged to Lewis, a declaration on which third persons had the right to rely. 1 Morawetz on Corporations, § 185.

The proposition that a corporation is estopped to deny that its officers were authorized to issue stock after it has passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser for value, and the proposition that the mere fact that it was issued to one of its own officers, raises no suspicion of their want of authority to issue it, are both decided in Smith v. Martin, 135 Cal. 251, 67 Pac. 779. See, also, Anglo-California Bank v. Granger's Bank, 63 Cal. 364.

The judgment is reversed.

J. B. HILL CO. v. PINQUE. (S. F. 8173.)
(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1919.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨55(2), 111—
FORFEITURE OF TENANCY—WASTE.

Commission of waste is not ground for forfeiture, the landlord's remedy being an action for damages.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨108(1)—FOR-FEITURE OF TENANCY—NONPAYMENT OF RENT—DEMAND.

Where a lease provided for a monthly rental of $100 and landlord had agreed to a reduction and had for some months accepted such reduced rent, landlord's demand for rent, without specifying particular amount, was not the specific demand required by law on which to base forfeiture where lessee refused payment.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨108(1)—FOR-FEITURE OF LEASE—DEMAND.

Lessee's refusal to pay rent does not authorize forfeiture of lease, in the absence of a proper demand for rent.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨108(1)—FOR-
FEITURE OF LEASE—DEMAND—WAIVER.

A waiver of proper demand for rent will not be implied for the purpose of forfeiture of lease because a forfeiture from its very nature cannot take place by consent and is not favored by law.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨105, 134(3)—
RESCISSION OF LEASE—USE OF PREMISES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1930, where lease provides that premises are to be used for fruit and vegetable business, lessee's use of the premises for other purpose renders lessee liable in damages, or authorizes lessor to rescind lease.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT 134(3)—USE OF PREMISES—GARAGE.

Where lease provided that premises were to be used for a fruit and vegetable business and that other business might be conducted with specified exceptions, lessee's use of the premises for a garage was authorized under the lease, where such use was not expressly excepted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the J. B. Hill Company against Mary E. Pinque. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Everts & Ewing and South & Ross, all of Fresno (W. E. Simpson, of Fresno, of counsel), for appellant.

Harris & Hayhurst, A. M. Drew, and Drew & Drew, all of Fresno, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought to recover the possession of certain premises, together with damages. The complaint was in two counts. The first set up, in ordinary form, a cause of action in ejectment. The second alleged that the premises, consisting of a storeroom, had been held by the defendant, Pinque, under a written lease from one Keosheyman, and that the plaintiff, who had acquired the interest of Keosheyman, had elected, under the terms of the lease, to terminate it, and forfeit the rights of the defendant.

Judgment went in favor of the plaintiff for the recovery of the premises, for $300, the value of the use and occupation, and for damages in the further sum of $509. The defendant, Pinque, appeals.

The lease from Keosheyman to Pinque was dated February 1, 1915, and ran for a term of nine years at a monthly rental of $100. It contained the following provisions material to this appeal:

"That said storeroom is to be used by lessee for the wholesale, retail, and commission fruit and vegetable business in all its branches."
* * *

"It is further agreed that in the event lessee desires to make changes or improvement for the convenience of any business she desires to conduct, that she has the right so to do at her own expense, except lessee agrees not to change or conduct any business, like in kind to business in lessor's property at time of change, or conflicts with any lease in force at date hereof, between lessor and other persons, or open up shoe or clothing store within three months from March 1, 1915.

"It is further understood and agreed in the event lessee shall make default in the payment of rent or refuse to comply with the terms, covenants and conditions of this lease on her part to be kept and performed, then said lessor reserves the right to terminate this lease and oust and eject lessee therefrom and that all moneys theretofore paid shall be retained by lessor as damages and rental on said premises."

[1] The second count sets up a forfeiture of the lease on the ground of nonpayment of rent. It also alleges that plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $2,000 by the defendant's failure to keep the premises in good repair, by her occupation of them as an automobile garage, and by her removal of a portion of the foundation of the building, thereby causing the floor to settle, and injuring and damaging the premises. The only ground of forfeiture asserted in the complaint is the nonpayment of rent. The other acts charged against the tenant are set up merely as a basis for the recovery of damages. They could not, in any event, justify a forfeiture. There is neither allegation, proof, nor finding that the tenant was under any obligation to repair. The defendant had the right, as we shall show hereafter, to use the premises as a garage. The commission of waste is not a ground of forfeiture, the landlord's remedy being an action for damages. Chipman v. Emeric, 3 Cal. 273.

The findings follow the allegations of the complaint, except that they assess the damage for failure to repair, for use as a garage, and for injury to the building, at $509.

It was the settled rule at common law that a demand for payment of the exact sum due was a necessary prerequisite to a forfeiture of a lease for nonpayment of rent. 24 Cyc. 1355. The same rule was laid down in this state at any early date (Gage v. Bates, 40 Cal. 384; O'Connor v. Kelly, 41 Cal. 434), and these decisions have never been questioned (Mossl v. Fairbanks 19 Cal. App. 355, 125 Pac. 1071). The finding of the court is:

"That there came due as rent, August 1, 1916, * * * the sum of $100, and said plaintiff did on August 1, 1916, demand payment thereof; that said defendant wholly failed, neglected, and refused to pay said rent."

[2, 3] The appellant contends that the evidence does not sustain the finding that such a demand was made, and the record, we think, requires that this contention be upheld. It appears without conflict that some months prior to August, 1916, the defendant had begun to use the premises as a garage. The portion of the building above the leased store was occupied as a lodging house, and its tenants were disturbed by the noise resulting for operations in the garage at night. The plaintiff agreed with the defendant that, if she would maintain quiet in the garage during the night hours, a reduction of $15 monthly in the rent would be made, and for three or four months prior to August the sum of $85 per month had been paid and received as the rent of the premises. On August 1st the vice president of the plaintiff corporation called to collect the rent. According to his own testimony, he did not demand any specified amount, but "just asked for the rent." Under the strict rules governing attempts to enforce forfeitures, this was not the specific demand required by the law. It was at least doubtful whether the plaintiff was demanding the payment of $100 a month, as specified in the lease, or of the lesser sum fixed by the subsequent agreement of modification. At any rate, it certainly cannot be interpreted as a precise and specific demand for $100 per month, and this is the demand which the court found to have been made. Cases holding that a demand is not necessary where the defendant denies the relation of landlord and tenant (Smith v. Shaw, 16 Cal. 88; Simpson v. Applegate, 75 Cal. 342, 17 Pac. 237) have no application here. The defendant did not at any time deny the tenancy. On the contrary, she alleged, in her answer a tender of the rent due, and repeated the tender at the trial. The respondent argues that any defect in the demand became inconsequential because, as the court finds, the defendant refused to pay the rent. The plaintiff's own evidence shows that the refusal was not absolute, but that the tenant merely declined to pay pending an adjustment of a dispute concerning the plaintiff's right to make certain changes in the premises. But, even if the defendant had flatly refused to pay the rent, this would not authorize a forfeiture of her lease, in the absence of a proper demand. "Nor for the purpose of forfeiture, will a waiver of the demand ever be implied, because a forfeiture, from its very nature, cannot take place by consent, and it is not favored by the rules of law." Gaskill v. Trainer, 3 Cal. 334, 340.

[4] The plaintiff therefore failed to establish a ground for the forfeiture of the lease and recovery of the premises for nonpayment of rent. The judgment for damages for withholding the premises must fall, of course, with the judgment for restitution.

[5, 6] We find ourselves unable, likewise, to sustain the part of the judgment awarding damages in the sum of $509. By the lease the premises were let to be used for the fruit and vegetable business. If the instrument had stopped with this provision, it might well be claimed that any other use by the lessee would render her liable in damages, or authorize the lessor to rescind the lease. Civ. Code, § 1930. But the lease contains the further clause, above quoted, that the lessee may change the premises or conduct any other business, except certain specified kinds. The prohibited occupations thus excepted do not include the maintenance of a garage (in the absence, at least, of any claim that such business "conflicted with any lease" to other persons), and it is perfectly clear, therefore, that the lessee was not precluded from using the premises as a garage.

If the defendant was liable for waste in removing a portion of the foundation of the building, there is no separate finding of damage resulting from this act. The court finds that the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $509 by the defendant's occupation of the premises as a garage and her removal of a portion of the foundation. There is no way in which we can determine what portion of this damage the court attributed to one or the other of the supposed wrongful acts. Since, as we have seen, the defendant did not violate the terms of the lease by using the premises as a garage, the award of damages based in part on that ground cannot stand.

A number of other points are raised by the appellant, but the views we have expressed render any extended discussion of them unnecessary. The question of the sufficiency of the complaint may be obviated by an application to the court below for leave to amend. Any error that may have been committed in admitting in evidence the assignment of the lease from Keosheyan to the plaintiff without laying the proper foundation is not likely to recur upon a second trial.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE'S LUMBER CO. v. McINTYRE & PETERS et al. (L. A. 4516.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1919.)

PARTNERSHIP §55—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—EVIDENCE.

In an action against defendants as partners for materials furnished to one of them, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that a partnership existed.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by the People's Lumber Company against McIntyre & Peters, a copartnership, and others. Judgment for plaintiff against G. T. McIntyre and William L. Peters for material furnished to McIntyre, from which William L. Peters appeals. Reversed.

Purington & Adair and McFarland & Irving, all of Riverside, for appellant.

George E. Farrand, of Los Angeles, and Bowker & Sheridan, of Ventura, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff recovered a judgment against McIntyre & Peters for material furnished to McIntyre, it being alleged that Peters was a copartner of McIntyre, and the court so finding. Peters appealed from the judgment. At the time of the contract between the plaintiff and McIntyre the plaintiff had never heard of the alleged partnership, and its claim is therefore not based upon the theory of an ostensible partnership, but upon the character of the actual agreement between Peters and McIntyre. The finding that such partnership existed is attacked for lack of evidence to sustain it. The evidence is substantially without conflict. Both Peters and McIntyre were witnesses in the case, but neither testified to the existence of a partnership agreement between them. Their business relations were fixed by a written contract dated October 9, 1911. This contract did not of itself create a partnership, but it is claimed that the subsequent letters and dealings between the parties justify the conclusion that a copartnership existed at the time plaintiff contracted with McIntyre.

To understand the relations of the parties it will be necessary to consider the terms of the written agreement and the evidence of subsequent dealings between the defendants. The written contract provided for a tentative arrangement between defendants for the doing of certain street work under the Vrooman Act, by contract, in the city of Pomona, and for the subsequent formation of a partnership, at the option of appellant, if the profits of such contracting in Pomona were sufficiently persuasive. The agreement also provides that, if no one of the street contracts at Pomona is awarded to McIntyre, that contract should terminate at once at the option of said Peters, or that "it may be continued in force until a contract other than the Pomona contract is secured by McIntyre satisfactory to said Peters, in which case the agreement and conditions of this contract in relation to the Pomona contracts shall be in force as to the new contract so far as they can be made to apply."

In pursuance of the agreement, McIntyre bid upon the Pomona contract, and Peters advanced money in connection therewith, as required by said contract, $1,400 of which was in the form of certified checks to be deposited with the bid as required by law. The agreement provided that Peters furnish $3,500—$2,100 in addition to the certified check. This was done, and the $2,000 was used in Pomona. A part of it was used for the purchase of the equipment used at Pomona, and $450 was taken as the monthly salary of McIntyre. McIntyre failed to secure the Pomona contract, and the certified check was returned to Peters October 31, 1911, and, as the contract provided, the relation between the parties thereto might have been terminated at the option of Peters, but McIntyre later showed an intention to try to secure other contract work. On February 6, 1912, McIntyre wrote Peters from Ventura, "I have landed two contracts for two reservoirs. C. M. Miller and I are going to contract together. He has a great part of the necessary equipment," and asks for a draft of $1,400. This was sent February 8th, in a letter wherein Peters said, "This to apply on contract same as the $2,000 sent you at Pomona." On February 11th McIntyre acknowledged receipt of the $1,400 "to apply on contract of October 9th," this being the preliminary written contract between Peters and McIntyre. He also sent an account showing $2,805 cash on hand, which, with $120 worth of equipment, three months' allowance to McIntyre of $450, and attorney's fees paid on the street contracts at Pomona, aggregated $3,400, which was the total amount up to that time received from Peters, and added "in regard to the work here and our arrangement. The contracts are taken in the name of G. T. McIntyre and C. M. Miller. We will both give our time to the work and make an even split in the profits. When we get to going here there will be an abundance of this work." The next letter to Peters, eight months later, states:

"I have been endeavoring to get things in such condition as would permit me to make some sort of statement to you in regard to my financial condition, but seemingly I have either been too busy or too tired to attempt the task. * * * My experience with Miller was very unsatisfactory. * * * I have finished my third job for the Del Norte Water Company and the engineer is now reconciling the account for this work. At present, rather than giving you a detailed statement of expenses and receipts, it may be sufficient to say that I have almost a complete equipment for this sort of work—all sizes of pipe tools from 6 inch to 20 inch, concrete mixer, engine and pump for serving the yard with water or elevating the same to reservoir sites for construction, 36-foot sand elevator, etc., * * * and, when things are balanced, about $600 in the bank. This is a very poor financial showing when compared with the talk we had in Riverside nearly a year ago but to me it seems very good, having put my foot in it with Miller as I did on the start. * * * Will try and be more decent in the future."

The next letter from McIntyre to Peters was January 11, 1913, and stated:

"I have endeavored for some months past to acquire time to give you an idea of what we are doing in Ventura county. The little stake taken up in that country last April has not done so well as we at first anticipated, but during the season we have completed paying for an equipment such as is necessary there, amounting to approximately $4,000, and have cash resources to more than clear the original stake put into that section. It seems that it is impossible for me to get time enough even to give myself an accounting, but think this will be not altogether discouraging to you."

Six months later Peters pressed for further information, and on June 14, 1913, wrote to McIntyre, stating:

"I have not heard from you for a number of months as to how you are getting along with the business. It is hardly business for me to allow things to drift so without at least keeping in some touch with matters. I wish you would send me a report of what you are doing, what your assets are, what are the prospects and a general account of things."

January 17th McIntyre replied, saying, among other things:

"I have frequently planned sending you an intelligent statement of conditions here and always put off for a time when an inventory could be taken and no liability on hand. That time is now at hand. I am finished or have practically finished the work for the Del Norte Company and the individual owners. Have done considerable business with fair results but not so good as I had hoped. I will get to you a definite statement by Monday or Tuesday of next week. At present I may say that roughly estimating I have an equipment worth about $4,000 up and may be more. And when cement bills are cleaned up for this camp will have about $1,400 cash in bank. I am moving now on to a very promising job." Then followed a statement of camp equipment, and reference is also made to a new job. "It is a $14,000 job. Will get you some definite matter by Tuesday next. I look for better results on the coming work."

June 23, 1913, McIntyre writes, saying it is impossible to get off the promised statement. October 24, 1913, McIntyre writes Peters, inclosing a statement of the financial condition of the business in Ventura county. He says:

"This showing is probably not as good as I have desired but on the whole under the conditions, it looks fair to me. Since we commenced operation in that county it has seemingly been very difficult to get a good organization. This you probably understand, as you have the same conditions to deal with at times. * * * No books have been kept. The segregated time sheets are filed and bills are paid by voucher when possible, but a great deal of money has been spent almost promiscuously, and I feel that the loss has been very great. * * * I frequently think that I would like to see you and give you more information regarding the investment, but somehow when I get into town every moment is taken," etc. "I trust the statement will not be discouraging and will endeavor to send you an itemized list during the coming week."

Then follows a statement in which is included the item of $1,700.71 due the plaintiff lumber company.

McIntyre, called as a witness, testified:

"I made profits on the contracts which I have had since I signed this agreement with Mr. Peters, but there was no division of profits made between Mr. Peters and myself, and no statement or statements of profits were made to Mr. Peters other than the statements introduced in evidence. Mr. Peters and I never had a settlement with reference to the contracts. I think that I had at times enough money to pay the debts incurred in the business carried on under my agreement with Mr. Peters. I believe at that time I had enough money in the bank to meet such indebtedness, but I am not positive."

It is obvious from this correspondence that McIntyre never asked Peters to exercise his option to enter into the copartnership. Peters was unable during all this time to get any adequate statement from McIntyre as to the condition of his affairs. Under the contract Peters had a right to wait for the performance of some contract which, in substitution for the Pomona contracts, was to determine the question as to whether or not the business was profitable. McIntyre entered into a partnership agreement with Miller for the doing of the work, and never made Peters any statement from which Peters could determine whether or not the business was profitable. The fact that Peters showed an interest in prospective contracts and apparently attempted to direct McIntyre's attention to possible contracts, in view of the written agreement between the parties and the investments already made by Peters, is of no significance. McIntyre never referred to Peters as a partner. He was transacting his business either in his own name or in the name of McIntyre & Miller. There is no evidence and no claim that Peters ever by any direct statement or agreement exercised the option given him to create a partnership. No partnership agreement was entered into between them. No adjustment of their rights under the first contract was ever made. In urging that there was a partnership the plaintiff is in no better position than McIntyre. The original agreement between the parties is ample explanation for the connection of Peters with McIntyre, and Peters was entitled to rely upon the fact as to third parties that he was not being held out as a partner, and therefore was justified in a continued effort to secure from McIntyre some evidence that a partnership would be profitable to him. One other transaction between McIntyre and Peters requires notice. In January, 1914, Mr. Peters went upon a contractors' bond for McIntyre, amounting to $5,000, and thereafter signed notes with McIntyre, but not in any firm name, for $4,000, for the purpose of financing the contract covered by the bond. Mr. Peters testified that he consented to sign the bond solely upon the representation of McIntyre that he would be able to finance the job without any assistance from Peters. A few days after the bond was signed, however, McIntyre came to Peters, stating that he could not finance the job and asking that he sign the above-mentioned notes, which was done. Apparently the notes were paid from the proceeds of the contract in question, with the exception of $778.89. Under the contract of October 9, 1911, it was agreed that Peters should advance money for the purchase of equipment, and that that equipment should be purchased in his name and be his property. On December 24, 1914, Peters suggested to McIntyre a settlement of their affairs, by the terms of which Peters was to convey all the equipment to McIntyre and take a chattel mortgage back for the $3,400 advanced and for the $778.89 remaining due on the note that was signed by Peters, making a total of $4,178.89. Mr. McIntyre apparently acquiesced in the plan, but never carried it out.

In considering whether or not Peters ever exercised his option to enter into a partnership with McIntyre under the terms of the contract of October 9, 1911, other provisions of that contract must be noted. It was recited in that contract:

"Whereas McIntyre is desirous of engaging in the general contracting business, particularly that of street paving and cement contracting, and has not funds at his command to do so, and desires to interest Peters in said business with him, and said Peters wishes to engage in said business, if it is proven to be profitable to him and the conditions of same are proven satisfactory to him, and whereas said McIntyre represents himself as a person skilled in the estimation and execution in an economical and profitable manner of such contracting work, and whereas said McIntyre has estimated on two street paving jobs now being opened to bids at Pomona, Calif., and desires to submit bids on same, now therefore in order to determine whether the said contracting business is profitable enough and satisfactory so as to appeal to said Peters as a permanent investment, the said parties agree with each other as follows."

It was further agreed that the bids on the Pomona job should be made at a price that would net a profit of 20 per cent., namely, a profit of $4,000. Peters was to advance $3,400, $3,100 of which was to be used in the purchase of tools, "said equipment to be bought in the name of and remain the property of said Peters." Arrangement was then made with reference to the disposition of the assets in the event that Peters did not desire to continue. But it was provided, among other things, that if Peters desired to continue in the contract business, he was to receive the entire net profits until half his investment had been repaid, whereupon the equipment was to belong to the copartnership. These profits were to be paid upon the completion of each contracting job. Books of accounts were to be kept. Peters was to have the deciding voice as to all matters until he had received sufficient profits to repay him half of his investment. McIntyre never called upon Peters to elect whether he should or should not go on with the business. No showing of sufficient profits was made to justify Peters in entering into a copartnership. No books were kept of the affairs of the alleged copartnership. In short, the situation seems to be simply this: Under a preliminary contract Peters advanced, as he agreed to do, $3,400, which was, under the contract, to be employed in the purchase of equipment which thereafter belonged to Peters. McIntyre thereafter continued to use Peters' property, with meager and unsatisfactory reports of what he was doing, with no showing of profits and without requesting or suggesting or intimating to Peters that he should elect or had elected to be a partner. Peters in the meantime allowed McIntyre to continue to use his equipment, waiting with more or less patience the results of McIntyre's work. As between himself and the public, he had a right to rely upon the fact that he was not being held out as a partner, and as between McIntyre and himself he had a right to rely upon the fact that he never had elected to become a partner.

We therefore conclude that the finding that Peters was a partner of McIntyre is not sustained by the evidence.

The judgment against the defendant Peters is reversed.

UNION COLONIZATION CO. et al. v. MADERA CANAL & IRRIGATION CO.
(Sac. 2664.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 18, 1919.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨247(1)—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

Finding that water to the extent of 200 cubic feet per second is reasonably necessary for the irrigation of defendant's lands held a finding on an issue raised by plaintiff's complaint that 100 cubic feet of water was all that was necessary for the irrigation of such land.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨994(3), 995—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

Questions of weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are for the trial court.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Trial court's conclusions on disputed issues of fact are conclusive on appeal, where supported by substantial evidence.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚡247(1)—APPROPRIATION—IRRIGATION.

In action to determine extent of defendant's right to divert water from certain river, the court, in determining the amount of water in fact used by defendant as an appropriator, should be liberal, to the extent at least that it should not deprive him of any portion of the amount of water that he had in fact used for the period necessary to gain title by prescription, unless it clearly appears that he has used more than was reasonably necessary.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚡247(1)—IRRIGATION—RIGHT BY PRESCRIPTION.

An appropriator will be presumed to have used no more water for irrigation purposes than was reasonably necessary.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚡247(1)—IRRIGATION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action to determine extent of defendant's rights to divert water from certain river, evidence held to sustain finding that 200 cubic feet per second was reasonably necessary for irrigation of defendant's lands.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1052(5)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In action to determine extent of defendant's right to divert water from river, introduction in evidence of judgment in other action determining amount reasonably necessary to irrigate the defendant's lands, if error, was harmless, where the court found that only 200 cubic feet per second was necessary as against 250 feet decreed by such judgment.

8. EVIDENCE ⚡546—EXPERTS—DETERMINATION AS TO COMPETENCY.

Whether witness is qualified to testify as an expert is for the trial court, in the determination of which the court has a wide range of discretion.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1050(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In action involving right to divert water for irrigation purposes, the introduction in evidence of United States reclamation service reports relative to operation and maintenance of reclamation projects, some of them in other states, was not ground for reversal, where substantially similar testimony was admitted without objection.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Union Colonization Company and others against the Madera Canal & Irrigation Company. From a portion of the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Short & Sutherland, of Fresno, and Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Robert L. Hargrave, of Madera, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought in the superior court of Madera county by owners of lands riparian to the Fresno river to determine the extent of the right of the defendant to divert waters from said river. The suit was instituted in 1900 by California Pastoral & Agricultural Company, Limited, and others, then the owners of the lands alleged to be affected by the diversion complained of. A trial resulted in a judgment declaring that the defendant, Madera Canal & Irrigation Company, was entitled to divert and take from the Fresno river water to the extent of 250 cubic feet running per second when there was sufficient water to furnish that amount, and all of the waters flowing in the river at the point of diversion when there was less. The plaintiffs appealed from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, and the judgment and order were reversed. Cal. Past. & Agr. Co. v. Madera Canal & Irr. Co., 167 Cal. 78, 138 Pac. 718. The court below had found that the amount of water allowed had been diverted by the defendant for the statutory period and beneficially used in the irrigation of lands lying under the flow of defendant's system of canals and ditches, but that a smaller amount would be sufficient to irrigate the lands which had been, during said period, irrigated by the defendant. In its findings, the court declared itself to be unable to determine the exact amount of water that would be sufficient for that purpose. Upon the appeal, this court held that the right of the appropriator was limited to the amount of water "reasonably necessary to be diverted from the river for the proper irrigation of the lands irrigated by defendant by means of its system." A finding of the amount reasonably necessary for this purpose was declared to be essential.

Following the judgment on the former appeals, the present plaintiffs were substituted as successors to the interest of the original complainants. There was a new trial, which resulted in a judgment declaring: (1) That the defendant is entitled to divert and take from the Fresno river water to the extent of 200 cubic feet per second when there is sufficient water in the river to furnish that amount, and all of the flow when there is less; (2) that the plaintiffs are entitled to the full flow of all of the waters of the river in excess of the amount awarded to the defendant; and (3) that the defendant be enjoined from taking or diverting from said Fresno river any water in excess of the amount to which it had been declared to be entitled. The plaintiffs appeal from the first part of the judgment, i. e., that declaring the defendant's right to divert water to the extent of 200 cubic feet per second.

The complaint alleged that—

"One hundred cubic feet of water flowing per second is all the water which was or is reasonably required for the irrigation of all of the lands irrigated from or under defendant's said canals."

[1] It is claimed that the court failed to find on the issue thus tendered. But finding 11 made by the court fully covers and disposes of this matter. That finding declares, in effect, that for more than five years next preceding the commencement of the action the defendant has continuously, openly, and uninterruptedly, and adversely to the plaintiffs and to all the world, appropriated, taken, and diverted from the Fresno river into and through its canals, water to the extent of 200 cubic feet running per second when there was sufficient water in the river to furnish that amount, and, when the water in the river was insufficient, has taken, diverted, and appropriated all the waters flowing in the river, and has distributed, sold, and used the same for the purpose of irrigation; that the water so appropriated and diverted has been by the defendant "distributed, rented, sold, and used beneficially for the purpose of irrigating a large body of land, viz., about 14,000 acres, lying under and irrigable from defendant's system of canals; and that the same and the whole thereof has been and is reasonably necessary for the due and proper irrigation thereof." The finding thus declares in terms that water to the extent of 200 cubic feet per second is reasonably necessary for the irrigation of the lands served by the defendant, and this is, of course, a direct negation of the averment that 100 cubic feet is all that is required for that purpose.

[2, 3] The principal question presented on this appeal is that of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding to which we have just referred. The appellants contend with great vigor that the evidence establishes that the company did not, during the five years preceding the action, irrigate in excess of 10,000 acres, and that a continuous flow of 200 cubic feet would be adequate to irrigate land far in excess of 10,000, or even of the 14,000 acres which the court finds to have been supplied by the defendant's system. We see no occasion to go into a detailed analysis of the great volume of evidence embodied in the bill of exceptions, which contains over 700 printed pages. The earnestness and zeal of appellants' counsel seems to have led them to the conviction that the court below should have given credence to the testimony supporting their contention, and rejected everything in conflict therewith. An argument based on such a view cannot, of course, receive favorable attention here. Questions of weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are for the trial court, and its conclusion on disputed issues of fact must be accepted as controlling on appeal, where that conclusion has the support of substantial evidence. We are satisfied that the finding attacked has such support in this case. On the essential elements involved there was a sharp conflict. There was abundant evidence tending to show that for the statutory period preceding the commencement of the action the defendant had actually diverted a flow equal to, or exceeding, 200 cubic feet per second when that amount of water was flowing in the river. There was evidence to show that the amount of land actually irrigated by the canal system was almost, if not quite, equal to 14,000 acres. This sufficiently supports the finding, which, as we have seen, fixes the amount at "about 14,000 acres." The essential point in the finding is not whether the area irrigated equaled the exact amount stated, but whether the 200 feet allowed to the defendant was reasonably necessary for the irrigation of the area actually supplied, be that area a little more or less. On this last factor in the problem both parties introduced considerable evidence. Suffice it to say that the defendant presented abundant proof in support of the conclusion that the quantity allowed by the judgment was not more than enough, if, indeed, it was enough, to properly supply the land which had been taking water from the system.

[4, 5] In considering the evidence bearing on this issue, the court below was probably guided, as we must be now, by the views declared by this court on the former appeal. It was there said:

"In determining how much of the water in fact used had been reasonably necessary for the purpose for which it was used, we believe that a court should be liberal with the appropriator to the extent at least that it should not deprive him of any portion of the amount of water that he had in fact used for the period necessary to gain title by prescription, unless it is clearly and satisfactorily made to appear that he has used more than was reasonably necessary. The presumption would appear to be in his favor, for ordinarily one would not take pains to use upon any land more than was reasonably necessary under all the circumstances."

[6] Bearing these considerations in mind, it must be held that the court below did not, in making the finding complained of, go beyond the point permitted by a fair and reasonable interpretation of the evidence.

It is further claimed that the court erred in several rulings.

[7] The defendant was allowed to plead by supplemental answer, and to offer in evidence, a judgment entered in an action brought in the superior court of Merced county by Miller & Lux (a corporation), which concededly was acting on behalf of all of the parties plaintiff in this case, against the defendant herein. That action, which was begun during the pendency of the present one, was brought to enjoin a threatened diversion of water, alleged to be in addition to that involved in this action. An appeal was taken from an order granting a preliminary injunction in the Merced county case, and the order was affirmed by this court. Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391. Thereafter the cause was heard on the merits, and the judgment now under discussion entered. That judgment enjoined the defendant from diverting more than 250 second feet from the Fresno river, but contained other provisions making it manifest that the court was not, in that action, attempting to pass upon the question in litigation in this action, viz., the extent of the prescriptive right of the defendant, but was merely fixing the amount of the permitted diversion provisionally, i. e., for the purposes of the Merced county suit, and pending the final determination of the present action. It may be that the court below should not have permitted that judgment to be pleaded or proven herein, but the error, if any was committed, was harmless. The judgment was certainly not treated as constituting an adjudication that the defendant was entitled to divert 250 second feet, for the judgment herein limits it to 200 feet. The court below seems to have entertained the idea that the Merced judgment established a prima facie case in favor of the defendant's right to divert 250 feet. But even this view, if erroneous, seems to have had no substantial effect upon the ultimate result, for the court, in cutting the amount allowed down to 200 feet, must have regarded the supposed prima facie showing as overcome by the evidence outside of the judgment.

[8] The other assignments of error are not of sufficient importance to merit extended discussion. The witness Smith was permitted, over the objection of the plaintiffs that he had not been shown to be qualified, to give an opinion regarding the amount of water reasonably required for the irrigation of lands under the defendant's system. We think there was no error in this ruling. Whether a witness is qualified as an expert is to be determined in the first instance by the trial court, and in so deciding the trial court has a wide range of discretion. Howland v. O. C. S. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 513, 521, 42 Pac. 983; 25 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 817. In view of the witness' statements regarding his experience and study, the court did not abuse its discretion in permitting him to answer the question. In any event, the ruling was of slight importance, since the testimony was merely corroborative of that given by many other witnesses who testified without objection.

[9] Finally, it is urged that the court should not have permitted the defendant to introduce in evidence a report of the United States reclamation service relative to the operation and maintenance of reclamation projects, some of them in other states. These reports, and some testimony given in relation thereto, were, perhaps, not very directly relevant to the subject under inquiry here. But considerable evidence of substantially like import was introduced without objection, and the rulings in question were not of sufficiently serious import to constitute ground for reversal.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLER & LUX INCORPORATED v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 8853.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §417(3)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FINDINGS BY INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION—REVIEW.

Findings of fact by which Industrial Accident Commission determines itself clothed with jurisdiction are reviewable by Supreme Court on certiorari.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §347—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—NATURE AND THEORY OF LIABILITY.

Workmen's Compensation Act 1913 is held constitutional only because it imposes a charge, not only upon individual employer, but upon branch of industry in which he is engaged, and gives employer opportunity to protect himself by proper insurance.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §363—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—AGRICULTURE.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act 1913, § 14, if a worker upon farm may be reasonably classified as one engaged in agriculture, his employer is not liable under Compensation Act.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT §363—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—"ENGAGED IN FARM LABOR."

A workman whose sole duty is to repair wagons in shop operated on farm for purpose of keeping agricultural implements and vehicles used on farm in order is "engaged in farm labor" within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act 1913, § 14.

In Bank.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by W. V. Fish, to obtain compensation for personal injuries, opposed by Miller & Lux Incorporated, the employer. There was an order of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of the applicant, and the employer brings certiorari. Award annulled.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of W. V. Fish and against petitioner Miller & Lux Incorporated.

The findings of the Industrial Accident Commission upon which the attack of petitioner's counsel is directed, are as follows:

"(1) That W. V. Fish, hereinafter called the employé, the applicant herein, was injured on the 15th day of December, 1917, at Buttonwillow, Kern county, Cal., while in the employment of defendant, Miller & Lux Incorporated, hereinafter called the employer, as a wagon maker in a shop operated by the employer for the sole purpose of repairing vehicles and implements used by the employer in its farming operations, the whole time of the employé being given to said occupation.

"(2) That said injury arose out of and in the course of said employment, was proximately caused thereby, and occurred while the employé was performing service growing out of and incidental to the same, as follows: His right hand was caught in a moving planer, the wound becoming infected.

"(3) That the time of said injury the employé was not engaged in any of the occupations or employments excluded by section 14 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1913 from the provisions of said act, and that said injury was not caused by willful misconduct or intoxication of the employé."

[1] It is argued by the counsel for respondent that the third finding is conclusive—that in such cases we cannot go behind the determination of the commissioners upon matters of fact. In this behalf he cites Smith v. Coles (1905), 93 L. T. 754, 8 W. C. C. 116 (Minton-Senhouse). It is true that in that case, in which the county court judge had found that a carpenter employed about a farm as a handy man was a workman in agriculture, certain of the justices held that, there being evidence to support the finding, they might not upset it, but in the matter at bar the learned commissioners found as a probative fact that the applicant was employed "as a wagon maker in a shop operated by the employer for the sole purpose of repairing vehicles and implements used by the employer in its farming operations, the whole time of the employé being given to said occupation." It is clear, therefore, that the ultimate finding is really based upon the probative facts found, and if they fail to establish the jurisdiction of the commission petitioner must succeed. Findings of fact by which the Industrial Accident Commission determines itself clothed with jurisdiction are reviewable by this court. Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35. The sole question, therefore, is whether or not a workman, whose sole duty is to repair wagons in a shop operated on a farm for the purpose of keeping the agricultural implements and vehicles used on the farm in order, is engaged in farm or agricultural labor within the meaning of section 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Act. St. 1913, p. 284.

[2-4] At the threshold of the inquiry we should keep in mind the fact that the Compensation Act is held constitutional only because it imposes a charge, not upon the individual employer, but upon the branch of industry in which he is engaged, and gives the employer opportunity of protecting himself by proper insurance. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 Pac. 398. The law of California has exempted the farming industry from the operation of this statute, and if a worker upon a farm may be reasonably classified as one engaged in agriculture, his employer is clearly entitled to the benefit of this exemption. While it is true that an employer may be engaged in several sorts of industry, some of them within and some of them without the purview of the Compensation Act, and that an employé may at different times do work of one kind or the other, it is equally a fact that, where from the great extent and complexity of farming operations on a given rancho the work of the farmers is classified, and each is given a limited, rather than a diversified, duty, that circumstance alone will not make some of them artisans rather than agriculturists. Numerous illustrations suggest themselves. If the mower who stops to use a whetstone on his scythe remains a farmer, is the boy who is set to work sharpening all the farming tools used on the place engaged in an occupation entirely outside of farming? Clearly not. So it has been held that a wood-chopper or one removing stumps or brush from a farm is not an artisan within the contemplation of the act. Miller v. Algar, 2 I. A. C. Dec. 558; Martin v. Russian River Fruit & Land Co., 1 I. A. C. Dec. (part 2) p. 18; Whitney v. Peterson, 1 I. A. C. Dec. 306. Commenting upon two of the authorities last cited, this court (all the justices participating) has used the following language:

"The Accident Commission has held that a woodchopper engaged in cutting and burning trees in clearing land for farming purposes is engaged in farm labor. Whitney v. Peterson, 1 Decisions of the Industrial Accident Commission of California, p. 306. It has also been held that when land has been cleared for agriculture, one who operates a saw to cut the wood on the cleared land into suitable lengths for sale is engaged in farm labor. Miller v. Algar, 2 Industrial Accident Decisions, 584. If Snow had been found to be an employé on the farm who, as part of his duties, was required to repair the tractor, we could not see how he could be adjudged not a farm laborer under those decisions." Maryland Casualty Co. v. Pillsbury,

This aspect of the matter has been aptly discussed by the Supreme Court of New York in the case of Coleman v. Bartholomew, 175 App. Div. 122, 124, 161 N. Y. Supp. 560, 561 as follows:

"It was the clear intent of the Legislature to exclude farm laborers from the benefits of the Compensation Law, and it only remains for us to define 'farm laborers.' The common hired man on a farm is required to perform a great variety of work. His duties are not confined to plowing, planting, and harvesting. Tilling the soil and garnering the crops may be the principal work of the farm laborer, but they are by no means his exclusive work. All the multifarious work of operating a farm must be done by somebody; and who is to do it except the farm laborer? It is, of course, necessary to keep the farm machinery in repair—the reapers, mowers, corn harvesters, sulky plows, wagons, harnesses, etc. It is just as necessary to keep the farm buildings in repair, and occasionally to make small additions to them. This is a part of the routine work of the farm laborer; just as much so as milking the cows, cleaning off the horses, building fences, putting a new point on a plow, doctoring a sick horse, butchering the hogs, greasing the wagons, assisting the threshers, driving the team to market, and innumerable other familiar duties."

In that case the farm laborer was engaged, when injured, in repairing the roof of a barn.

But, at the outset of the argument in his brief, counsel for the Industrial Accident Commission insists that the question before us has been settled in California adversely to petitioner's contention, and cites in that behalf George v. Industrial Accident Commission, 174 Pac. 653, and Miller & Lux Incorporated v. Industrial Accident Commission, 32 Cal. App. 250, 162 Pac. 651. We cannot agree with that view. In the George Case the claimant was found to be engaged in two occupations for the same employer, and his duty at the time of the accident was found to be that of a gardener. This court sustained the Industrial Accident Commission upon the finding that in his capacity as a gardener the applicant might not recover—a conclusion which supports rather than opposes the argument of petitioner in the matter now before us. The other proceeding dealt with a case in which a man was and had been for many months engaged in the building of a house and was injured while so occupied. The Industrial Accident Commission found that petitioner was engaged in the business of wholesale and retail butcher, wholesale and retail merchandising, farming, horticulture, and real estate dealing. It did not appear that the house which the injured man was helping to build was to be used for any particular sort of fellow workmen. In this state of the record the learned

District Court of Appeal used the following language in the opinion:

"We are unable to follow the refinement of the petitioner's reasoning so far as to hold that because the operations of the petitioner are so diversified and extensive as to require regular employment of carpenters in the construction, improvement, and repair of buildings upon the ranch properties, that such artisans when so employed are to be regarded as engaged in farm labor."

In the matter now under discussion there was an entirely different record involving the employment of the workman upon repair of vehicles used in the farming operations of his employer alone.

While the authorities on this branch of the compensation statutes of the various jurisdictions are somewhat in conflict, the weight and the better reasoning support the contention of petitioner that the repairing of farming machinery on the farm, in a shop devoted to such repairs, is an agricultural pursuit, and is one of the employments excluded by provisions similar to section 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Insurance and Safety Act.

In Shafer v. Parke, Davis & Co., 192 Mich. 577, 159 N. W. 304, the workman was injured while engaged in caring for horses on a farm. While the farm was one owned by a manufacturer of chemicals and was conducted principally for the production of serums for the laboratory, the Supreme Court of Michigan held that the injured man was a farm laborer. Respondent's counsel insists that this case supports his contention that the statute does not classify the employé by the ordinary business of his employer, but by the kind of work he, himself, is employed to do. This is only partly true because in determining the class of labor in which an employé is engaged, it is often necessary to take into consideration the work ordinarily done by persons in the kind of business which the employer is conducting. A man repairing broken harness for use on a farm is, in a sense, doing the same sort of work to which he might be assigned in a saddler's shop in town, but that mere fact does not classify him as a person engaged in manufacturing because the custom of farmers, from time immemorial, has been to make minor repairs of that sort. There are good examples of the rule that laborers may be classified as farm workers, although not actually tilling the soil. Such illustrations are to be found in those decisions upon statutes giving to agriculturists liens for their work. A cook for a threshing crew, who asserted a lien as a farm laborer, was held to be entitled to it, as her work contributed directly to the garnering of the crops. Stevenson v. Magill, 35 N. D. 576, 160 N. W. 700, L. R. A. 1917D, 377. In Winslow v. Urquhart, 39 Wis. 260, a cook for a logging crew was held to be performing labor in cutting and moving logs; and in Breault v. Archambault, 64 Minn. 420, 67 N. W. 348, 58 Am. St. Rep. 545, a cook for the men in a logging camp, and a blacksmith employed to mend the tools and sleds and to shoe the horses used in the logging business were both held to be entitled to liens under a like statute. Our own Industrial Accident Commission of California has decided that a cook employed on a cattle ranch to prepare meals for the workmen was engaged in farm labor and stock raising, and was excluded from the provisions of the Compensation Act. Olsen v. Rogers Development Company, 2 Ind. Acc. Com. 560.

In Sylcord v. Horn, 179 Iowa, 936, 162 N. W. 249, it was decided that one assisting in the operation of a corn shredder on a farm is a "laborer engaged in agricultural pursuits."

In State v. District Court of Watonwan County, 140 Minn. 398, 168 N. W. 130, a man who fell from a harvester upon which he had been making repairs was held to be a "farm laborer," the court following Sylcord v. Horn, supra, and citing without approval White v. Loades, 178 App. Div. 236, 164 N. Y. Supp. 1023, which was a case of a man injured while putting a threshing machine in a barn. While it is declared in the opinion in the case last cited that "a man who is traveling through the country with a machine, and stopping from place to place to thresh out the grain and beans of the farmers for a compensation, is not engaged in farming, and his employes are not farm laborers," compensation seems to have been awarded upon the theory that at the time of the accident the employé was engaged in the "operation of a vehicle," and was thus brought within the scope of the compensation statute of New York.

In Vincent v. Taylor Bros., 180 App. Div. 818, 168 N. Y. Supp. 287, a workman connected with a traveling thresher was injured while feeding bundles into that machine on a farm on which his employer had undertaken to do the threshing. The work was found not to be "milling," as the commission had declared it to be, and the award was therefore set aside. The court held that the facts did not bring the accident under the rule of White v. Loades as to vehicles, but followed that case upon the dictum that the employé was not a farm laborer. However, the case was sent back for further hearing, Mr. Justice Lyon, who prepared the opinion, using the following language:

"Whether facts may have been disclosed by the investigation of the commission, which do not appear in the record, but which influenced the deputy commissioner, before whom the proofs were heard, to make the award—for instance, that the employers were in fact engaged in the milling business, and that the threshing was incidental to their acquiring the grain for such business—does not appear, nor has the commission so found."

In re Boyer (Ind. App.) 117 N. E. 507, holds squarely, however, that a man is not a farm laborer who works on a separator that goes from farm to farm, and is operated as an independent business, although the injury was received while the claimant was threshing wheat. The decision really rests upon an analogy between the threshing by an independent contractor and the work of a miller. The following sentence in the opinion illustrates well the fact that the "threshing machine cases" are of small value in deciding the question now before this court:

"If farmers generally owned threshing outfits, and were in the habit of threshing their own grain, and the claimant had been employed by the farmer to assist in the work of threshing, and had been injured while doing such work, a more serious question would be presented."

That a farm laborer who assists his employer during the winter in getting out logs cut on the farm is nevertheless a farm laborer when so doing was held in Brockett v. Mietz, 184 App. Div. 342, 171 N. Y. Supp. 412.

It was held, however, that a country club which cut and sold lumber regularly from a large tract of land owned by it was engaged in logging for pecuniary gain, although the work was incidental to the main business of operating a country club. Uhl v. Hartwood Club, 221 N. Y. 588, 116 N. E. 1000.

From the foregoing it appears, we think, that the great weight of authority, as well as the better reasoning, brings the claimant who was repairing vehicles and implements on the farm within the class of persons excluded from the operation of the Compensation Act because engaged in "farm labor."

The award is annulled.

BENNETTS v. OCCIDENTAL LIFE INS. CO. (Civ. 2856.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 17, 1919.)

INSURANCE — ACCIDENT INSURANCE — EXTERNAL, VIOLENT, AND ACCIDENTAL MEANS.

In action on accident policy, evidence that insured undertook to help another to lift pipe out of sump hole, and in so doing did not slip or lose hold, while the pipe did not touch him in any way, after which he was taken ill and died, held insufficient to sustain plaintiff's burden to prove death resulted from bodily injuries through external, violent, and accidental means.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by Hattie M. Bennetts, a widow, against the Occidental Life Insurance Company, a corporation, resulting in judgment for defendant. From an order granting new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

T. F. Allen, of Bakersfield, and Benjamin E. Page, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

F. E. Borton and Rowen Irwin, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought by plaintiff against defendant to recover the sum of $2,000 upon an accident insurance policy. Defendant issued the policy set forth in the complaint, by the terms of which it insures William J. Bennetts against "death or disability, while sane, and resulting directly and independently of all other causes from bodily injuries, effected through external, violent, and accidental means." The policy was issued on the 26th day of June, 1909, to be in force for a period of 12 months from said date. The insured died on August 11, 1909.

The ground upon which this action was brought was that the death of the insured "resulted directly and independently of all other causes from bodily injuries, effected through external, violent, and accidental means." This contention was denied by defendant. There were two other defenses interposed by defendant, but as no evidence was offered in support thereof, they are immaterial here.

The case was tried by the court without a jury. The court found "that the death of said William J. Bennetts did not result directly and independently of all other causes from bodily injuries effected through external, violent and accidental means," and further found that the death of said William J. Bennetts did not result from "external means, * * * violent means, * * * or accidental means," and judgment went for defendant accordingly. This appeal is from the order granting a new trial.

On the day of the alleged accident it appears without conflict that the said insured was assisting one M. R. Craig in pulling out of a sump hole a swing pipe, which had gotten clogged therein. The said insured took hold of the pipe a little ahead of the place where said Craig had hold thereof, and with said Craig pulled on it. The said Craig cautioned him to pull slowly, and told him that the pipe "would have to come slow." While so engaged both men were leaning in front of a rail, pulling, and while so doing Craig heard the insured "give a kind of a grunt, but didn't say anything then." Then they continued to pull, and, in the language of Craig, "pulled it out easily." That night, or the next morning, the insured was taken ill. From this illness, regardless of the cause, he never recovered, his death occurring on August 11, 1909.

It appears that his physical condition and state of health prior thereto for a long time, with one exception, had been very good. That exception was that either in 1905 or 1906 he had undergone a successful operation for appendicitis, since when "he had never made any complaint of illness; never had an ache or pain."

After being taken from the hospital, on the occasion of his last illness, another operation was performed by the attending physician and surgeon, within the abdominal cavity, where there was found "a band surrounding a portion of the small intestine, and which condition was relieved by the operation"; but the insured died on the fifth day thereafter.

Two points urged by appellant need our consideration. The proper answer to the question, "Did the death of the insured, under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence here, result from bodily injuries effected directly and independently of all other causes, through external, violent, and accidental means?" will dispose of both. Obviously, if the answer be in the affirmative, the order granting a new trial herein was properly made; otherwise, it must be reversed.

The Supreme Court of this state, in the well-considered case of Rock v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 172 Cal. 462, 156 Pac. 1029, L. R. A. 1916E, 1196, in a learned opinion written by Justice Sloss for and adopted by that court, sitting en banc, has, as we view it, construed the phrase "bodily injury effected through external, violent, and accidental means." The facts in that case were more favorable to the plaintiff there than are the facts in the case at bar to the plaintiff here. The views there expressed are, we believe, determinative of the points here involved.

Paraphrasing some of the language of that case to fit the facts here, briefly stated, the case at bar is simply this: Bennetts undertook to help Craig, the foreman, to lift a pipe out of the sump hole. In doing so he did not slip, or lose his hold, or become unbalanced; nor did the pipe, or anything else, strike or touch him in any way. The record does not disclose that anything of an unusual or unexpected nature occurred in the course of lifting the pipe out of the sump hole. The entire operation, so far as disclosed by the evidence, was carried out in precisely the manner intended by Bennetts. The subsequent happenings have already been set forth.

On these facts, which in the case at bar are without conflict, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff failed to sustain the burden, which was upon her, of proving that the death "resulted directly and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries, effected through external, violent and accidental means." On the authority, therefore, of Rock v. Travelers' Insurance Co., supra, we conclude that the answer to our question must be in the negative.

It follows, therefore, that the findings of the trial court were sustained by the evidence, and that a new trial should not have been granted.

Order granting a new trial reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen. (James F. Brennan, of San Francisco, of counsel), for the People.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The defendant was charged with the crime of grand larceny. An information charging the offense was filed on the 29th day of May, 1917, in the superior court of Contra Costa county. A demurrer to this information was sustained, and subsequently, on the 11th day of September, an amended information charging the same offense was filed. Defendant was arraigned on this amended information, and was thereafter tried and convicted of the crime of petit larceny. From the judgment and order denying a new trial defendant appeals.

[1] In seeking a reversal of the judgment it is not contended, nor could it be, that there is not sufficient evidence in the record to prove that the stolen property was taken by defendant, the evidence upon that subject being ample; but it is claimed as grounds therefor that the evidence fails to show that the crime of petit larceny, of which the defendant was convicted, was committed within one year before the information was filed as prescribed by the statute. Pen. Code, § 801.

The felony here charged included the lesser offense of which defendant was convicted. In such a case, though the felony be not barred, where the statute has run as to such lesser offense, it cannot be evaded by the indictment of the defendant for the felony. Letcher v. State, 159 Ala. 59, 48 South. 805, 17 Ann. Cas. 716; 8 Rul. Case Law, p. 133. It was incumbent, therefore, upon the prosecution to prove, not only the commission of the offense, but also that it was committed within the statutory period. The jury was instructed that, in order to find the defendant guilty of petit larceny, the property must have been taken within one year preceding the filing of the information. The verdict is therefore tantamount to a finding that the misdemeanor was committed within the period limited. There is no positive or direct evidence in the record as to the exact date of the commission of the theft, but it is claimed in support of the conviction that there is sufficient evidence to justify the inference that the crime was committed within one year.

It appears from the record that the defendant Meyers entered the employ of the Great Western Electro-Chemical Company, a corporation, of Pittsburg, Cal., as a draughtsman, in March, 1916. One of his duties was to see that none of the maps, plans, or blueprints were taken from the office of the company. Defendant left the employment of the company on February 1, 1917. Throughout the year of his employment defendant had charge of the blueprints and worked on some of them, and during his employment he appropriated a number thereof, comprising about 70 per cent. of a complete set of the plans. Part of the set appropriated, 28 sheets in number, were found concealed in defendant's residence in Pittsburg. These sheets are the subject of the misdemeanor for which he was convicted. The company first missed its property in December, 1916, within six months before the date of the filing of the information. On March 1, 1917, during a conversation between himself and one Mooser at a restaurant in Oakland, defendant admitted that he had all the blueprints of the company. On March 31, 1917, he first denied and later admitted to one Shedler, superintendent of the company, that he had some of the blueprints of the company in his possession. He also pointed to a little report which he had made up, and said:

"You should have pulled this off two months ago. The damage is done. The work is complete."

In a former decision in this case we concluded that this statement indicated a recent acquisition of the blueprints and some evidence that they were taken about two months prior to March 31, 1917, the date of the foregoing conversation. Upon further consideration of this evidence, we are of the opinion that it is equally susceptible of the inference that the purpose for which the property was taken had been accomplished, or other inferences having no relation to the time of the commission of the offense, and that the evidence on this point does not measure up to the requirements of the law to uphold a conviction.

Counsel further contend that there is no evidence showing that the property stolen by defendant had any value, and that defendant having the custody of the prints could have reproduced them without committing any crime for a few dollars. Considering the conclusion we have reached, a discussion of this and other questions becomes unnecessary.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. [2, 3] The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, is denied.

In denying the petition we deem it proper to say that the mere fact that an appellate court is of the opinion that certain evidence is susceptible of two reasonable inferences, one looking to the guilt of the defendant and the other to his innocence, does not warrant interference by the appellate court with the conclusion of the jury on the point. It is for the jury and the trial judge to determine the question of fact in such a case, and their conclusion will be sustained by an appellate court if it finds sufficient support in the evidence, including such inferences as may reasonably be drawn therefrom. The difficulty in the case at bar, taking the facts stated by the District Court of Appeal as the facts of the case, is that there was no testimony reasonably warranting an inference by the jury that the property alleged to have been stolen was stolen within one year prior to the filing of the information.

AALWYN'S LAW INSTITUTE v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 2307.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 8, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR — § 82(3) — ORDER APPEALABLE — INTERLOCUTORY AND CONDITIONAL ORDER.

Conditional order granting motion of city and county of San Francisco to set aside default and default judgment in action to recover taxes paid in excess of dollar limit, as provided by Charter, art. 3, c. 1, § 11, being interlocutory in its nature, and contemplating further order granting or denying motion absolutely on payment or nonpayment of costs, held not appealable.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Aalwyn's Law Institute against the City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation. From a conditional order granting motion to set aside default and default judgment, plaintiff appeals, and defendant moves to dismiss. Appeal dismissed. See, also, 179 Pac. 220.

Arthur Crane, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George Lull, City Atty., and R. T. Ainsworth, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Defendant moves to dismiss the appeal.

From the record it appears that this is an action brought to recover the sum of $9,592.50 for taxes alleged to have been paid in excess of the dollar limit as provided in section 11, c. 1, art. 3, of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant suffered default for failure to answer, after demurrer sustained, upon which a judgment was entered by the clerk of the court on July 13, 1915. Thereafter, upon motion of defendant, the default judgment was vacated and set aside by an unconditional order of the superior court to that effect made December 20, 1915. On the day following the court made an order amending the order of December 20th, which amended order is in words and figures following, to wit:

"In this action it is ordered that order made herein on the 20th day of December, 1915, granting defendant's motion to set aside the default, and judgment entered against defendant, be amended so as to read as follows, viz.: It is ordered that defendant's motion to set aside default and judgment herein be granted upon the payment by defendant to plaintiff or its attorney, within five days after notice of this order, the sum of $10 costs, and that defendant have 10 days in which to answer. It is further ordered that if said payment be not made or tendered said motion be denied."

On December 24, 1915, a tender of the said sum of $10 specified in said conditional order was duly made by defendant and by plaintiff's counsel refused. The court thereupon, on April 1, 1916, made its final order vacating said default and default judgment. From this order of April 1st an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court on the 9th day of June, 1916, but said appeal was thereafter dismissed by said court on the 7th day of August, 1916, on the ground that it had been taken too late. The present appeal is from the order hereinbefore set forth and dated December 21, 1915, which we shall hereafter term the conditional order granting the motion to set aside the default and default judgment.

Defendant's motion to dismiss the present appeal, as stated in the notice, is as follows:

"(1) That the order appealed from is not an appealable order for the reason that it is a conditional order and does not constitute a final disposition of the motion before the trial court to vacate and set aside the default order and judgment therein.

"(2) That the appeal is premature because it does not appear from the record that the condition recited in the order appealed from has ever been complied with by the respondent."

That respondent's contention is correct and that this order is a conditional and a nonappealable order is settled by a long line of decisions. The order was interlocutory in its nature, and contemplated a further order granting or denying the motion absolutely upon the payment or nonpayment of the costs required. As was said in Armstrong v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 410:

"An order that a motion be granted upon the payment of certain costs is an order denying the motion, unless the costs be paid. We are not authorized to exclude the condition, and thus make the order the reverse of, or distinctly different from, what it was evidently intended to be."

In Wolff v. Canadian Pacific Co., 123 Cal. 535, 56 Pac. 453, a case in which the identical question now presented on this motion was considered, the Supreme Court says:

"It is conceded that the order of January 25, 1889, granting the motion to set aside the default on condition of payment of counsel fees and costs was not a complete disposition of the motion, and it would seem to follow necessarily from this, as was held by the court below, that the motion remained pending until finally disposed of * * * unless it had been abandoned by the defendant."

The order appealed from falls squarely within the ruling of these decisions. For these reasons the appeal is dismissed.

De Lancey Smith, of Oakland, for appellant.

C. L. Colvin, of Oakland, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the lower court foreclosing certain mechanics' liens and directing the sale of the property affected thereby to satisfy the same. The court found that the work, consisting of certain alterations and repairs to the buildings on the premises, was done with the full knowledge and consent of the appellant, and that the appellant did not, within 10 days after obtaining knowledge thereof, give notice that she would not be responsible for same, by posting on the premises, or filing for record, the verified copy of the notice in the office of the county recorder.

From the record it appears that the appellant obtained knowledge of the work on or about the 5th day of November, 1915, and that she remained quiescent until December 4th, which date was subsequent to the time when all of said alterations and repairs had been completed.

Appellant admits in her opening brief that—

"The sole question presented by this appeal is whether or not there is sufficient evidence to support the finding of the trial court."

The most that can be said in favor of the appeal is that there is a direct conflict in the testimony of the witnesses. This conflict was apparent to the trial judge who considered and discussed with counsel the varying testimony of the witnesses, in giving his decision from the bench. He resolved the conflict in favor of the plaintiffs, the respondents here. This court will therefore not review the action of the lower court in that regard.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by Fred Gulick against the E. Clemens Horst Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for appellant.
Henry Ingram, of Gridley, and George E. Jones, of Oroville, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the value of a certain number of horses and mules alleged to have been sold by plaintiff to defendant. There is no dispute that appellant was engaged in the purchase of certain animals for the use of the "Entente" Powers in the prosecution of the war against Germany, nor is it disputed that one W. Hill was the authorized agent of the defendant for the purchase of horses and mules for such purpose.

The only serious contention made by appellant is that the sale was a conditional one, dependent upon the approval and acceptance of said stock by the representatives of said Allied Powers, and that plaintiff and said Hill were parties to a conspiracy to defraud appellant by imposing upon it animals that were unsuitable and unfit for the purposes for which they were to be purchased.

As to these contentions, it may be said that both plaintiff and Hill testified positively that the sale was absolute and not conditional, that there was no understanding or agreement that the payment of the purchase price was to depend upon the approval and acceptance by said representatives. They both also testified to facts from which the inference necessarily follows that neither had any purpose or intention to defraud appellant in the respect indicated or, indeed, in any manner at all, and that the sale and purchase were made in good faith and as claimed by respondent.

The case is, indeed, one of conflicting evidence and wherein the findings of the lower court by reason of a sufficient showing are binding upon the appellate court.

We have read the record and find therein sufficient evidence to support the material findings. There is no necessity for reciting said evidence, as it must be familiar to both parties.

The judgment is, accordingly, affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 14, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1011(1)—FINDING BASED ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

Where the only issue of fact in the case was resolved by the trial judge against defendant's contention on a conflict in the evidence, the court on appeal is not at liberty to disturb the finding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by Frone Patrick Harms against William Grant. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Zimdars and William H. Bryan, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Bacigalupi & Elkus, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Foreclosure. On May 16, 1913, defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff his promissory note for the sum of $5,000, payable one year after date, at 8 per cent. interest per annum, and, at the same time, to secure the payment thereof, executed and delivered to plaintiff a deed absolute to certain real property. Contemporaneously the parties entered into a written agreement setting forth that the said deed was intended as a mortgage to secure the payment of said promissory note, and incorporating in the agreement substantially the provisions found in long-form mortgages.

The only defense to the action, as shown by the answer, was an alleged oral agreement by the parties, made on July 23, 1915, more than a year after said promissory note had become due and payable. In effect, this alleged agreement was that in consideration of defendant's finding some person who would loan plaintiff $2,000 for the period of one year, to be secured by the assignment of said promissory note and mortgage to the person making such loan, plaintiff would not call upon defendant to pay said promissory note until the expiration of one year, and that defendant would pay said loan if made, which was to be credited on said promissory note for $5,000, and he would also then pay the balance of said note.

The cause was tried by the court, and findings and judgment went against defendant. The appeal is from the judgment on bill of exceptions.

It appeared that through defendant's efforts one Black loaned plaintiff $2,000, for which she gave her promissory note, by its terms payable "on or before one year after date," and secured the same by assigning to Black said note and mortgage, the subject of this action; that about three months thereafter she paid Black and thereupon demanded payment by defendant of said $5,000 note. Defendant refused, claiming that he had one year from July 23, 1915, in which to make payment under said oral agreement. The testimony of defendant tended to support his contention, but the testimony of both the plaintiff and her husband, who was acting in her behalf in the transaction, was, as testified to by plaintiff's husband, that defendant "promised not only to pay the $2,000 to Black within two or three months, but also to pay the balance of the $5,000 to the plaintiff herein." And, as testified by plaintiff:

"The defendant promised to pay the money to plaintiff within two or three months after the obtaining of the money from Black, that is, the $5,000 due on the mortgage; that if Grant paid the $2,000 that was to be deducted from the $5,000, but that in any event the whole sum was to be paid within two or three months."

The trial court found in accordance with the facts as testified to by plaintiff and her husband, as it was within its power to do.

Defendant testified that he personally prepared the note executed by plaintiff and attended to other matters relating to the loan by Black. It is a fair inference that, had it been the intention of the parties to defer payment of defendant's note for one year, the note given by plaintiff for the loan of $2,000 would have been made payable one year after its date and not "on or before one year," etc. However, as the only issue of fact in the case was resolved by the trial court against defendant's contention on a conflict in the evidence, we are not at liberty to disturb the finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. JUDGMENT ⇨160 — SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

Affidavit of attorney, supporting motion to set aside default, alleging on information and belief that defendant fully and fairly stated all facts of case to attorney, who believed and advised defendant that he had a good and meritorious defense on the merits, held insufficient to justify setting aside default; statements of affidavit being mere hearsay.

2. JUDGMENT ⇨143(14)—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—PREOCCUPATION OF DEFENDANT.

That defendant was busy and occupied with other affairs constitutes no excuse for his neglect to answer summons within time.

3. PROCESS ⇨68—VALID FIRST SERVICE—ANNULMENT BY SECOND SERVICE.

In cases of double service of process, where the first one was valid, and accomplished all the purposes for which summons is issued, it is not annulled by the second service.

4. PROCESS ⇨68—FIRST SERVICE—ANNULMENT BY SECOND.

The rule that a valid service, once made, is unaffected by a second one, has no application to a case where the first was a substituted service, entitling plaintiff only to a judgment in rem; plaintiff, notwithstanding the first service, being entitled to serve defendant personally in order to be entitled to personal judgment.

Action by W. S. Andrews against Joseph R. H. Jacoby. From an order setting aside a default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. E. Shaw and Leon Martin, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

John D. Rutledge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco setting aside a default judgment.

The action was commenced in April, 1916, by plaintiff as the owner of a promissory note against the defendant as maker thereof. In October, 1916, an order of publication of service of summons was made, and the complaint and summons were received through the mail by defendant in Boston, Mass., about October 31, 1916. Thereupon defendant sent the papers to his attorney in San Francisco, Mr. John D. Rutledge, who noted the last day for defendant to answer as January 25, 1917. Defendant returned to California late in December, 1916, and was personally served with the summons and complaint in San Francisco on January 8, 1917. On the following day, January 9th, he handed these papers to Mr. Rutledge, stating that he had just been served therewith. On January 19th Mr. Rutledge asked plaintiff's attorneys for an extension of time to answer, and was informed that defendant's default had been entered and judgment taken against them that morning. Under this state of facts Mr. Rutledge immediately noticed a motion to set aside the default, basing his application upon an affidavit by himself, reciting the foregoing facts, and setting up in addition that defendant had left California on January 12th, and was still absent. As to the merits, the affidavit read as follows:

"Affiant is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that defendant fully and fairly stated all the facts of the case in the above-entitled action to affiant, and affiant believes and advised said defendant that said defendant had a good and meritorious defense on the merits of said action."

On the hearing of the motion Mr. Rutledge filed a further affidavit, the material portion of which is to the effect that on the 8th day of January, when he was served, defendant was very busy closing up his business affairs and preparing to move his family to Massachusetts, and that he left on the 12th.

[1, 2] The lower court was clearly in error in setting aside the default on the showing made. The attorney had no way of knowing whether his client had stated all the facts to him, nor could he tell whether or not the client believed he had a meritorious defense. As a full statement of facts by the client, and an honest belief by him in the existence of a meritorious defense, are essential to an affidavit of merits, it is obvious that the hearsay statements of Mr. Rutledge's affidavit above quoted are hopelessly insufficient in law as in fact. Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 424; Jenkins v. Gamewell, etc., Co., 3 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 655, 31 Pac. 570. Furthermore, the mere fact that the client is busy and occupied with other affairs is never held to constitute an excuse for his neglect to answer a summons within time, although the courts will in a proper case relieve a client from the result of the neglect of his too busy attorney. If the rule were otherwise, few judgments by default would stand, for most men could plead their business as an excuse for not answering the summons of the court.

[3, 4] Finally, it cannot be seriously doubted that in cases of a double service of process, where the first one is valid and accomplished all the purposes for which a summons is issued, it is not annulled by a second service; but here there is no such proof of service of the first process as is required by the provisions of section 415 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Moreover, we think the rule sought to be invoked here, viz. that a valid service once made is unaffected by a second one, has no application to a case where, as here, the first was a substituted service entitling the plaintiff to only a judgment in rem. In such a case we think the plaintiff, notwithstanding the first service, would be entitled to serve the defendant personally in order to be entitled to a personal judgment against him.

For the reasons given, the order is reversed.

Code, §§ 2466, 2468.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Lottie A. Kohler against Clarke Stephenson and Ivan W. Stephenson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, which also denied the cross-complaint of one of the defendants, both defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Irvine P. Aten, of Fresno, for appellants.
Geo. G. Graham, of Fresno, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor against both of the defendants for the sum of $475.95, money claimed by the plaintiff to have been collected by the defendants while in her employ as drivers in connection with a steam laundry operated by her and unaccounted for and unpaid to her. The defendants appear and defend separately, and each, in addition to his denials of the averments of the plaintiff's complaint, sets up as a separate defense that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain the action, for the alleged reason that she was engaged in doing business under a fictitious name without having complied with provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. The defendant Ivan Stephenson also presented a cross-complaint, alleging certain breaches of the agreement of employment on the plaintiff's part. Upon the trial, the court held against the defendants upon their several defenses, and also against the defendant Ivan Stephenson upon his cross-complaint.

As to the special defense urged by the defendants upon the trial and insisted upon on the appeal, the facts are briefly these: The plaintiff is the owner of a steam laundry in the city of Fresno, which is called the "Kohler Steam Laundry," which the plaintiff personally conducts under her own name as the proprietor thereof. This appears from her own direct testimony and also from the face of the bills, receipts, and other printed matter made use of in the business of the laundry. The original arrangement by which the defendants came into the relation of drivers and collectors for some of the laundry routes was made with the defendant Clarke Stephenson by the plaintiff personally, but a memorandum thereof in writing was made out by said Clarke Stephenson, signed by him and handed to the bookkeeper of the laundry, who placed it among her files. This unilateral document begins as follows:

"I, the undersigned, agree to stay with the Kohler Steam Laundry as driver for a period of one year from date, also to be responsible for all bills and credits allowed for laundry."

It nowhere appears in this paper with whom this agreement was made, but the plaintiff testified and the said defendant did not deny that the actual agreement was made with the plaintiff personally.

This being the state of the record, we think it sufficiently appears: First, that the plaintiff was not doing business under a fictitious name, and, second, that the agreement which forms the basis of this action was not made, nor the transaction in question had under a fictitious name. Spreckels v. Grace, etc., Ass'n, 28 Cal. App. 646, 153 Pac. 718.

Upon the merits of this controversy we find that the evidence is sufficient to fully justify the findings of the court as to the liability of both defendants to the extent of the sum found to be due the plaintiff by said findings and the judgment of the trial court, and is also sufficient to have justified said court in its finding that there was no merit in the cross-complaint of the defendant Ivan Stephenson.

Judgment affirmed.

1. DEATH $\hookrightarrow$ 10—SURVIVAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION OF DECEDENT.

Where an adult injured by the negligence of a railroad company brought action, but subsequently died, his right of action died with him, and a new and independent cause of action for damages for his death by defendant's wrongful act immediately arose in favor of the heirs, personal representatives of deceased, under Code Civ. Proc. § 377.

2. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL $\hookrightarrow$ 8(6)—ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—OTHER ACTION PENDING.

An action by a widow under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, for the wrongful death of her husband may be maintained notwithstanding the pendency of a former action brought by the husband to recover for the injuries from which he subsequently died; the two actions not being between the same parties for the same cause of action.

3. DEATH $\hookrightarrow$ 49(1)—ACTIONS FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action by a widow under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, to recover for the wrongful death of her husband, a complaint which fails to state that deceased was an adult and left heirs does not state a cause of action.

4. PLEADING $\hookrightarrow$ 225(1)—SUSTAINING DEMUR-RER—AMENDMENT.

In an action by a widow under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, to recover for the wrongful death of her husband, it was error to sustain a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, on the ground that the complaint did not state that decedent had heirs.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Delia Tann against the Western Pacific Railway Company, a corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John H. Leonard, of Santa Cruz, and E. M. Leonard, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles W. Slack, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This action is one brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for the death of her husband, Emil Joseph Tann. From the complaint, it appears that the decedent was injured through the negligence of defendant corporation on January 16, 1913. Within one year from the date of his injury he commenced an action against said defendant for damages for the injury alleged to have been received. That action was at issue and ready for trial at the time of his death, which occurred on April 29, 1914.

On June 25, 1914, plaintiff, as "the surviving widow and heir of" said decedent, commenced the present action. After the commencement of the suit an amendment to the complaint was allowed, whereby Frank G. Drum and Warren Olney, Jr., receivers of the Western Pacific Railway Company, were made defendants.

Defendants demurred to the amended and supplementary complaint generally and specifically. In support of the special demurrer, the defendants urged that the action was barred by subdivision 3, section 340 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to wit, the limitation of one year; also, that if the cause of action for injury sustained by the said Emil Joseph Tann survived to his widow, the complaint showed that there was then pending another action between the same parties and for the same cause. The lower court sustained the demurrers and refused leave to the plaintiff to amend. Judgment was entered in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Admittedly, this action is one brought, and sought to be maintained, under the provision of section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides as follows:

"When the death of a person not being a minor is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death, or if such person be employed by another person who is responsible for his conduct, then also against such other person. In every action under this and the preceding section, such damages may be given as under all the circumstances of the case may be just."

Construing this section, our Supreme Court has said:

"Our statute gives a right of action for damages for the death of a person, not a minor, caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, to his heirs or his personal representatives, against the person causing the death." Clark v. Goodwin, 170 Cal. 529, 150 Pac. 357.

At common law there was no action for torts causing death. The right of action died with the injured person. Accordingly, it is universally held that statutes like section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure, giving an action for wrongful act or neglect causing death, create a right entirely distinct from that which was vested in the injured person before his death. Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 414, 156 Pac. 491, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 390.

[1] The right of action vested in the decedent, Tann, against the defendant corporation for the injuries alleged to have been received by him died and abated (Clark v. Goodwin, supra), and a new and independent cause of action for damages for the death of Tann, caused by the wrongful act or neglect of defendant corporation (if he was not a minor at the time of his death), immediately arose in favor of the heirs or personal representatives of the deceased under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The action here is of this character, and as such could be instituted within one year. Ruis v. Santa Barbara Gas Co., etc., 164 Cal. 190, 128 Pac. 330. It was therefore not barred by the provisions of subdivision 3, section 340, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[2] This action being one solely for the benefit of the heir by which she seeks to be compensated for pecuniary injury suffered to her by reason of the loss of her relative, it is not the action brought by the decedent during his lifetime. It is not an action pending between the same parties for the same cause of action as in the former suit. Ruis v. Santa Barbara Gas Co., supra; Clark v. Goodwin, supra; Western Metal Co. v. Pillsbury, supra. The lower court was in error, therefore, in sustaining the demurrer on the special grounds urged.

On the appeal, however, respondents present a brief in support of the general demurrer, which was not urged in the court below. They contend that the complaint should allege that the deceased was an adult at the time of his death; otherwise it does not state facts sufficient to bring the action within the provision of section 377 of the Code, supra; that if the decedent was a minor the action was one authorized by section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which can only be brought by the "father, or in case of his death or desertion of his family, by the mother."

[3] The only reference in the complaint relative to the heirs of decedent, Tann, is found in the allegation that "the plaintiff, Delia Tann, is the surviving widow and heir of Emil Joseph Tann, deceased." There is no allegation that the decedent was an adult at the time of his death. Undoubtedly, the complaint does fail to state a cause of action if it fails to allege that deceased was an adult and left an heir, or heirs, an allegation absolutely essential in an action of this character. Ruis v. Santa Barbara Co., supra; Webster v. Norwegian Mining Co., 137 Cal. 399, 70 Pac. 276, 92 Am. St. Rep. 181. As the widow of decedent, plaintiff was given no right of action by the statute. Bennett v.

North Carolina Railroad Co., 159 N. C. 345, 74 S. E. 883; Code Civ. Proc. § 377.

If the deceased, at the time of his death, was a minor, the action could not be brought by the plaintiff as heir at law, but should have been instituted under section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If under the latter section, the action was brought by the father, it would be necessary to allege that the deceased was a minor at the time of his death, and that plaintiff was his father. If brought by the mother, it would be necessary for her to allege, not only that deceased was a minor, but that the father was dead or had deserted his family. In other words, these actions being purely statutory, it is necessary to allege sufficient facts to bring plaintiff within the provisions of the particular statute under the authority of which the action may be maintained.

[4] As aforesaid, the action of the court below, in sustaining the demurrers to the amended and supplementary complaint on the two grounds considered, was erroneous. Conceding that the allegation in the complaint as to the heirs of decedent is insufficient, the further action of the trial court, sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend, was incorrect. Plaintiff intended, and attempted, to state the necessary facts, and her complaint was clearly susceptible of proper amendment.

The "complaint or declaration may be amended as in other actions where the amended pleading does not state a new cause of action; and such amendment, although made after the expiration of the period of limitation, will relate back to the commencement of the suit. Thus, an amendment may be made * * * which adds an allegation that deceased left a wife and children." Ruis v. Santa Barbara Co., supra.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 13, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨933(4)—ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL — GROUNDS — PRESUMPTION.

Where one of the grounds upon which motion for new trial was made is insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, the court on appeal, where it has the evidence before it, will, in support of order in general terms granting new trial, assume that it was made upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨979(2)—NEW TRIAL ⇨72—ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL—DISCRETION—REVIEW.

The superior court is authorized to grant a new trial if in its opinion the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, and its action in so doing is the exercise of a legal discretion which can be reviewed on appeal only when it is made to appear that the discretion was abused.

3. EXECUTION ⇨471—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In action for conversion of an automobile sold to satisfy a judgment, evidence held insufficient to warrant verdict for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by C. K. Karst against Thomas F. Finn and another. From an order granting defendants' motion for new trial after verdict for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

G. C. Ringolsky, M. H. Wascercwitz, and H. A. I. Wolch, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Arnold C. Lackenbach, R. Porter Ashe, and Ralph W. Duval, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action in conversion. Plaintiff alleges in her complaint that she was the owner and entitled to the possession of a certain automobile, which she alleged was wrongfully taken away, converted, and sold by defendant Thomas F. Finn, sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, to satisfy a judgment which the sheriff's codefendant, Cuyler Lee, had obtained against one E. J. White.

The trial was had before a jury, which returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $750 damages against both defendants.

Thereafter defendants moved for a new trial, which was granted, and the plaintiff appeals from that order.

[1] One of the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was made is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and the evidence is before us. The order of the court granting a new trial is in general terms, without specifying the grounds of its action; and in support of the order, we will assume that it was made upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. Weisser v. S. P. Co., 148 Cal. 426, 83 Pac. 439, 7 Ann. Cas. 636; Morgan v. J. W. Robinson Co., 157 Cal. 348, 107 Pac. 695; Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 123 Pac. 288.

[2] It is also the rule, firmly established, that the superior court is authorized to grant a new trial if in its opinion the verdict is against the weight of evidence. Its action in so doing is the exercise of a legal discretion, which has been confided to it, and can be reviewed on appeal only when it is made to appear that the discretion was abused. Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 1019.

[3] It is abundantly apparent that the trial court in this case was dissatisfied with the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict; in fact a perusal of the record convinces us that the court could hardly have reached any other conclusion. In any event the records show that there was no abuse of discretion in granting a new trial, but, on the contrary, that the court exercised a sound discretion in making the order complained of. From the evidence, briefly summarized, it appears that on March 22, 1915, E. J. White entered into a contract of conditional sale with Don Lee for the purchase of a 1914 Cadillac automobile. Upon the execution of the contract White took possession of the machine, and thereafter had open, exclusive, and uninterrupted possession and control thereof until March 5, 1917. White during this period did business for a brief space of time under the names of "the White Star Line Auto Touring Company" and "the San Francisco Taxicar Company." He registered the car at the state motor vehicle bureau under the name of "the White Star Line Auto Touring Company," and received a 1915 license under that name. In 1916 he registered it under the name of "the San Francisco Taxicar Company," and received a 1916 license under that name. The car, during all of the time from March 22, 1915, until the levy of the execution by the sheriff in March, 1917, was insured against loss by fire or theft in favor of E. J. White. The car was assessed for taxes in 1916 to E. J. White; the assessment statement containing an affidavit of ownership executed by E. J. White. White testified that he made all the installment payments on the machine "but the last one." Twelve letters offered in evidence by the defendants conclusively show that the automobile was paid for by White; never a mention of plaintiff's name being directly or indirectly made. He partially paid cash for the car, and partially paid for it by transferring to Don Lee a 1913 Cadillac machine, receiving thereby a credit on the price of $540. The bill of sale to Don Lee for the 1913 Cadillac was executed by White. Finally White became financially involved. On February 19, 1917, Cuyler Lee obtained a judgment against him. While findings of fact were being prepared for submission to the trial judge, White took plaintiff to the office of Don Lee, made the final payment, and requested that Don Lee execute the bill of sale to the plaintiff, and it is under this bill of sale that the plaintiff claims to own the car. As to the contract entered into by White for the purchase of the machine, she claims that it was done "to start a business for her." And yet White and appellant both testified that during all of the time after the signing of the contract of conditional sale he (White) had exclusive and continuous possession of the machine; that not a word was said between them concerning the arrangement; that he agreed to pay no rental to plaintiff, nor did she ask any; that not a word was said by her when White received the car from Don Lee and thereafter retained exclusive control thereof for a period of two years; that no salaries were arranged for; that, while plaintiff had White purchase the car for her as an investment, not one word was ever breathed between the two concerning the plan of dividing the profits and losses.

As before stated, it is clear that the trial court arrived at the conclusion that this evidence was insufficient to warrant the verdict in plaintiff's favor.

The order granting a new trial should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

MASSACHUSETTS BONDING & INS. CO.
v. SAN FRANCISCO-OAKLAND TER-MINAL RYS. (Civ. 2489.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 17, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 13, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐389—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—ASSIGNMENT OF CLAIM BY EMPLOYÉ.

Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, §§ 31, 34, subd. "f," permit assignment of injured person's right of action against tort-feasor not previously sanctioned by law, and provide that making by injured employé of lawful claim for compensation under act against employer and latter's insurer shall operate as transfer of legal title to his claim for damages against tort-feasor to employer or to the latter's insurer paying claim.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐389—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—PAYMENT OF CLAIM BY INSURER—RIGHT OF ACTION AGAINST TORT-FEASOR.

Use of the word "subrogated," in Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, § 31, construable in connection with section 34, subd. "f," did not render right of action against tort-feasor acquired by employer's insurer, which paid claim of the injured workman, an equitable cause of action as against tort-feasor, though as between insurer and employé right of subrogation was equitable right arising out of payment of employé's claim.

3. COURTS ⇐120—SUPERIOR COURT—JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT—LEGAL CLAIM.

Workmen's compensation insurer, which paid claim, and thereby under Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913, §§ 31, 34, subd. "f," acquired legal cause of action against tort-feasor which injured employé, could not sue for $212.82, the amount of the payment, in the superior court; jurisdiction being in justice's court.

4. COURTS 121(5)—SUPERIOR COURT—JURISDICTIONAL AMOUNT—CLAIM FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Plaintiff in superior court cannot confer jurisdiction on that tribunal by including in his claim for damages, amounting to less than $300, a demand for attorney's fees augmenting his claim to more than such sum.

5. ACTION 22—LEGAL OR EQUITABLE.

Legal cause of action of workmen's compensation insurer which paid claim of injured employé against tort-feasor held not given nature and qualities of action in equity, so as to invest superior court with jurisdiction, though amount was less than $300, by averment that the tort-feasor, in settling with employé and taking full release, knowing employé had made claim for compensation against employer, had done so with intent to destroy insurer's right to further recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the Massachusetts Bonding & Insurance Company against the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter order dismissing the action.

W. H. Smith, of Oakland, and A. L. Whittle, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Ralph Wilson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $212.82 and costs of suit. The facts of the case, so far as pertinent to the determination of the main question presented upon this appeal, are these: On October 1, 1914, one Manuel Silva was an employé of one A. H. Kopperud, and was engaged in work for his employer on Fourteenth avenue in the city of Oakland, when a street car, operated by or for the defendant, coming along said Fourteenth avenue, came in contact with an auto truck which was standing near where said Silva was at work, and caused said auto truck to strike the latter and severely injure him. At the time of said injury Silva's employer, Kopperud, was carrying insurance for his employé pursuant to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 279); the plaintiff herein being his insurer. Immediately after said injury the plaintiff caused said Silva to be removed to a hospital, and there provided with medical and surgical treatment and medicines, amounting in all to the sum of $212.82. Thereafter, and on the 16th day of January, 1915, Silva undertook to make a settlement of his claim for damages for its alleged negligent acts and his consequent injuries with the defendant herein, in the course of which the defendant paid to him the sum of $300, receiving therefor from said Silva a full receipt and discharge of all claims and demands on account of said injury. Thereafter said Silva filed an application for an award against his employer, Kopperud, and the latter's insurer, said plaintiff, before the Industrial Accident Commission, which came on for decision in the month of July, 1915. From the decision of the commissioner then rendered it appears that a showing was made as to the acceptance by said Silva of the sum of $300 from the defendant herein, and of the execution by him of the receipt purporting to be a full release of said defendant from all liability on account of his said injury. The commission thereupon made an award in favor of said applicant in the sum of $103.07, which the plaintiff herein paid, and which, with certain sums which it had already expended for medicines, etc., made up the aggregate of $212.82, for which it brings this action.

The complaint herein is denominated a complaint in equity, and in it the plaintiff avers substantially the foregoing facts, and further avers that the defendant herein, in making the aforesaid settlement with said Silva, did so with knowledge that said Silva had a lawful claim for compensation against his employer and the latter's insurer which was presentable before the Industrial Accident Commission, and that the intent of the defendant in making such settlement and in taking said full receipt and release thereon was to destroy any right which the plaintiff, as the insurance carrier of said Silva's employer, had or might have to commence and prosecute this action against said defendant, pursuant to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The plaintiff also included in its complaint a demand for the sum of $100 as attorney's fees.

The defendant appeared in this action and demurred upon the ground of a want of jurisdiction in the superior court over the subject-matter of the action, and, this demurrer being overruled, it answered, again urging the objection as to the court's want of jurisdiction. It also pleaded the making of the settlement with Silva above referred to, and set forth in its answer the receipt in terms.

The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed in accordance with the award of the Industrial Accident Commission, but denied the plaintiff's right to recover any sum as attorney's fees.

The first and main question raised by appellant on this appeal is that of the jurisdiction of the trial court over the subject-matter of this action. The appellant contends that the plaintiff's claim, if it exists at all, is for the total sum of $212.82, and that its cause of action therefor is purely a legal, as distinguished from an equitable, claim, and hence that its action should have been commenced in the justice's court. The determination of this question depends upon the construction to be placed upon section 31 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1913. That section reads as follows:

"The making of a lawful claim against an employer for compensation under this act for the injury or death of his employé shall operate as an assignment to the employer of any right to recover damages which the injured employé, or his personal representative, or other person, may have against any other party for such injury or death, and such employer shall be subrogated to any such right and may enforce in his own name the legal liability of such other party. The amount of compensation paid by the employer, or the amount of compensation to which the injured employé or his dependents is entitled, shall not be admissible as evidence in any action brought to recover damages, but any amount collected by the employer, under the provisions of this section, in excess of the amount paid by the employer, or for which he is liable, shall be held by him for the benefit of the injured employé or other person entitled."

The foregoing section is, in respect to its application to the instant case, to be read in connection with subdivision "f" of section 34 of the same act, which reads as follows:

"Where any employer is insured against liability for compensation with any insurance carrier and such insurance carrier shall have paid any compensation for which the employer was liable, or shall have assumed the liability of the employer therefor, it shall be subrogated to all the rights and duties of the employer and may enforce any such rights in its own name."

[1] A proper construction of these provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act in our judgment is that they were intended to permit what has not heretofore been sanctioned by law, viz. an assignment of an injured person's right of action against his tort-feasor, and to provide that the making by him of a lawful claim for compensation under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act against his employer, and the latter's insurer, should operate as a transfer of the legal title to his claim for damages against his said tort-feasor to his employer, or to the latter's insurer, paying such claim. This has in effect been so held by this court in the recent case of Bassot v. United Railroads, 177 Pac. 884.

[2] The respondent insists, however, that the use of the word "subrogated" in the foregoing provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act rendered the right of action acquired by the plaintiff thereunder an equitable cause of action as against the defendant herein. We do not agree with this contention; for, while it is true that as between the plaintiff and Silva the right of subrogation would be an equitable right arising out of the payment by the former of the latter's claim for damages, still, when such payment had been made, and the assignment of Silva's cause of action against the defendant herein consummated by such subrogation, the right thus accrued in the plaintiff was that of maintaining, as the assignee of Silva, the same action which Silva could have maintained against this defendant had no such assignment been made.

[3, 4] If we are correct in these views, then it follows necessarily that the plaintiff in this action, having paid the amount of the lawful claim of Silva against his employer, Kopperud, as the latter's insurer, became thereby invested with Silva's right of action for damages against the defendant in this action. Such right of action, if any, existing in Silva was essentially a legal, and not an equitable, action; and, had the same been commenced by him to recover an amount less than $300, it must have been commenced in the justice's court; and it may here be said that, had Silva commenced his said action in the superior court, he could not have conferred jurisdiction upon that tribunal by including in his claim for damages, amounting to less than $300, a demand for an attorney's fee, augmenting his claim to an amount in excess of said sum; and it need hardly be added that the plaintiff herein, assuming its right of action to be nothing more nor less than Silva's assigned right of action, could not give the superior court jurisdiction over it by asserting a claim for the recovery of attorney's fees which are not allowable by law in such actions.

[5] The respondent, however, insists that it has given this action the nature and qualities of an action in equity by the averments in its complaint to the effect that the defendant, in making its settlement with Silva, and taking his full release knowing that Silva had or had made a lawful claim for compensation against his employer, had done so with the intent and purpose of destroying or attempting to destroy any right which this plaintiff, as the insurer of Silva's employer, might have to a further recovery against the defendant in the event of its payment of such lawful claim pursuant to the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. We are unable, however, to perceive that the legal status of the plaintiff's right of action is in any wise changed by this averment. If at the time of the defendant's alleged settlement with Silva he had a lawful claim against his employer arising out of his injury, the making of such claim had operated, under the foregoing clauses of the Workmen's Compensation Act, to transfer to his employer or the latter's insurer Silva's right of action for damages against the defendant as fully as though he executed a written assignment of his cause of action. This being so, no settlement which the defendant made with Silva could have been effectual to destroy or impair the already transferred right of action in the employer or insurer, no matter what the defendant's intent or purpose might have been in any settlement which it might thereafter make with Silva; and hence the averment of such intent or purpose would be immaterial as affecting the nature of the plaintiff's right of action.

If, on the other hand, the said Silva did not have or had not made a lawful claim against his employer or the latter's insurer at or prior to the time of his said settlement with the defendant, then his said settlement and receipt and release in full of all his claims for damages would have been effectual to destroy any subsequently assigned right of action; and in such event the plaintiff's averment of the defendant's intent and purpose as to that effect would be equally immaterial to its asserted cause of action.

Our conclusion from the foregoing views is that the plaintiff's assigned right of action against the defendant to recover the sum of $212.82 upon a claim which had its origin in the damages which its assignor Silva was entitled to recover by reason of his injuries suffered through the defendant's negligence was strictly a legal action for damages in a sum less than $300, over which the superior court had no original jurisdiction, and hence that the defendant's demurrer on that ground should have been sustained.

This view of the case renders immaterial the other points discussed upon this appeal.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to the trial court to enter an order dismissing the action.

(S. F. 7660.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1919.)

ACTION $\S$ 50(3)—JOINDER—PARTIES INVOLVED.

Causes of action to cancel and enjoin collection of promissory notes secured by fraud may not be united in one action against the same defendants, so as to avoid a multiplicity of suits, where proof of each fraudulent promise to each plaintiff must be distinct and independent, as must also be the proof of reliance and inducement in each of the 20 causes sought to be united.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by George Noroian and others against F. A. Bennett and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

B. F. Stone, Jr., of San Francisco (Harrison & Harrison, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Ohannesian & Ohannesian and C. K. Bonestell, all of Fresno, and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendants appeal from the judgment.

The sole question presented for our consideration is whether or not the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiffs against the defendants.

The facts alleged may be briefly stated. The plaintiffs were engaged in farming in the vicinity of Reedley, each conducting a separate farm on his own account. Each had been accustomed to purchase the supplies necessary for his farming operations from merchants in Reedley, and the business of each required that he should obtain these supplies on credit until he should realize money from his crops with which to pay for them. A corporation known as the California Rochdale Company, being about to purchase the business of the persons from whom plaintiffs had theretofore purchased their supplies on credit, at different times solicited the trade of each of the plaintiffs represented to each of them that it was about to purchase the business of said other persons and intended to establish a large general merchandise store in Reedley, and—

“promised to each of the plaintiffs that, if he would become a stockholder to the extent of one share in said Rochdale Company and would execute a promissory note in the sum of $90, payable to said Rochdale Company, and would transfer his purchasing to said Rochdale Company, he would get at least as much and as long credit as he had been receiving theretofore from any person from whom he had been purchasing his supplies.”

Relying upon these representations, and in consideration of the said promise made to each of them by said company that it would extend credit as aforesaid to each of them, each of the plaintiffs, respectively, in the months of March and April, 1913, executed to the company a promissory note for $90. The shares of stock in said company were not and never have been of any value whatever “to any of the parties to this action.” All of these notes were executed in the county of Fresno. Some of them specified that they should be paid in the county of Fresno, and others specified no place of payment. Each plaintiff thereupon transferred his custom to the Rochdale Company; said company gave each plaintiff credit up to and until June 1, 1913, but no longer, and thereafter refused any credit whatsoever to any of the plaintiffs, and required each to pay cash for any purchase made by him. At maturity of the notes the company transferred the same to the defendants, who have begun separate actions thereon against 11 of the plaintiffs, and are about to commence such actions against the other plaintiffs, respectively, in the justice’s court of the city and county of San Francisco. In each action a writ of attachment was issued and levied upon the property of the respective plaintiffs in the county of Fresno. Each of the plaintiffs resides, and at all times mentioned has resided, in the county of Fresno. It is alleged that “all of the plaintiffs have the same defense to said actions,” but nothing further is stated on that subject. Each plaintiff is poor, and the trials of the cases in San Francisco will impose great hardship and expense upon each of them. It is alleged that the merits of each of the said actions can be determined in this action, and thereby avoid a multiplicity of suits.

The prayer of the complaint is that the court take jurisdiction of the cause, determine the matters alleged, and render judgment perpetually restraining defendants from further prosecuting the actions, and requiring that the same be dismissed, and enjoining them from beginning other actions against the plaintiffs upon the said promissory notes.

The representations and promises which constituted the inducement to the several plaintiffs to execute their respective notes were not made jointly to all of the plaintiffs. The allegation is that they were made at different times to each plaintiff. The sum and substance of the plaintiffs' reason for the joinder of all of them in this action is that each plaintiff has executed a separate note to the Rochdale Company, which was obtained by said company by means of an act of fraud on each, consisting of a promise by the Rochdale Company to give such plaintiff credit upon his purchases of goods from said company, which promise the company had no intention of performing.

The plaintiffs base their claim that the law allows a case of this kind, upon the statement of Professor Pomeroy wherein he says that equity jurisdiction of bills of peace to prevent a multiplicity of suits—

"may and should be exercised, either on behalf of a numerous body of separate claimants against a single party, or on behalf of a single party against such a numerous body, although there is no 'common title,' nor 'community of right' or of 'interest in the subject-matter,' among these individuals, but where there is, and because there is, merely a community of interest among them in the questions of law and fact involved in the general controversy, or in the kind and form of relief demanded and obtained by or against each individual member of the numerous body. * * * Courts of the highest standing and ability have repeatedly interfered and exercised this jurisdiction, where the individual claims were not only legally separate, but were separate in time, and each arose from an entirely separate and distinct transaction, simply because there was a community of interest among all the claimants in the question at issue and in the remedy." 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 269, p. 445.

These passages illustrate the difficulty of stating a legal principle in abstract terms without a concrete illustration to show their application. In speaking of "a community of interest" in the questions of law and fact involved, the author was referring to cases where a single fact was decisive of the claim of all the parties concerned, as where persons owning separate rights in the waters of a stream are injured by a diversion of the water higher up on the stream by another person, or where a single fraudulent conveyance operates to the injury of several separate judgment creditors in the collection of their judgments, in each of which cases a single fact is the sole subject of the inquiry, or cases where owners of separate tracts of land unite in an action to quiet title against another claiming under a single land grant adversely to all of them, or where residents of a city, owning vehicles therein, unite to enjoin the enforcement of an illegal ordinance imposing taxes on such vehicles, or a suit by several lot owners to enjoin an illegal assessment upon all their lots for the improvement of a street, in each of which cases the same question of law may determine the rights of all the parties.

It is clear, from a consideration of the facts alleged in the complaint, that the present case is not included in any of the classes to which the rule stated by Mr. Pomeroy is applicable. There is no single fact or act, the determination of which will determine the rights of all the plaintiffs. There is no community of interest between the plaintiffs in the facts which are involved in the several actions on the promissory notes mentioned in the complaint, or in the defenses to such actions. Each plaintiff has a cause of action, though imperfectly alleged, to cancel a promissory note on the ground that the same was procured by fraud. The causes of action so far are similar. But the facts in the several cases are not shown to be the same, nor capable of proof by the same evidence. The promise made without intention of performance was not a single promise made to all the plaintiffs. Separate promises were made to each of them, and at different times. The proof of each promise must of necessity be distinct, independent, and not determinative of any other. To constitute such fraud the party must have relied on the promise made to him, and must have been induced thereby to enter into the contract. Such reliance and inducement would be the subject of independent proof and contradiction as to each plaintiff. One may have been persuaded by one statement, by a look, tone, or gesture, and another by something entirely different, and so there might be required different proof as to the means of persuasion of each of the 20 plaintiffs. The trial of the facts with respect to each note would not be an endeavor to prove a single act of the Rochdale Company as a common cause of a separate injury to each of the plaintiffs, as in the cases to which the doctrine of Mr. Pomeroy is addressed, but would be the proof of a separate injury to each plaintiff by evidence relating to him alone, and requiring a determination of the fact with respect to him alone. The trial of this joint action would require 20 different trials respecting 20 different conditions, to determine the facts upon which the rights of 20 different persons would depend, and neither trial would be a determination of the rights of any of the others. There is no case to which Mr. Pomeroy refers, nor any in the books so far as we have been advised, to justify the exercise of this jurisdiction in cases of this character. It may be that the same principles of law would govern the decision in all of the cases. This might be said of any number of cases of similar character, whether between the same persons or not. But there is no case which holds that parties having separate causes of action against the same person, all claiming under the same rules of law, have a common interest which justifies the joinder of all in one action to obtain the separate relief to which they may be entitled. We are of the opinion that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of all of the plaintiffs, but that at most it merely stated 20 separate and distinct causes of action, each in favor of a different plaintiff, and that it presents no sufficient ground for joining them all in one action.

The judgment is reversed.

UTAH STATE NAT. BANK v. SMITH et al.
(L. A. 5791.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1919.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ¶145—NEGOTIABILITY —LAW OF PLACE OF PAYMENT.

Negotiability of note dated and payable in Utah must be determined by law of place of payment.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ¶146—NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS LAW—CONSTRUCTION.

It is duty of courts, in construing the negotiable instruments law, to have in mind purpose of securing uniformity in law of commercial paper.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ¶155—NEGOTIABLE CHARACTER—ACCELERATION OF MATURITY—NONPAYMENT OF INTEREST—STATUTES—"DETERMINABLE."

Under Comp. Laws Utah 1907, §§ 1553, 1556, providing that instrument to be negotiable must be payable at determinable future time, and stating when instrument is so payable, note which provided that if interest was not paid when due, both principal and interest should become due at option of holder, was negotiable; "determinable" meaning what may be determined, found out, definitely decided upon, or settled.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by the Utah State National Bank, a corporation, against F. Owen Smith and another. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Joseph L. Lewinsohn and Percy V. Hammon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. Y. Williams and A. W. Rutan, both of Santa Ana, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. [1] Appellants, claiming to be bona fide purchasers for value of a negotiable promissory note, brought this action against the makers thereof to enforce its payment. The defendants, asserting that the note was nonnegotiable, interposed a defense valid against the payee therein. The court instructed the jury that the note was nonnegotiable, and that the defense, if established, would defeat recovery on the note. A verdict was rendered favorable to the defendants, and judgment thereon entered. This is an appeal from the judgment. The note in question was dated and payable in Utah, and its negotiability must be determined by the law of the place of payment. 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (6th Ed.) §§ 865, 879; Wharton on Conflict of Laws (3d Ed.) 451d; notes, 61 L. R. A. 209; 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 670, 671. The provision relied upon to establish nonnegotiability is the usual provision for accelerating the due date for default in the payment of interest, as follows:

"If the interest is not paid when due, then both principal and interest shall become due at the option of the holder of this note."

At the time of the execution of the note and when it was payable the uniform negotiable instrument law was in effect in Utah, although not then adopted in California. The terms of the Utah statute are shown in evidence, and, so far as the question here involved is concerned, are substantially the same as the uniform negotiable instrument law enacted in California in 1917. The two sections of the Utah law involved are 1553 and 1556 of the Compiled Laws of Utah, which are identical in language with our Civil Code, sections 3082, 3085, as enacted in 1917 (St. 1917, pp. 1532, 1533), and to sections 1 and 4 of the uniform negotiable instrument law (Crawford's Annotated Negotiable Instrument Law, pp. 11, 19), and read as follows, viz.:

"1553. Negotiable Instruments, Requirements of. An instrument to be negotiable must conform to the following requirements:

"1. It must be in writing and signed by the maker or drawer;

"2. Must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a sum certain in money;

"3. Must be payable on demand, or at a fixed or determinable future time;

"4. Must be payable to the order of specified person or to bearer; and,

"5. Where the instrument is addressed to a drawee, he must be named or otherwise indicated therein with reasonable certainty."

"1556. Time Payable. An instrument is payable at a determinable future time, within the meaning of this title, which is expressed to be payable:

"1. At a fixed period after date or sight; or
 "2. On or before a fixed or determinable future time specified therein; or
 "3. On or at a fixed period after the occurrence of a specified event, which is certain to happen, though the time of happening be uncertain. An instrument payable upon a contingency is not negotiable, and the happening of the event does not cure the defect."

This uniform law has now been adopted by all but two states of the Union (Georgia and Texas). The history of its drafting and enactment in the various states makes it clear that the purpose was to secure uniformity of legislation and decision throughout the United States, and the purpose is further manifest by a general proviso with reference to the applicability of the general law merchant to supplement the legislation, and no doubt to aid in its interpretation, as follows, viz.:

"In any case not provided for in this act the rules of the law merchant shall govern." Utah Negotiable Instrument Law, § 196; Crawford's Ann. Negotiable Instrument Law, § 196, p. 8.

[2,3] It is generally held that it is the duty of the courts in construing this law to have in mind the purpose of securing uniformity in the law of commercial paper. State Bank, etc., v. Bilstad, 162 Iowa, 433, 136 N. W. 204, 144 N. W. 363, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132; Felt v. Bush, 41 Utah, 462, 126 Pac. 688; Union Trust Co. v. McGinty, 212 Mass. 205, 98 N. E. 679, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 525; Broderick v. McGrath, 81 Misc. Rep. 199, 142 N. Y. Supp. 497; Rockfield v. First Nat. Bank, 77 Ohio St. 311, 83 N. E. 392, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842. As the view of the Supreme Court of Utah on this rule of interpretation is of special interest, we quote from the case of Felt v. Bush, supra, as follows:

"The question, therefore, it seems to us, has passed beyond the domain of judicial discussion. As we understand it, the negotiable instruments law was intended to give legislative sanction to the majority rule to which reference has been made and was conceived by its authors and adopted by the different state Legislatures for the express purpose of harmonizing the conflicting decisions which had been rendered on the subject of negotiable instruments and the rights of those interested therein whose rights were acquired before maturity. As we view it, therefore, it is our plain duty to follow the numerous decisions that have directly passed upon the negotiable instruments law, and have construed it in accordance with the majority rule. The question is one of business expediency, and not of logic or equity as applied to an individual case."

Before the enactment of this law the great weight of authority was that under the law merchant the clause accelerating the due date did not destroy its negotiability. Chicago Railway Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 10 Sup. Ct. 999,

Williamson*, 8 Utah, 219, 30 Pac. 753. All the decisions based upon the uniform negotiable instrument law, so far as we are advised, hold that the clause in question does not destroy the negotiability of a promissory note. First Nat. Bank v. Barrett, 52 Mont. 359, 157 Pac. 951; Bright v. Offield, 81 Wash. 442, 143 Pac. 159; Mackintosh v. Gibbs, 79 N. J. Law, 40, 74 Atl. 708; Des Moines, etc., Bank v. Arthur, 163 Iowa, 205, 143 N. W. 556, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 498; State Bank v. Bilstad, supra. The reasoning by which the courts have reached the conclusion that such a note is negotiable is not in each case the same. By section 1553, supra (3082 of our Code), a note is negotiable if payable at a "determinable future time." A matter is determinable "that may be accurately found out, settled, or determined." Standard Dictionary. That is, "capable of being determined, definitely decided upon, decided upon or ended." Webster's New International Dictionary. A future determinable time could be one determinable at some time in the future, as well as one determinable at present, or in advance. By section 1556 (3085 of our Code) it is sought to make clearer what is meant by a "determinable future time." An instrument payable at a fixed period after sight is payable at a "determinable future time," the exact date of payment being ascertainable at the date of presentation, but not before. A note payable "on or before a fixed date" is payable at a "determinable future time." If the instrument expressly states that it is payable "on or before" a fixed date, it is payable at the date in question or, at the option of the payor, at any earlier date selected by him for payment. The exact due date is thus left to be determined at a future date by the option of the payor, if exercised before the fixed due date. Under the law merchant the option in such a case lies altogether with the payor, but the due date is no less "determinable" when the option lies with the payee instead of the payor, and if the option of the payee is limited to the case of a default in the payment of an installment of interest the date of maturity is not less determinable in the future, for it may be fixed by the payee at any reasonable time after such default. It should be observed that the statute does not say that only an instrument which uses the words "on or before" a fixed date is negotiable. It declares that an instrument which is in fact payable on or before a certain date is negotiable. For the reasons stated the note in question is payable at a determinable future time, to wit, at a fixed date or before that date at the payee's option in case of a default in the payment of interest. There seems no reason for supposing that in this attempt to secure uniform legislation and decision it was intended to change a well-settled rule of the law merchant, by which in nearly every state such a note was negotiable. Construed in the light of such rule, and under the plain language of the statute, the note is clearly negotiable.

Respondent calls attention to the fact that the Utah negotiable instrument law differs from that of California and some other states, in that the words "or of interest" contained in section 3083, subdivision 3, of our amended Civil Code, and section 2 of the uniform law (Crawford's Ann. Neg. Inst. Law, p. 13) are not included in the corresponding section (1554) of the Utah law. This section, however, defines when "the sum payable is a sum certain within the meaning of the act." The provision of the California law states that the sum is certain "although it is paid * * * by stated installments with a provision that upon default in payment of any installment or of interest, the whole shall become due." But the question here involved is with reference to certainty in the time of payment and turns upon the construction of subdivision 2 of section 3085, supra. Our attention is called to certain decisions by the courts of California upon the subject of the negotiability of promissory notes: National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881; Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110; Smiley v. Watson, 23 Cal. App. 409, 138 Pac. 367. It is suggested that in the interpretation of the uniform negotiable instrument law of Utah we should consider the same in the light of these decisions, on the theory that the Utah law is presumed to be the same as our own, except where shown to be to the contrary. That rule has no applicability here, for the reason that it was stipulated in the court below that the statute in question constituted the law in Utah. The decisions of the courts of this state, based upon its various Code provisions concerning negotiable instruments, and particularly upon sections 3088 and 3093, Civil Code, since repealed and replaced by the uniform negotiable instrument act, obviously can be of no assistance in ascertaining the law of Utah under the uniform act. Nor are we called upon to prophesy what the courts of Utah may do when the same question comes before them under the uniform negotiable instrument law. The question simply is: What interpretation do we place upon the language of the Utah statute in proof in this case? If there is any decision of the Supreme Court of Utah bearing upon the construction of the statute, such decision was not proved in the case, and, it may be added, is not now called to our attention. The note was negotiable under the law of Utah. The instruction to the contrary was erroneous. Judgment reversed.

HOLCOMB v. BREITKREUTZ. (L. A. 4698.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR  1002—TRIAL—VERDICT UPON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

An appellate court will not interfere with a verdict based upon conflicting testimony.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Earl A. Holcomb against Otto Breitkreutz. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John Munro, of Los Angeles (Fay R. Robertson, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

T. C. Gould and Frank Stewart, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant for $825 for assault and battery. Defendant appeals. Appellant's first point is thus stated:

"While the defendant fully realizes that ordinarily appellate courts will not interfere with a judgment or verdict where the testimony in the case is conflicting, yet it would appear to appellant that the record in this case discloses that the preponderance of evidence was in his favor."

Counsel thus correctly states the rule that this court will not interfere with the verdict where the testimony is conflicting. The second point is that the verdict is excessive. Plaintiff claimed $5,000 punitive and $5,000 actual damages. The damages were not excessive. The appeal is frivolous.

Judgment is affirmed, with $100 damages to the plaintiff for a frivolous appeal.

SPENCER et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (L. A. 4727.)(Supreme Court of California, Feb. 28, 1919.
Rehearing Denied March 27, 1919.)1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(2)—ASSESSMENTS—PAYMENT UNDER COMPELSION—RECOVERY.

The general rule is that money paid on void assessments is not deemed to have been paid under compulsion, so as to allow recovery, where there is nothing to compel payment except mere threat by officer of a sale of property or a suit.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(2)—PAYMENT OF STREET ASSESSMENT—DURESS.

Where property owners did not pay assessments for opening street in Los Angeles until after published notice of sale for delinquent assessments, but before sale, held, there was duress of property of payers within the rule that payments so made may be recovered, since deed to purchaser at sale would, under St. 1903, pp. 383, 384, $\S$ 25-29, be prima facie evidence of title.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(4)—ASSESSMENTS PAID UNDER PROTEST—RECOVERY.

Where invalidity of street opening assessments was due to latent defect, the property owners would, in any litigation with purchaser at sale for delinquent assessments, be compelled to establish facts showing defect, and in such case a threatened sale would imperil owners' property, so that they could pay assessments under protest and subsequently recover.

4. TRIAL $\S$ 395(5) — FINDING — ULTIMATE FACTS.

Finding that owners paid their respective assessments for opening a street "under protest, and did, at the time of said payment, then and there reserve to themselves and each of them the right to fully recover the same," was a sufficient finding of the ultimate fact that payments were accompanied by valid protest.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(4)—STREET ASSESSMENTS—PAYMENT—PROTEST—SUFFICIENCY.

Pol. Code, $\S$ 3819, does not apply to special assessments made under street opening act of 1903, and since the act itself makes no provision therefor, the sufficiency of protest of property owners when they paid assessments must be determined by the rules of the common law under which oral protest is sufficient.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(5)—MUNICIPAL ASSESSMENTS — PAYMENT — RECOVERY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Since payers when paying assessment for opening of street could make their protests, in parol, evidence of conversations on the subject between payers and collecting officers at time of respective payments was admissible.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(4)—PAYMENT OF ASSESSMENT — PROTEST — SUFFICIENCY.

The bringing of an action to test validity of street opening proceeding was express notice that plaintiffs therein claimed that assessments were illegal, and as to payers who were parties plaintiff and paid after notice of sale for delinquent assessments, it was unnecessary to specify grounds of protest when making payments.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(4) — ASSESSMENTS VOLUNTARILY PAID—RECOVERY.

As to property owners who paid assessments for opening street before notice of sale of their property for delinquent assessments, there was no duress of property, and a protest was unavailing.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(5)—RECOVERY OF ASSESSMENTS PAID UNDER PROTEST—INTEREST.

In action to recover money paid upon assessments for opening a street, interest should have been allowed against defendant city on payments made under protest only from the date the invalidity of the assessments was established by final judgment.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(5)—BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS—LIABILITY FOR ASSESSMENTS PAID UNDER PROTEST.

Action would not lie against those who were members of board of public works of defendant city at the time assessments for opening street were paid under protest, where, at the time action was begun, the money collected had all been paid into city treasury and expended by city in satisfaction of damages awarded to persons whose lands were taken and damaged.

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 523(1)—ASSESSMENTS PAID UNDER PROTEST—RECOVERY.

A city is liable for void assessments paid under protest, although before the action was begun the money collected upon the assessments had all been paid out to persons whose land was taken or damaged for the opening of the street.

12. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS $\S$ 28(1)—MUNICIPAL ASSESSMENTS PAID UNDER PROTEST.

Action to recover money paid upon assessments for opening a street is not founded upon any instrument in writing, and Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 339, subd. 1, barring action in two years, would apply.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 843(2)—MATTERS NOT NECESSARY TO DECISION—REVIEW.

Decision that payments of void assessments for opening a street were not made by two of the payers under duress makes it unnecessary to consider the effect of the statute of limitations upon that part of plaintiffs' claim based upon such payments.

14. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS $\S$ 66(3)—CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST CITY—ACCRUAL.

Where the charter of a city provides that demands must be presented to its council or some officer for approval or rejection, and that no payments can be made or suit be brought thereon until after such presentation and rejection, the cause of action does not accrue until presentation has taken place.

15. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 65(1)—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

When plaintiff's right of action depends upon some preliminary act which he has to perform, and the time within which such act must be performed is indefinite, a reasonable time will be allowed therefor, after which limitations will begin to run.

16. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 66(3)—ACTION TO RECOVER ASSESSMENTS PAID—ACCRUAL—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM TO CITY.

Where payments of municipal assessments were made only five days before beginning of the two-year period preceding action against defendant city to recover payments, action cannot be deemed barred under two-year statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1), in view of city charter, providing for presentation and approval or rejection of claims against city.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Byron M. Spencer and others against the City of Los Angeles and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. W. Hyams, F. E. Davis, and Davis & Hyams, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. In this action the plaintiffs seek to recover money paid upon assessments for the opening of a street in Los Angeles, under the street opening act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376). The court below gave judgment in favor of plaintiffs against all of the defendants. The appeal is from the judgment. The record also presents for review an order denying a motion for a new trial.

The ground of the action was that the assessments were invalid, and that the payments were made by compulsion and under protest. The proposition that the assessments in question were invalid was established by the decision of the District Court of Appeal in Walker et al. v. Los Angeles et al., 23 Cal. App. 634, 139 Pac. 89. The board of public works and the persons who were members thereof at that time were parties defendant to that action. The court there held that said assessment and all proceedings leading up to it were void because of the fact that there was a latent ambiguity in the description of the boundaries of the district in the ordinance of intention under which the proceedings were instituted, and that this ambiguity, when shown, made the description of the district uncertain and void. The defendants do not question the soundness of that decision. In the present action the plaintiffs claim as assignees of 54 of the property owners who, it is alleged, paid said assessment under protest, the amount paid being in the aggregate $46,599.32. The court below made findings in favor of the plaintiffs, covering the claims of 40 of the plaintiffs' assignors, amounting to $30,609.25.

The appellants present the following points as cause for reversal: (1) That the payments were not made under any duress of person or property, and were not accompanied by any valid or sufficient protest, and hence that they were voluntary payments which cannot be recovered. (2) That the court erred in allowing the plaintiffs interest accruing from the time of the making of the payments. (3) That the personal judgment against the members of the board of public works is not sustained by the findings or the evidence. (4) That the action was not begun until after the money paid in upon the assessments had been paid out by the city upon the damages allowed in the proceeding for the opening of the street, and that in such a case the money cannot be recovered from the city or its officers. (5) That with respect to some of the assignors of the plaintiffs the action is barred by the two-year statute of limitations. Some minor points regarding rulings upon the admission of evidence will be considered in connection with the question of voluntary payments. We will consider the points in the order above stated.

[1, 2] 1. The general rule is that money paid to an officer upon taxes or assessments which are alleged to be illegal and void are not deemed in law to have been paid under compulsion, so as to allow a recovery thereof, where there is nothing to induce or compel payment except the mere threat by the officer of a sale of property or a suit for the recovery thereof if payment is not made. There must be in addition some coercion or compulsion which amounts to a duress of the person or property of the payor. Phealan v. San Francisco, 120 Cal. 5, 52 Pac. 38; Maxwell v. San Luis Obispo County, 71 Cal. 466, 12 Pac. 484. In the present case, however, we think the facts show that there was such coercion and compulsion.

The conditions under which the payments were made were as follows: Under the charter of the city of Los Angeles, its board of public works exercised the powers conferred by the act of 1903, aforesaid, on the street superintendent. Stats. 1905, p. 983. In pursuance of the ordinance above mentioned, the board made and filed an assessment for the expenses of the street opening, and published notice thereof. The assessment charged certain sums of money against lands of the plaintiffs' assignors. These assessments thereafter became delinquent, and on December 8, 1911, the board published a notice of the sale of the property for such delinquent assessments, stating therein that the property would be sold on December 27, 1911, unless the assessments thereon with penalties and costs were paid in the meantime. Prior to the day of sale the plaintiffs' assignors paid their respective assessments. The act of 1903 provides that if a delinquent assessment is not paid, the property assessed must be sold to any person who will take the least quantity of land and pay the assessment, penalty, and costs; that a certificate of sale must be issued to such purchaser, which vests in him the lien of the assessment; that after 12 months from the sale, if the purchaser has given proper notice of his application therefor, a deed of the property sold must be made to him; that at any time prior to the execution of such deed the property may be redeemed from such sale; and that such deed "shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of all matters recited therein, and of the legality of all proceedings prior to the execution thereof, and of title in the grantee." Stats. 1903, p. 383, §§ 25-29.

The rule regarding payments made under such circumstances is well established by our decisions. Gill v. Oakland, 124 Cal. 335, 57 Pac. 150, is a case in point. That was an action to recover money paid under protest upon a street opening assessment, made under the act of 1889 (Stats. 1889, p. 70), which in all essential particulars, so far as this question is concerned, was identical with the act of 1903. Concerning the claim that payment made after the giving of notice of sale and before the sale was to take place was voluntary, the court said (at page 341 of 124 Cal., at page 152 of 57 Pac.):

"Under the rule stated in Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 128, many times approved by this court, the deed would cast a cloud upon plaintiff's title. It has been recently held here that where an officer is about to sell property under a void assessment he may be enjoined. Chase v. City Treasurer, 122 Cal. 540 [55 Pac. 414]. This remedy was open to plaintiff in the present case. But it was not the only remedy available to him. He also had the right to pay the assessment under protest, setting forth the grounds of its illegality, in order to prevent the sale and clouding the title of his property; and he could look for relief in an action at law, which this is. The facts which gave the remedy of injunction gave the remedy at law, and payment after protest, under the circumstances here disclosed, was payment under duress. Where the deed shows on its face that the tax or assessment was void, or the law under which it was levied was invalid, a payment has been held to be voluntary and not recoverable. Such were the facts in the cases cited by appellant. In the present case, however, plaintiff's rights would have been cut off if he had not paid the assessment or enjoined the sale."

The reason for the distinction made between this and the other cases where payment was held to be voluntary is that in those cases the deed upon the invalid sale would, when executed, show on its face its invalidity, so that when the grantee therein sought to establish his right under the deed, his very attempt to do so would defeat such right. In such a case it is well established that equity will not enjoin the making of the sale or the execution of the deed, and it has also been held that the threat of such sale and deed does not constitute sufficient duress of property to make the payment under protest involuntary within the doctrine that an involuntary payment may be recovered. In the present case the proceedings were not void on their face, and the deed, when executed, would have been prima facie evidence of the title of the grantee to the land purporting to be conveyed thereby.

[3] The defect in the description of the boundary was a latent defect. It did not appear on the face of the ordinance, but was made to appear in the case of Walker v. Los Angeles, supra, by extrinsic proof showing that the calls in the boundary lines were so uncertain that, when applied to the extrinsic facts, the point to which they would lead could not be ascertained. In any litigation by the property owner with a grantee under such sale, it would be necessary for such owner to establish these facts. For these reasons the case comes within the rule that his property is imperiled by the threatened sale, and that he may pay the assessment under protest and subsequently recover it in an action. In the cases of Williams v. Corcoran, 46 Cal. 553, Wills v. Austin, 53 Cal. 152, and Byrne v. Drain, 127 Cal. 663, 60 Pac. 433, cited by the appellant, the deed and the proceedings thereunder were invalid on their face, and consequently did not create any cloud upon the title to the land, or constitute duress of property sufficient to make such payment involuntary. Maskey v. Lackmann, 146 Cal. 780, 81 Pac. 115. They do not conflict with the doctrine stated in Gill v. Oakland, supra.

It is urged that the previous decisions on the subject favorable to the respondent were overruled in Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 87 Pac. 102. The point now under consideration was not involved in that case. It was a suit to enjoin a sale by the tax collector. The main question discussed was the discretionary power of courts of equity to enjoin the ordinary proceedings for the collection of taxes. It was said to be the rule that such injunction would not issue, unless it was necessary to protect the rights of the property owner, or unless it appeared that he had no adequate remedy at law, and therefore that "a court of equity will go no further than is necessary to protect the rights of the property owner, and will not to any greater extent impede the officers of the state in the performance of their duties." 149 Cal. 594, 87 Pac. 110. Upon this principle the court held that under the law then existing, under which the only thing done on the day of sale would be a formal entry of the sale to the state itself of all delinquent property on the roll, a sale redeemable at any time within five years, and thereafter until the state should receive a deed from the tax collector and should offer the property for resale, that neither the certificate of sale nor anything to be done prior to the execution of the deed, more than five years afterward, constituted prima facie evidence of the validity of the proceedings, and therefore that equity would not interpose to prevent the performance of the preliminary acts by the tax collector. Although not stated in the opinion, it might have been said as another reason for denying the injunction that the property owner would have a remedy at law under section 3819 of the Political Code by paying the alleged illegal tax and proceeding with the action there authorized to recover it from the county. This case is not in conflict with the rule that in cases not covered by section 3819, where the ultimate result of the threatened sale will be the execution of a deed prima facie valid, the party may prevent the sale by payment under protest, and that such payment will not be deemed voluntary, but may be recovered in an action for money paid.

[4] With respect to the protest, the finding is that the owners paid their respective assessments "under protest, and did, at the time of said payment, then and there reserve to themselves and each of them the right to fully recover the same." This is a sufficient finding of the ultimate fact. The evidence in support of this finding is claimed to be insufficient. It appears that the action of Walker et al. v. Los Angeles et al. was begun some time prior to December 4, 1911; that its object was to enjoin the city of Los Angeles and the board of public works from making any sale of the property of plaintiffs therein upon the assessment in question; that the amended complaint therein was served on the defendants on December 4, 1911; that on December 8, 1911, as above stated, the board of public works gave the necessary notice of sale, fixing the date of the sale as December 27, 1911; that almost all of the plaintiffs' assignors in this action were plaintiffs in the aforesaid action to enjoin the sale; that while this action was pending, the payments herein sued for, with two exceptions to be hereafter noticed, were made to the board of public works. The books of the board show that opposite the entries therein of the assessments against 23 of plaintiffs' assignors, there was indorsed in red ink at the time of payment thereof by the collecting officer the words, "paid under protest." Ten of the persons whose payments were not so marked testified on the trial that when they made the payments they orally stated to the collecting officer that they paid the same under protest. One or two of these do not appear to have used the word "protest," but merely objected that the tax was unjust, because their property was assessed in greater proportion than the property of some others within the district. As the case must be reversed for other reasons, it is unnecessary to determine here whether with respect to these two persons the protest was sufficient. There was no evidence that any of the persons paying under protest specified at that time, as grounds thereof, that the assessments were void because of the latent ambiguity in the description above referred to. As to those whose payments were marked as paid under protest on the collector's book there was no other evidence of the nature of the protest except the entry on said book. The complaint in Walker et al. v. Los Angeles et al., stated clearly the facts concerning the latent ambiguity in the description upon which the assessment was finally adjudged to be void. From the testimony of the witnesses concerning the conversations at the time of payment, and from the pendency of the Walker Case, and the allegations of the complaint therein, the court below might reasonably have inferred that the grounds upon which the parties claimed that the assessments were invalid, were fully understood, both by the protesting owners and by the collecting officers, as including those stated in said complaint; and that there was no necessity for further specification to make the reasons for the protest fully understood by such officers.

The appellant contends that the protests should have been in writing, and further, that, whether written or oral, the law requires that a protest shall specify the particulars in which the assessment is claimed to be illegal.

[5,6] Section 3819 of the Political Code provides that the protest there authorized must be in writing, and must specify the grounds upon which the payor claims that the tax is void. But this section refers only to ordinary taxes for state and county purposes. It does not apply to special assessments made under the street opening act of 1903, nor to other special assessments, except where the act providing therefor makes the provisions of section 3819 applicable. Davis v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 67, 46 Pac. 863; Easterbrook v. San Francisco, 44 Pac. 800¹; Phelan v. San Francisco, 120 Cal. 4, 52 Pac. 38; Justice v. Robinson, 142 Cal. 199, 75 Pac. 776. The act of 1903 contains no provision on the subject. Consequently the sufficiency of the protests in question must be determined by the rules of the common law. Justice v. Robinson, supra. The common-law rule is that a writing is not essential to the validity or effect of any transaction or contract. Careful persons resorted to writings in order to preserve a more accurate memorial of the terms of the agreement or statement so as to facilitate the proof thereof. But this was a measure of convenience only, and the affair, when proven, was, at common law, as effectual when in parol as when it was in writing. It was competent, therefore, for the parties to make their protests in parol, and it necessarily follows that the court did not err in admitting the testimony of the conversations on the subject between the persons making the payments and the collecting officer at the times of the respective payments. It being a matter that could have been accomplished in parol, all the conversation and all the circumstances that would tend to show the understanding of the parties regarding the matter at the time the respective payments were made would be admissible.

[7] We think an analysis of our decisions shows that under the circumstances of this case it was not necessary that the grounds should be specified at the time of making the payment. The question was under discussion in Meek v. McClure, 49 Cal. 628, where the court said:

"In most of the cases in which the effect of a protest is considered, the payment was made to a public officer; and the only purpose of the protest was to give the officer notice that the money was not legally due, and thus to enable the officer to protect himself against the consequences of an action to recover the money back from him. The officer is thereby put on inquiry as to whether the money is legally due; and if he finds that the demand is illegal, he may protect himself by refusing to receive the money; or, if he finds that it is of doubtful legality, he may take the proper steps to avoid, or protect himself against responsibility. If the officer has notice of the matter which renders the demand illegal another notice in the form of a protest would be useless; but if he has no knowledge of such matter, he ought not to be subjected to the costs and consequences of an action to recover the money from him—and that too, perhaps, after he has paid over the money in the usual course of official business—without notice from the party paying the money of the grounds upon which he claims that the demand is not legally due."

It is true that in that case the court further said that wherever a protest is essential it was "necessary to state the grounds upon which the party paying the money claims that the demand is illegal." But that was an action against the collecting officer alone, and there was nothing to show that he had actual knowledge of the defect which made the tax void and the statement last quoted obviously referred to that phase of the case. In Mason v. Johnson, 51 Cal. 612, the protest did not state the grounds upon which it was claimed the tax was void, but merely stated that it was unlawful. The officer was not authorized by law to collect the tax. The court held the protest to be sufficient, because the tax collector "was bound to take notice of the matter which rendered the tax illegal," it being a matter of law. So in Smith v. Farrelly, 52 Cal. 77, a tax was held to be illegal because it was made by a county assessor instead of a district assessor, and the tax collector of the county was not authorized to collect it because of the fact that he was elected as the county tax collector, and not as the district tax collector. The protest did not state either of these facts as grounds thereof. It was held that this was not necessary because the tax collector must know that he was not elected as the tax collector of the district, and that the assessment had not been made by the proper assessor; the court saying:

"It is not necessary for the person paying taxes under protest to state facts of which the tax collector has notice."

Parenthetically, it may be remarked that the court in that case further decided that a tax paid after the delinquent list had come into the hands of the tax collector, and after the publication of the notice of the delinquent sale, was a payment under duress. Again, in De Fremery v. Austin, 53 Cal. 382, the court said on this subject:

"The protest in this case does not specify any grounds of illegality of the taxes. It was not necessary for the plaintiffs to specify the illegality of the tax upon the solvent debts, or of the state tax upon the other property, for the tax collector is chargeable with notice of their illegality; but if they desired to recover back any portion of the tax on the ground that the levy for certain of the funds specified in the order of the board levying the city and county tax was illegal, they should have specified the grounds of the alleged illegality of the tax, for there is nothing in the case showing that the tax collector was chargeable with notice of the alleged illegality."

In each of these cases the action was against the collecting officer alone. The public corporation for which he acted was not sued. In the case at bar the action is against the city of Los Angeles. The members of the board of public works are also parties defendant, but, as will presently appear, they are not personally or officially liable in the action. The case may therefore be considered as if it were against the city alone. The action in the Walker Case was express notice to the city, and to all of its agencies empowered to act on the matter, that the plaintiffs therein claimed that these assessments were illegal and of the particular facts upon which such claim was based. It is obvious that no further information to the city was necessary. The rule established by the foregoing decisions is that even in cases where the collecting officer has not paid over the money and is therefore still subject to action, specifications of the grounds of protest are not necessary where such officer is chargeable with knowledge of the illegality of the tax, or is aware of the facts which make it illegal, and that in such cases a general statement that it is illegal is sufficient. We conclude, therefore, that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding, at least with respect to all the payors who were parties plaintiff in the Walker Case, and who paid after the notice of sale was given, and who paid under protest.

[8] There were two of plaintiffs' assignors, Abbott and Straube, who paid their assessments before the notice of sale was given. As has already been shown, there was at that time no duress of property. There was only an apparent lien upon that property. At that time no proceeding to enforce the lien by a sale had been instituted. The protest was therefore unavailing. Brumagin v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 266, 79 Am. Dec. 176. The judgment, so far as these claims are concerned, was erroneous, because the payments were voluntary.

2. The judgment in this case exceeds the aggregate amount of the payments which were allowed to plaintiffs by about $9,000. The appellants claim that it is excessive to that extent. The excess is made up of interest accruing on the payments from December, 1911, to the date of judgment. It has become established by our decisions that in an action to recover taxes paid under protest under section 3819 of the Political Code no interest from the time of payment to the date of judgment can be allowed. Savings & L. Soc. v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 356, 63 Pac. 665; Columbia Savings Bank v. Los Angeles, 137 Cal. 471, 70 Pac. 308; Miller v. Kern County, 150 Cal. 797, 90 Pac. 119. In the Columbia Savings Bank Case the court said that interest was not allowable for the reasons: First, that the statute did not provide for it; second, that the money could not be said to be due from the county "until its liability was fixed by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction"; and, third, that it was not a loan of money which could be presumed to be made upon interest.

[9] We think the same rule should apply to money paid under protest and governed by the common law, and that the proper rule applicable here is that interest should not have been charged against the city of Los Angeles until the invalidity of the assessments was established by the final judgment of the court against the city in the action of Walker and others v. Los Angeles aforesaid. That judgment established the invalidity of the assessment, and settled the question that the defendant city was withholding money from the plaintiffs without right. It brings the case within the provision of section 1915 of the Civil Code allowing interest for the "detention of money." It is true that, while the assignors of plaintiffs were parties to that action at the time the payments were made, they afterwards withdrew therefrom and dismissed the action so far as they were concerned, but it is at least a fair presumption that this withdrawal was made because of the fact that in the meantime they had preserved their rights to recover the money by making the protest accompanying the payment thereof, and under these circumstances we see no reason why they were not entitled to interest as soon as it was adjudged that the city had no right to exact payment, and that it was unjustly withholding the money from the plaintiffs. The court erred in so far as it allowed interest for a time antedating the final judgment in that action.

[10] 3. The judgment appealed from purports to run, not only against the city of Los Angeles, but also against the persons who at the time of the payments were members of the board of public works, and against the board of public works also. The board of public works is an agency of the city, it has no separate corporate existence, and so far as we are aware it is incapable of either suing or being sued, except perhaps in mandamus to compel the performance of its duty. Consequently the judgment, so far as the board is concerned, is unauthorized. With respect to the liability of the members thereof who were in office at the time the payments were made, it appears from the evidence that the money collected upon these assessments was all paid into the treasury of the city and paid out of the treasury in satisfaction of damages awarded to the persons whose lands were taken and damaged by the opening of the street, and that this all occurred before the beginning of the present action. It is settled by our decisions that an action will not lie against collecting officers or boards, such as the board of public works and its members, to recover money paid upon an illegal assessment, unless the money still remains in the hands of the board or its members at the time such action is begun. Hartford, etc., Co. v. Jordan, 168 Cal. 270, 142 Pac. 839; Craig v. Boone, 146 Cal. 718, 81 Pac. 22. It follows that the judgment against the members of the board is not sustained by the evidence.

[11] 4. As has just been said, there can be no recovery in cases like the present against one who is a mere collection officer and who before the action is begun has paid the money over to his principal in due course of law. The appellants contend that this rule applies to the city itself, and that it cannot be held liable because of the fact that before the action was begun the money collected upon these assessments had all been paid out upon the damages allowed to the persons whose land was taken or damaged for the opening of the street. Wherever a city or a county occupies a position similar to that of a collection agent who has paid the money collected over to his principal, this rule applies. The cases cited by the appellants are of this character. They are Elberg v. County of San Luis Obispo, 112 Cal. 316, 41 Pac. 475, 44 Pac. 572, Pacific, etc., Co. v. County of San Diego, 112 Cal. 314, 41 Pac. 423, 44 Pac. 571, Easterbrook v. San Francisco, 44 Pac. 800,² and Davis v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 67, 46 Pac. 863. In these cases it was held that where a collection officer of one public corporation, a county tax collector, for example, is also and ex officio empowered to collect taxes levied for another public corporation, such as a school district, which tax, when collected, belongs to and is to be paid over to such other corporation, a suit against the county for the recovery of the money paid to such collecting officer upon such a tax, upon the ground that the tax was illegal and void, cannot be maintained, unless it is begun before the money has been paid over to the other public corporation for which it was collected and to which it belonged. These decisions have no application here so far as the city of Los Angeles is concerned. The street opening district formed for the purposes of the assessment was not a public corporation, but was a mere area or taxing district which the proper authority had declared to be specially benefited by the proposed improvement. The city had the right of possession and control of the funds raised by the assessment. It had the power to raise funds for such street opening either by a proceeding for a special assessment, as here attempted, or by general taxation upon all the taxable property in the city. Section 2, subds. 13, 16, 18, and 19, City Charter (Stats. 1911, 2061). The money when raised belonged to the city. The protest made to the city preserved to the assessment payers the right to recover the same against the city, and it could not thereafter pay out the money in pursuance of the illegal assessment and thereby escape liability to the property owners. Upon receiving the money under a protest properly made it was the duty of the city to withhold the funds until the legality of the assessment was ascertained, and when that point was decided against the city it became its duty immediately to return the money to those from whom it had been received. This is clearly the effect of the decision of this court in Gill v. Oakland, supra, where the facts were in all essential particulars the same as those here existing. The only difference is that in that case the city had previously advanced money from its general fund for the opening of the street, and the assessment which was declared to be illegal was levied for the purpose of refunding the same to the city. Here the city, having used the money it had illegally collected to pay for the opening of the street, must be deemed to be in the same position as if it had paid out the same from its general fund. The difference in the two cases does not justify any different rule regarding the city's liability.

[12, 13] 5. Appellants claim that with respect to the payments made by Straube and Abbott, Lee and Parish, the action is barred by the two-year statute of limitations, as an action not founded upon an instrument in writing. Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1. There can be no question but that the action is not founded upon an instrument in writing, and therefore this statute applies. The action was begun on December 20, 1913. The payments of the above-named parties were all made more than two years before that time. Those of Straube and Abbott were made in November, 1911. As we have already decided that these two parties did not pay under duress or compulsion and could not recover, it is unnecessary to consider the effect of the statute of limitations upon that part of the plaintiff's claim. The payments of Lee and Parish were made on December 15, 1911, five days more than the two years prior to the beginning of the action.

[14-16] If the cause of action to recover the money accrued immediately upon such payment, these claims would be barred. But this is not the case. The city charter provides that claims against the city shall be paid only on demands as provided therein; that every claim must be first presented to and approved by the board authorized to incur the liability represented thereby, in this case the board of public works; that if such claim is approved it must then be presented to the city auditor to be audited by him, and that if he rejects it or approves it in part only it shall then go to the finance committee of the council; that it must then be considered by such committee and reported to the council for its action thereon; that the council may overrule or sustain the objection of the auditor, and shall thereupon return the same to the auditor with its action indorsed thereon; that no payment can be made from the city treasury or out of the public funds of the city unless the demand therefor be so presented to and approved by every officer, board, or body, as required by the charter, all of which must appear on the face of the paper representing the demand; and finally, that no suit can be brought on any claim for money or damages against the city or any of its agencies or officers until a demand for the same has been presented in the manner above stated, and rejected, in whole, or in part. City Charter, §§ 216, 217, 219, 220, 222a, and 222g (Stats. 1911, p. 2152). It has been decided, and must now be considered as settled, that where the charter of a city provides that demands must be presented to its council or some officer of the city for approval or rejection, and that no payments can be made nor suit be brought thereon until after such presentation and rejection, that the cause of action does not accrue until such presentation has taken place. Whether failure of the city officers to act upon the claim will presently set in motion the right to begin a suit it is unnecessary to determine. At all events there must be a presentation and time given for action by the city authorities before the cause of action accrues. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 655, 91 Pac. 795; Sou. P. Co. v. Santa Cruz, 26 Cal. App. 26, 145 Pac. 736. The appellants resort to the doctrine laid down in a number of decisions where it was held that in cases where a demand is necessary to complete a cause of action, the party having the claim cannot delay the time when the statute of limitations begins to run by failing to make the demand. Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 Pac. 877, Barnes v. Glide, 117 Cal. 1, 48 Pac. 804, 59 Am. St. Rep. 153, County of San Luis Obispo v. Gage, 139 Cal. 398, 73 Pac. 174, and other cases which we need not mention. In Williams v. Bergin this rule is laid down, and it is said that a party—

"cannot suspend indefinitely the running of the statute of limitations by a delay in performing such preliminary act, and that if the time within which such act is to be performed is indefinite or not specified, a reasonable time will be allowed therefor, and the statute will begin to run after the lapse of such reasonable time. What is a reasonable time will depend upon the circumstances of each case. * * * The rule rests upon the principle that the plaintiff has it in his power at all times to do the act which fixes his right of action. The reason of the rule, however, ceases when the right of action is not under his control, but depends upon the act of another; and when the act upon which his right to maintain an action depends is an official act to be performed by a public officer in the line of his official duty, there is no presumption that any delay in its performance was unreasonable." 116 Cal. 61, 47 Pac. 878.

Under the rule thus stated the action upon these claims cannot be deemed to have been barred by the statute. The payments were made on December 15th, only five days before the beginning of the two-year period preceding the beginning of the action. It cannot reasonably be claimed that within that five-day period the parties could have secured action upon their claims by the several city officers and board who were required to act thereon before the claim could have been paid, or that the reasonable time within which to procure action of the city authorities did expire before the expiration of the said five days. See, also, Dennis v. Bint, 122 Cal. 45, 54 Pac. 378, 68 Am. St. Rep. 17. It appears from the record that demands were presented long before the expiration of the two years, and that they were duly rejected before this action was begun. The precise question was not before the court in San Luis Obispo County v. Gage, supra, and what is there said is not in conflict with the rule just stated. We are of the opinion that these demands were not barred by the statute of limitations.

Some of the questions we have treated would not be absolutely necessary to a determination of the case, but we have considered them because of the fact that the judgment must be reversed and a new trial may ensue in which the same questions may again arise. Although from what we have said it is apparent that the judgment against the city of Los Angeles was correct as to a part of the claim of the plaintiffs, yet the record does not present facts sufficient to enable us to determine with certainty how much should be recovered, and we therefore deem it better to reverse the entire judgment so that upon a new trial the facts may be more clearly established.

The judgment is reversed.

CITY OF OAKLAND v. BUTEAU et al.
(S. F. 7743.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1919.
Rehearing Denied March 29, 1919.)

1. NAVIGABLE WATERS § 44(3)—BOUNDARY—EROSION AND ACCRETION.

Where land is bordered by a running stream, the boundary is shifting, going landward with erosion, and waterward with accretion, a rule expressly declared in Civ. Code, § 1014, and judicially extended, as at common law, to cases where the land is bounded by tidal water.

2. NAVIGABLE WATERS § 44(3) — "SHIP CHANNEL" AS BOUNDARY—STATUTE.

By Act May 4, 1852 (St. 1852, p. 180) fixing limit of grant of water front lands to town of Oakland as the line of "ship channel," the town took to the line of low tide, as affected by such gradual and imperceptible changes as might from time to time take place in the location of such line.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ship Channel.]

3. COURTS ⇐107 — EFFECT OF DECISION — DICTA.

Expressions in a judicial opinion must be read in the light of the particular question presented for decision and under consideration.

4. COURTS ⇐97(6) — DECISION OF FEDERAL COURT—CONSTRUCTION OF STATE STATUTE.

Supreme Court of state is not bound by decision of federal court in construction of a state statute, where it is at variance with the views expressed by the highest court of the state.

5. EJECTMENT ⇐86(4)—ACTION TO RECOVER LAND — BURDEN TO SHOW WRONGFUL POSSESSION.

In action by city to recover possession of lands lying below line of low tide, shifting statutory limit of grant to it, it having condemned defendants' lands above line of low tide, burden was on it to show that defendants were wrongfully in possession of land below line of low tide sought to be recovered.

6. EJECTMENT ⇐81 — ANSWER — CONTENTIONS.

In city's action to recover land lying below line of low tide, shifting statutory limit of grant to it, it having condemned land above such line, defendants' answer, setting up that true boundary was line of extreme low tide rather than of ordinary low tide, held not to have precluded them from contending that boundary was not tide line of date of statute of May 4, 1852 (St. 1852, p. 180), fixing limit of grant to city as "shipping channel," construed to mean line of low tide.

Action by the City of Oakland against Samuel H. Buteau and others, as trustees of the Samuel Merritt Hospital. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Paul C. Morf, City Atty., and John J. Earle, Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment awarding the possession of real property to the plaintiff.

This action and a prior one entitled City of Oakland v. Wheeler et al., 34 Cal. App. 442, 168 Pac. 23, are companion cases. In each the city of Oakland, as plaintiff, proceeded against the same defendants, as trustees of the Merritt Hospital. The suits affect adjacent parts of a tract of land on the water front of Oakland. The property involved in the two actions, viewed as a unit, consists of a parcel bounded on the north by First street, on the east by Washington street extended southerly, on the west by the center line of Clay street extended southerly, and on the south by the north pierhead line of Oakland harbor, as established by the United States government. Washington and Clay streets are parallel, and First street runs at right angles to them. The pierhead line has the same general direction as First street, but is not exactly parallel thereto. At the intersection of the westerly line of Washington street projected, the pierhead line is about 510 feet southerly from First street. At its intersection with the center line of Clay street projected it is some 560 feet distant from First street. The distance between the westerly line of Washington street and the center line of Clay street is 340.25 feet. Part of the land involved is above the line of low tide and part of it below; the pierhead line established by the federal government lying some distance southerly from the low tide line.

Prior to the institution of either action the defendants were admittedly the owners of so much of the tract as lay above the line of low tide. They held as successors to the Oakland Water Front Company, which had acquired its title from Horace W. Carpenter, who, in turn, deraigned title from the city of Oakland. The history of the legislation, and the subsequent dealings of the city, affecting the water front lands, is fully set forth in the decision of this court in City of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277, and we need not repeat it here. It will suffice to say that by an act of the Legislature of May 4, 1852 (Stats. 1852, p. 180), incorporating the town of Oakland, the Legislature granted to the town (the predecessor of the present city of Oakland) the lands lying within certain limits "between high tide and ship channel." The term "ship channel," used to mark one of the boundaries of the grant, has been the subject of much discussion in this court and elsewhere, and we shall have occasion to advert to it at a later stage of this opinion.

The earlier case to which we have referred (City of Oakland v. Wheeler) was a suit in eminent domain, by which the city of Oakland sought to condemn so much of the tract occupied by the the defendants as lay above the line of "ship channel." The judgment of condemnation was made December 21, 1911; the damages to be paid defendants being assessed at $211,315.06. A final order of condemnation was made February 10, 1912, and an order letting the municipality into possession on March 9, 1912.

Appeals from the judgment of condemnation and the two orders were taken, and were heard in the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, where the judgment and orders were affirmed on August 23, 1917. City of Oakland v. Wheeler, 34 Cal. App. 442, 168 Pac. 23. A petition for transfer of the case to this court was denied.

The present action was begun on February 23, 1912, after the judgment and the final order of condemnation, and shortly prior to the order letting the city into possession of the condemned area. It is brought to recover possession of the land lying below the line of ship channel. The theory upon which the city went in the litigation was that by the condemnation proceedings it had acquired the right of possession of the land above ship channel theretofore owned by the defendants in fee, and that in the present action it was entitled to recover possession of the land below ship channel, held by the defendants and used by them for wharfing purposes. The claim was, and is, that the defendants and their predecessors had originally gone into occupancy of the land here involved as tenants of the city of Oakland under a lease which had expired before this suit was commenced. The appellants strongly attack the soundness of this claim, but the conclusions we have reached on other points will dispose of the appeal without the necessity of passing on the question just suggested.

[1] In the condemnation suit, as well as in the present action, the city took the position that the line marking the boundary of the property granted to the city of Oakland by the act of May 4, 1852, and consequently the southerly boundary of the land owned by the defendants as successors of Carpentier, to whom the city had conveyed, was the line of low tide, as that line existed on the 4th day of May, 1852, the date of the enactment of the granting statute. In the proceeding in eminent domain the property sought to be acquired was described, as bounded on the south by "the line of ordinary low tide of May 4, 1852," and this description was carried into the judgment and the final order of condemnation. In the present action the plaintiff sought to recover possession of a tract described as bounded on the north by "the line of ordinary low tide of May 4, 1852," and the judgment under review awards to the plaintiff recovery of the possession of a parcel of land so bounded. The boundary of the corporate limits of the town of Oakland and of the lands granted to the town by the state, as described by the act of 1852, is the line of "ship channel." Until the decision of this court in City of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118

Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277, the meaning of the term "ship channel" had never been authoritatively declared. Both parties to that litigation contended for a construction which would extend the grant beyond the shore and over navigable water. The assumption on all hands was that the Legislature, in using the words "ship channel," meant "the three fathom line or the four fathom line in the bay." 118 Cal. 177, 50 Pac. 283. Such interpretation was definitely rejected by this court, which declared that the term "ship channel," as used in the act of 1852, meant the line of low tide. To this extent both parties to the present appeal are agreed. But, as we have already observed, the city contends that the boundary is the line of low tide as it existed at the date of the passage of the act, while the appellants maintain that the boundary described in the act is the line of low tide as such line may appear from time to time. In other words, the appellants contend for the application of the rule that a boundary marked by a water line is a shifting boundary, going landward with erosion and waterward with accretion. This is unquestioned law where the land is bordered by a running stream. Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U. S. 605, 32 Sup. Ct. 340, 56 L. Ed. 570; Missouri v. Nebraska, 196 U. S. 23, 35, 25 Sup. Ct. 155, 49 L. Ed. 372; Tappeendorff v. Downing, 76 Cal. 169, 18 Pac. 247; Fillmore v. Jennings, 78 Cal. 634, 21 Pac. 536; 9 C. J. 195. Express statutory declaration to this effect is found in section 1014 of our Civil Code. But at common law the rule was the same where the land was bounded by tidal water (Scrutton v. Brown, 4 B. & C. 485), and in a recent case this court has declared this to be the law of our state, expressly declining to accede to the claim that section 1014 of the Civil Code limits the application of the rule to lands bordering on flowing streams. Strand Improvement Co. v. Long Beach, 173 Cal. 765, 161 Pac. 975.

[2, 3] It would seem, therefore, that the true interpretation of the term "ship channel," as used in the act of May 4, 1852, is the line of low tide, as affected by such gradual and imperceptible changes as may from time to time take place in the location of that line. The city's claim that the boundary is an unchanging one, fixed by the line as it existed on May 4, 1852, finds its source of inspiration in an expression used by Chief Justice Beatty in his opinion in Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., supra, at page 180 of 118 Cal. at page 284 of 50 Pac. In the course of his elaborate and learned discussion the late Chief Justice said:

"My conclusion is that the line of low tide as it existed on the 4th of May, 1852, was the western boundary of the town of Oakland intended by the original act of incorporation."

Too much weight is not to be attributed to this reference to a specific date. The argument based upon it affords a very apt illustration of the wisdom of the settled rule that expressions in a judicial opinion must be read in the light of the particular question presented for decision and under consideration. In the argument of the Oakland Water Front Case no contention on the point now under discussion had been made by either party. As we have already said, both sides were contending for a deep-water line. It was this issue which the Chief Justice was meeting, and he met it by declaring that "ship channel" meant the line of low tide, rather than a three or four fathom line. The reference to the line as it existed on a given date was, in a sense, inadvertent or accidental. But, beyond all this, the opinion of Chief Justice Beatty did not receive the assent of a majority of the court. Two justices only concurred in it, while two others filed separate concurring opinions, in which they stated merely that they agreed that the land was limited by the line of low tide. The remaining members of the court dissented, and expressed no view on the question of the boundary of the legislative grant. The concurrence of four members of the court is necessary to a decision in bank, and the only thing decided with reference to the point under discussion was, therefore, that the boundary of the town of Oakland, and of the grant to the town, was the line of low tide. Del Mar Water, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 682, 140 Pac. 591, 948. The judgment was reversed, and upon further proceedings a new judgment was entered in which the lands granted by the act of 1852 were described as bounded by the line of ordinary low tide. This judgment, which was subsequently affirmed by this court (Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 162 Cal. 675, 124 Pac. 251), did not fix the line as of May 4, 1852, or any other date. Whether or not the second judgment, which was introduced in evidence at the trial of this section, is available to the appellants as an adjudication of the true limits of the grant under which they claim is not the point here. We refer to it simply to show that the case of Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co. does not contain a judicial determination in favor of the respondent's contention that the boundary is the low tide line as of May 4, 1852.

As further support for its construction of the legislative grant, respondent relies upon the decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Western Pacific Railway Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 151 Fed. 376, 80 C. C. A. 606. It is true that in that case the court expressed the view that "the grant made by the state to the town of Oakland in 1852 was intended to have fixed and permanent boundaries," and reached the conclusion, apparently, that to give effect to this intention it was necessary to hold that the land was bounded by the low tide line as of the date of the act. The question was one of the interpretation of an act of the state Legislature, a matter in which the federal court was conceded bound by the construction placed upon the act by the highest court of the state. If the Circuit Court of Appeals was influenced in any degree by the belief that this court had decided on the first appeal in the Oakland Water Front Case that the line was that of May 4, 1852, its view of the former decision is not in accord with what we have here said. Another ground for the interpretation placed on the grant by the learned federal court was its conclusion that section 1014 of the Civil Code covers "the whole subject of the right to alluvion, and confines it to that * * * which is formed on the banks of rivers or streams." Since the decision of the Western Pacific Case, however, this court, as noted above, has held in Strand Improvement Co. v. Long Beach, supra, that the Code section is not to be given this effect. In that case we expressly declined to accept the construction placed upon the Code section by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

[4] To the suggestion that a boundary shifting with the location of the tide line would be incapable of definite ascertainment, we respond that in our judgment such a line is more readily susceptible of location on the ground than a line not marked by permanent monuments, and to be determined by conditions as they existed many years ago. To fix the latter line, resort must be had to oral testimony which is, in its nature, uncertain, and may be difficult or impossible to obtain. At any rate, the question being one of the construction of a statute of this state, we cannot be bound by the decision of a federal court, however great our respect for that court, when such decision is at variance with the views expressed by the highest court of this state.

Nor was anything decided in City of Oakland v. Wheeler, 34 Cal. App. 442, 168 Pac. 23, which precludes us from now holding that the true line is the line of low tide as it may exist from time to time. In its opinion in that case, the District Court of Appeal quoted the language of Chief Justice Beatty to which we have referred. But the question under discussion was simply whether the complaint and the judgment contained a sufficient description of the property sought to be condemned. The property was described as bounded by the line of ordinary low tide of May 4, 1852, and the court was not called upon to decide whether this land marked the limits of the legislative grant. The city had the right to condemn as much or as little land as it chose. Having undertaken to condemn to the low tide line of May 4, 1852, the only question was whether that line was clearly ascertainable. The holding of the court was that, as a matter of pleading, the description was not insufficient, and that by the evidence in the case the line of May 4, 1852, had been located and identified. Any expression of opinion on the limits of the legislative grant, if there was such expression, was entirely unnecessary to the decision.

[5] Concluding, then, that the southerly limit of the lands formerly owned in fee by the defendants was the low-tide line as it might exist from time to time, it is apparent that the plaintiff has not established its right to the possession of the land here involved. It did not on the trial undertake to show where, with reference to the present low-tide line, the line of 1852 lay. The burden was upon it to show that the defendants were wrongfully in possession of the land sought to be recovered. If the low-tide line at the time of the condemnation suit was south of the low-tide line of 1852, the plaintiff was, by this judgment, awarded possession of an intervening strip belonging to the defendants. It was not for the latter, resisting this action for possession, to show affirmatively that they were entitled to some of the land claimed. It was for the plaintiff, asserting its right to show that the present low-tide line was located at or north of the northerly boundary of the property described in this complaint, and that it therefore was entitled to the possession of all of such land. But, going beyond the mere question of failure of proof, the record makes it apparent that the affirmance of this judgment would work a real and substantial injustice to the defendants. The area of land included between First street on the north and a stone wall on the south was 162,947 square feet. This stone wall lies northerly, that is to say, above, the line claimed by the defendants to be the low-tide line as of the time of the condemnation proceeding. The jury in that proceeding returned, in addition to its general verdict, a special finding that the land bounded on the south by the low-tide line of May 4, 1852, included 80,961 square feet, and this verdict was carried in to the judgment by way of recital. If, as matter of law and fact, the defendants really owned the rest of the parcel north of the stone wall, they still retained, after the condemnation suit, the ownership of an area of 81,986 square feet, and the effect of the present judgment clearly is to take this land from them without compensation, if in fact the low-tide line of 1911 was southerly of the stone wall. The same result, in a different degree, would follow if the low-tide line of 1911 lay anywhere southerly of a line drawn to include, between itself and First street, the 80,961 square feet which the jury found to be covered by the description in the condemnation complaint. Before the plaintiff can prevail in this action, it must either establish that the land condemned by it includes all of the land above the low-tide line as it existed at the date of the institution of the condemnation suit, or it must acquire by condemnation or purchase the land between the low-tide line of May 4, 1852, and the low-tide line of the date of such acquisition.

[6] These views make it unnecessary to consider a number of points argued by counsel. We may say that we do not agree with the respondent's contention that the pleadings of the defendants were such as to preclude them from contending that the boundary was not the tide line of May 4, 1852. In their answer they set up that the true boundary was the line of extreme low tide, rather than ordinary low tide. But there was nothing in the pleading which binds them to the position that either line is to be fixed as of its location at the date of the passage of the act of 1852.

Whether or not the respondent would be entitled to the benefit of any changes in the low-tide line produced by artificial structures is a question suggested in the briefs, but not argued to any extent. We do not find it necessary to decide it here, and mention it merely to avoid the implication that a view either way is involved in what we have said.

The judgment is reversed.

MILLER & LUX, Inc., et al. v. JAMES et al.
(Sac. 2686.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT $\S$ 590(5)—RES ADJUDICATA—ISSUES WITHDRAWN BY CONSENT.

The rule of res adjudicata is to prevent vexatious litigation, and to require the parties to rest upon one decision in their controversy, unless they have expressly agreed to withdraw an issue from the court, in which case the parties are not entitled to invoke the rule requiring submission of the whole controversy.

2. JUDGMENT $\S$ 586(1) — RES ADJUDICATA—WATER RIGHTS—APPROPRIATIONS AS DISTINCT CAUSES OF ACTION.

Where two, separate and distinct appropriations of water are made at separate and distinct times, although from the same stream, the rights are so far distinct that they may be litigated separately.

3. JUDGMENT $\S$ 590(5) — RES ADJUDICATA—WITHDRAWAL OF ISSUES BY STIPULATION.

In an action to determine rights to appropriate water, a stipulation that the court need make no finding as to any appropriation other than a stipulated number of feet, held a withdrawal of the issue of other appropriations from the consideration of the court, the decision of which was therefore not an adjudication on the issue so withdrawn.

4. LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS $\S$ 130(4)—INTERRUPTION—BRINGING SUIT.

Where riparian owners allowed others, with whom they were litigating, to appropriate water in litigation, and by stipulation removed from the consideration of the court the relative rights of the parties to that water, and stipulated that such rights might be determined in another action, subject to the claim that the first action was res adjudicata, the rights of the parties in a subsequent case, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned, must be determined as though the first suit had not been brought, and such first suit does not constitute an interruption of the rights of the parties to prevent the running of the statute.

5. EMINENT DOMAIN $\S$ 284 — REMEDY OF OWNER—RIGHT OF PURCHASER.

The right to sue for compensation for the taking of water from a stream for a public use is in the owner of the water right taken, and does not pass by the mere grant of the land.

6. EMINENT DOMAIN $\S$ 288(1) — APPROPRIATION FOR PUBLIC USE—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION—LACHES.

Where the five-year period of limitations has been allowed to elapse without any affirmative action by the riparian owner, who claims that his water has been appropriated for public use, he is guilty of laches, and cannot assert his right to compensation for the appropriation.

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES $\S$ 39 — RIPARIAN LANDS—LOCATION.

Land adjoining riparian land does not, by becoming united therewith in ownership, itself become riparian, although accessible to, susceptible of irrigation thereby, and situated within the watershed of the stream.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Miller & Lux, Incorporated, and another, against Jefferson G. James, San Joaquin Valley Farm Lands Company, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and the two named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

O'Brien & Spalding and James M. O'Brien, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, and Frank H. Short and W. A. Sutherland, both of Fresno, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. The defendants appeal upon the judgment roll alone from a judgment whereby plaintiffs were adjudged entitled to a continuous flow of water from the San Joaquin river of 1,360 feet per second, diverted through plaintiffs' main and outside canals, and superior to the riparian or other rights of the defendants. The same parties plaintiffs and defendants, or their predecessors, were plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, in prior litigation over their relative water rights in and to water flowing in the San Joaquin river, wherein it was adjudged that the respondents were entitled to a flow of 760 cubic feet per second. The principal point involved on this appeal is whether or not the previous decision precludes the adjudication of a greater right than 760 cubic feet a second in this litigation. The question turns, in part, upon a stipulation made by the parties in the previous case, which stipulation was incorporated into and made a part of the decision therein, and which decision and judgment are incorporated into and made a part of the decision in this case. To an understanding of the situation it is necessary to state some of the facts in relation to the litigation between the parties. In the previous litigation the plaintiffs were the appellants, and in this litigation defendants are the appellants, and to avoid confusion on this appeal we will use the terms "plaintiffs" and "defendants" instead of "appellants" and "respondents."

In 1899 plaintiffs brought the action in Fresno county, final judgment in which is relied upon by the defendants as a conclusive adjudication of the rights of the parties in this action. This case is referred to throughout the briefs as the Fresno case and will be so referred to here. In the Fresno case plaintiff sought to enjoin the defendants from diverting water through a canal known as the Enterprise canal. In 1904 plaintiffs brought this action in Merced county to enjoin the defendants from pumping water from Fresno slough. In both actions plaintiffs alleged their right to divert more than 1,360 cubic feet a second from the flow of the San Joaquin river, and claimed that right by adverse possession and its devotion to a public use. In the Fresno case the plaintiffs alleged that they had diverted 800 cubic feet of water a second through its main canal, which was about 72 miles long, and a continuous use of that water from 1871. They also alleged an appropriation in 1896 of 350 cubic feet of water a second, and the use thereof through a canal known as the "outside canal," which was over 30 miles long. All active litigation between the parties was conducted in the Fresno case until that case, after several appeals and trials, resulted in a final judgment entered in June, 1915, pursuant to the directions of this court, contained in Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal Co., 169 Cal. 415, 147 Pac. 567; Id., 169 Cal. 447, 147 Pac. 579. After that decision, this case, the Merced county case, filed in 1904, was brought on for trial. In both cases the defendants not only denied plaintiffs' title, but also set up their own rights as upper riparian owners. It was contended by plaintiffs in these suits that the lands of the defendants were not riparian to the San Joaquin river, for the reason that they were situated along the Fresno slough. But while these cases were pending, this court in Turner v. James Canal Co., 155 Cal. 82, 99 Pac. 520, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401, 132 Am. St. Rep. 59, 17 Ann. Cas. 823, decided that the lands of the defendants along the Fresno slough were riparian to the San Joaquin river. The history of the Fresno case and the nature of the rights involved and the result of the appeals therein are stated in the opinion finally handed down. Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal Co., 169 Cal. 415, 147 Pac. 567.

The Fresno county case having been once tried and a new trial granted, on November 3, 1909, for the purposes of that trial the stipulation was entered into between the parties with relation thereto which now requires our consideration.

It will be observed that plaintiffs claim two separate and distinct rights by separate and distinct appropriations—one in 1871 and one in 1896; that whatever rights could be gained by prescription had fully ripened with relation to the appropriation of 1871, and as to that of 1896 had not ripened at the beginning of the Fresno suit (1899), but had ripened at the time of the beginning of the Merced suit (1904). Notwithstanding the fact that plaintiffs claimed water at two different points of diversion and under separate appropriations, we may assume, without deciding, that the judgment in the Fresno case, fixing the amount of water to which the plaintiff was entitled, would be a final and conclusive adjudication in all subsequent litigation between the parties, including the Merced county case, as contended by the defendants, in the absence of a stipulation; and that if the plaintiff failed to offer proof concerning the alleged appropriation of 1896 through the outside canal, and to establish its claim to the water so appropriated, the court must have found that there was no such appropriation.

We will now consider the terms and effect of the stipulation on the point in question, without quoting more of its language than seems necessary for that purpose. It was expressly stipulated that no evidence should be offered for the purpose of proving an appropriation or diversion by plaintiffs greater or less than 760 feet. From this stipulation it followed, if the plaintiffs were entitled to the use of any water from the stream, the quantity was 760 feet, no more and no less. To obviate that conclusion, however, it was further stipulated that the court need make no finding as to any appropriation of water by said Canal Company other than as to 760 feet. The stipulation, then, is further amplified with relation to the effect of the decision in the case as follows:

"But this provision shall not be construed as aiding the plaintiff in any future action or proceeding in establishing rights in the water of the San Joaquin river greater than 760 feet." "The plaintiff San Joaquin & Kings River Canal Company, however, hereby preserving the right to claim, prove, and establish in any proper action or proceeding authorized by law, other than the above-entitled action, the appropriation and diversion and right to an additional quantity of water made by said plaintiff since the commencement of this action or during said period of five years next preceding the commencement of this action."

It is further provided:

"But the findings as to the appropriation (1896) alleged in the complaint from said outside canal shall not be deemed to be in favor of one party or the other, but shall be deemed as withdrawn."

On applying the statement to the facts as above indicated, the canal company thus reserved the right to prove in the then pending Merced case, among other things, the appropriation of 1896, as was subsequently done, resulting in the judgment for an additional 600 feet of water, from which the defendant is appealing. In making the above quotations from the stipulation we have omitted certain provisions, no doubt inserted at the instance of the defendants, and designed to preserve their right to assert that the Fresno judgment was res adjudicata as to the quantity of water to which plaintiffs were entitled. We will now consider such stipulations.

After providing that no finding need be made as to any appropriation of water other than the 760 feet, and that this should not be construed to aid the plaintiff in any future action to establish rights in the waters of the San Joaquin river greater than 760 feet, the following clause was added, viz.:

"Nor shall the defendants be deemed to have waived their right to plead in any such action or proceeding that the judgment made and entered in this action is a final adjudication of all the rights of said plaintiffs in and to the waters of said river."

It will be observed that this added clause is not an agreement that the decision shall be a final adjudication of all the rights of the plaintiffs in and to the waters of the river. If it had that meaning, it, of course, would foreclose the plaintiffs in this case. The agreement is that the defendants may claim in any other suit, and therefore in this suit, that the decision was a final adjudication of all the rights, just as they have done and are now doing. It was the same sort of reservation as the preliminary stipulation which authorized the defendant to attack the entire title of the plaintiff to the 760 feet of water, in which attack upon the first hearing before this court they were substantially successful. 47 Cal. Dec. 1. After the above-quoted provision wherein the plaintiffs reserved the right in other litigation to establish the right to additional water, the following proviso was added, viz.:

"Provided, however, that nothing herein shall be construed as a waiver by defendants of their claim that plaintiffs cannot hereafter in any other way establish any appropriation other than the appropriation established in this action."

Defendants are now, in the instant case, as it was stipulated they might, raising that exact question before this court. Nor is it contended that they have waived the right to make that claim. Of course, the stipulation does not mean that the claim referred to is valid. If so, there would be no room for argument and no necessity for so extended a stipulation. The provision in the stipulation that no findings need be made with reference to the outside canal, "but shall be deemed as withdrawn," is also modified by the following clause, "subject to defendants' claim that plaintiff was and is obliged to include such water and its claim thereto in this action and unless so included, its rights thereto are waived." This means nothing more nor less than that, notwithstanding the defendants' consent that this issue be withdrawn, the right is still reserved to plead res adjudicata in any subsequent action. Each of the parties having reserved certain rights more or less contradictory, the question may be perhaps best approached by considering what was actually accomplished by the stipulation. It was definitely and specifically agreed that there should be no finding of the court upon the issue as to the appropriation of 1896 for the outside canal. This, in effect, withdrew from the court all consideration of that appropriation, and the additional statement that it "should be deemed withdrawn" added no force to the stipulation. In the absence of this stipulation, the failure of the court to find upon that material issue would have resulted in a mistrial of the action and required a new trial thereof. It was because of this stipulation and only because of this stipulation, that a decision was proper wherein no findings were made with relation to this express allegation of the complaint. The case then resolves itself into the simple proposition of one whereby the parties by mutual consent have withdrawn from the consideration of the court an important portion of the matter before the court for litigation. The effect of this withdrawal was to narrow the issues in the case to those relating to the nature and character of the use of the 760 feet of water, and the rights of the parties with relation thereto, and the rights of the defendants growing out of the situation of their land, etc. That which the parties stipulated to thus accomplish was in fact accomplished by the decree. The court made no finding upon that issue, and in lieu thereof, and for the purpose of justifying such failure, incorporated in its finding as a part thereof the stipulation in question.

[1] The rule of res adjudicata is to prevent vexatious litigation and to require the parties to rest upon one decision in their controversy; but, where they expressly agreed to withdraw an issue from the court, the reason for the rule ceases. The issue is not in fact adjudged, and the parties themselves having consented to that method of trial are not entitled to invoke the rule which requires parties to submit their whole case to the court. If they consent to adjudicate their differences piecemeal, there is no reason that the court should extend the rules of law to prevent that which they had expressly agreed might be done.

[2] It is argued here that the rights of the plaintiff to the two different appropriations of water were as distinct as though they were two separate and distinct parcels of land, in which case, of course, it would be conceded that separate actions might be brought as to each. While the illustration may not be exactly apt, as we are dealing with a body of water flowing in a single stream, the rights are so far distinct that there is no good reason for holding that the parties could not, if they desired, litigate them separately. If it is true that where an issue is withdrawn by mutual consent from the consideration of a court in the trial of a case that the decision is not res adjudicata as to that issue between the parties because of that consent, then the provisions in the stipulation wherein the defendants reserved the right to claim that the decision is res adjudicata do not have the effect of re-establishing the case as one in which the plaintiff has either failed to allege, or, having alleged, has failed to prove, some issue which under the principles of res adjudicata should have been submitted to the court for its decision in that case. If the consent gave a right to withdraw an issue, and if a withdrawal by consent ipso facto defeats a claim that the issue is res adjudicata, the reservation of a right to claim that the fact is otherwise amounts to nothing. But there are other baffling provisions in the stipulation bearing upon the question, for it is finally provided therein as follows, viz.:

"It being the true intent and meaning of this stipulation that the rights of said plaintiff in any action or proceeding shall be no greater and no less than if this stipulation had not been made, and shall exist as though the judgment in this action was entered upon evidence taken at the trial and not upon the stipulation."

If the first clause of this sentence is given full force and effect, without a consideration of other provisions, we ought not to consider the stipulation at all in determining the rights of the parties in this action; for it is provided that the rights in this action shall be "no greater and no less than if the stipulation had not been made," and, of course, if they are neither greater nor less because of the stipulation, it is a false quantity in determining the relative water rights of the parties. The next clause provides that the rights of the plaintiff "shall exist as though the judgment in this action was entered upon evidence taken at the trial and not upon the stipulation." It was difficult, if not impossible, to formulate a judgment in the Fresno case which could, in fairness to the parties, give effect to this stipulation. If the trial court found the fact to be that the plaintiff was entitled to 760 cubic feet of water a second, this would necessarily be a finding, as defendant now claims it to be, that the plaintiff was entitled to no more than 760 feet of water. It would not leave the question open, but would close by an implied finding the very issue which counsel had agreed should not be determined by the court. It was, therefore, only by incorporating the stipulation into the findings that the trial court was able to make it clear that the issues with relation to waters of the outside canal, and waters appropriated within five years of the commencement of the action, were not determined. And so, of necessity, the decision shows on its face that the issue was not determined, and the reason why it was not determined, and, the stipulation being a part of the decision, it is impossible to construe the effect of the decision without considering the effect of the stipulation. We cannot, therefore, construe the judgment and the findings as though the judgment had been entered "upon evidence taken at the trial and not upon stipulation."

[3] Taken as a whole, therefore, the stipulation was in fact a withdrawal of an issue from the consideration of the court. The reservations and provisos in favor of the parties neither add to nor detract from this fundamental fact, and, the issue having thus been withdrawn by consent, the decision of the court cannot be held to be an adjudication upon the very issue so withdrawn. In view of this conclusion it will be unnecessary to consider the various lines of argument by which it is sought to show that the rights of the plaintiff either have or have not accrued since the beginning of the Fresno suit, and the interpretation of those cases in which it has been held, pro and con, that rights accruing subsequent to the filing of a complaint, or to a defendant after the filing of the answer, need not be set up in a pending suit, for in any case the decision does not prevent the litigation in the instant case of the issues withdrawn from the first case.

A few important questions are presented by defendants which have not yet been considered, involving the nature and character of plaintiffs' right to the use of water, and various corollary propositions depending thereon. These will now be considered. The defendants claim that the decision in Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal Co., 169 Cal. 415, 147 Pac. 567, adjudging the plaintiffs entitled to 760 cubic feet of water a second, was based upon the fact that the water had been appropriated by plaintiffs and dedicated to a public use. The plaintiffs contend, however, that their title was held to be prescriptive. Upon the theory of a right by reason of a public use, defendants claim that the circumstances concerning the appropriation and use of the 600 cubic feet of water in the instant case are precisely the same as in the case of the 760 feet. That being so, it is claimed that the right of the plaintiffs to the 600 cubic feet of water appropriated in 1896 must have accrued, if at all, before the filing of the Fresno suit, and the argument that the Fresno decision is res adjudicata on the question of title is based in part upon this proposition. Defendants also claim that if the right herein adjudged to the plaintiffs to the 600 cubic feet of water arises from a public use and a dedication of such water to such public use by the defendants, the plaintiffs ought not to secure from a court of equity an injunction against them without first paying adequate compensation for the property so taken for a public use, upon the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity. To these contentions the plaintiffs reply that the adjudication in the Fresno case was not based upon a dedication to public use, but upon prescription; that the right to 600 cubic feet of water involved in the instant case is also prescriptive, and consequently did not accrue until 1901, and that, therefore, the right to the 600 feet was acquired after the commencement of the Fresno case. To this defendants reply that the Fresno suit was brought only three years after the appropriation, and constituted an interruption of the adverse use; that there was therefore no period of five years of uninterrupted use before the Merced case was begun; and that, on plaintiffs' own theory of a prescriptive title, they cannot recover.

We will first consider the question as to whether the Fresno case is res adjudicata upon the question of title by dedication to a public use as distinguished from a prescriptive title. In determining that question we must look to the findings and judgment of the trial court as finally entered. The reasoning by which this court supported the decision of the trial court and directed a modification of the judgment is only material under the doctrine of stare decisis, and is of no more binding effect than any other decision of the Supreme Court. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake R. R. Co. v. Los Angeles, 56 Cal. Dec. 213; San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake R. R. Co. v. Los Angeles, decided Feb. 25, 1919, 179 Pac. 393. The first decision rendered upon the appeal (47 Cal. Dec. 1) was vacated by the order granting a rehearing, and is not reported in the California Reports.

While it is true that the order granting such rehearing limited the argument to the question of the effect of the public user, the order, nevertheless, vacated the previous opinion and judgment and set the whole matter at large. The limitation of the argument to one point meant no more than the court was satisfied that the argument and the briefs upon the other points fully covered them. In the opinion of the court upon rehearing, the first opinion, so far as it was adhered to by the court, was incorporated therein. The opinion is mainly directed to a consideration of those cases in which the establishment of a public use was, under the circumstances, adjudged to be so far a dedication of a private right to a public use that the court would not interfere with that public use, and left the persons whose property was thus taken for public use to seek relief by way of compensation in a proper action. It was found from an examination of these cases that in every instance there had been some form of invasion of the property holder's right. In applying the cases the court, therefore, turned to a consideration of whether or not there had been such an invasion of the rights of the defendants as would come within the rule of those cases, and upon such examination considered that, under the facts as shown, the defendants' rights had been invaded in two ways: First, by damming the water so that the same backed up into Fresno slough along the lands of the defendants; and, second, by taking out so large a volume of water so near the lands of the defendants that the flow of water to the riparian lands of the defendants was directly affected, and held that from the moment of the first appropriation and diversion there had been such an interference with the rights of the defendants that they could have brought an action to prevent such interference. Two results followed from this fact: First, that the case came clearly within those decisions declaring that courts would not interfere by injunctive process with the use of property by the public that had been allowed to accrue by the owner whose rights are alleged to have been invaded; and, second, that the use had at all times been adverse to defendants. The court held that the finding of the trial court that there was no interference with the defendants' riparian rights was, under all the facts, not a correct finding, but that other findings also made by the court so far negated that fact that a new trial was not necessary. The order of the court directing a modification of the judgment was therefore predicated upon two lines of reasoning, either of which was sufficient to support the conclusion. In the instant case, however, if the Fresno case was an interruption of the quiet and peaceable possession essential to the ripening of a prescriptive right to the 600 feet of water, the decision of the trial court that these plaintiffs held by prescriptive title could not be maintained, and we would then be compelled to inquire whether or not the facts found by the court as to the public use was alone a sufficient basis for the judgment in favor of plaintiffs. We are, however, at this point again met by the fact that the question as to the rights of the parties to the 600 cubic feet of water was by stipulation eliminated from the Fresno suit; that it was, in effect, agreed that the rights of the parties in and to that water could be adjudicated in the Merced suit. While the defendants were very careful to preserve their rights to plead res adjudicata in the Merced case, although ineffectively, as we have held, no provision whatever is made by which the plea of the statute of limitations would be preserved in the Merced case to the same effect as it would have applied in the Fresno case. Under such circumstances we do not see how it can be successfully claimed that the Fresno case was such an interference with plaintiffs' rights, by reason of the affirmative answer of defendants therein, as would prevent the statute of limitations from running. If, as is claimed by defendants, the right to 600 cubic feet of water was involved in the Fresno case, the defendants were in a position to insist that the rights thereto be tried in that case and thus preserve to themselves the benefit of the fact that the five-year period had not elapsed at the time of the beginning of the suit with relation to the appropriation of 1896.

[4] It must be held, where parties to litigation of this character allow the plaintiffs to continue in the occupation and enjoyment of the right to water claimed by them, and by a stipulation remove from the consideration of the court the relative rights of the parties to that water, and stipulate that the rights thereto may be determined in another action, subject to the claim that the first action is res adjudicata with relation thereto, that the rights of the parties in and to the water must be determined, in a subsequent case, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned, by the same rules that would have obtained had the first suit not been brought. The parties, in effect, treated the right to the 760 cubic feet of water and the 600 cubic feet of water as two distinct rights, as they were in fact. Under the circumstances, the first case cannot be considered such an interruption of the rights of the parties as to prevent the running of the statute of limitations, and therefore, the finding of the court that the five-year prescriptive period had run was correct. A consideration of the numerous decisions cited by both parties with relation to the effect of a pending action on the rights of the parties, in the subsequent action, to rely upon the statute of limitations, is therefore unnecessary. That being true, we are in the same position with reference to public use and adverse use in the decision of this case as in the decision of the Fresno case, and upon the authority of that case the judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, fixing their right to 600 cubic feet of water, must be affirmed.

The next point is as to the right of defendants to compensation for property taken for a public use. Defendants in 1915 filed a cross-complaint, claiming compensation amounting to $1,825,000 for the 760 cubic feet of water, and $912,000 for the 600 cubic feet, on the ground that private property could not be taken for a public use without just compensation; and cite Newport v. Temescal, 149 Cal. 539, 87 Pac. 372, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098, and other cases. The cross-complaint was stricken out and the court declined to consider the issues raised thereby. The question presented here is whether or not the decision of the trial court in striking out the cross-complaint was erroneous. Passing the question of the sufficiency of the cross-complaint as an original plea for the recovery of the value of the water right so alleged to be appropriated and dedicated to public use, and assuming that the issue was sufficiently raised in the trial court to present the question whether or not compensation could therein be adjudged to the defendants for the value of the water right so taken as a condition to enjoining the defendants from interfering with that right, we are met at the outset by the fact that the party owning the riparian lands claimed by the defendants at the time of the appropriation of 1871 or 1896 is not, nor are his heirs or representatives, parties hereto. The defendants are the grantees of the riparian lands deprived of water by the appropriations of 1871 and 1896.

[5] The right to sue for compensation for such use by the public, assuming that it was a public use rather than an adverse use, was in the owner of the water right at the time it was taken for public use. There is no stipulation nor pleading showing that that right to compensation was ever transferred to the defendants. This is a sufficient answer to the contention of the defendants in that behalf. It is, moreover, conceded that at the time of the filing of the cross-complaint in 1915 the right to sue for such compensation had long since expired under our statute of limitations. But defendants predicate their claim to compensation here upon the theory that, notwithstanding such bar, a court of equity will not grant relief to the plaintiffs until the plaintiffs have done equity, which they claim requires the payment of just compensation for such use.

[6] Where the five-year period has been allowed to elapse without any affirmative action by the riparian owner who claims that his water has been appropriated for public use, he is guilty of laches, and should not be permitted to assert his right to compensation after the lapse of that period, as against the public or the appropriator for a public use.

Otherwise it would result that five years' adverse use of water would give a perfect title to a private person as against the owner thereof without any compensation, while the public, under similar circumstances, could be compelled after a lapse of five years to pay compensation therefor as a condition of receiving equitable relief. We therefore conclude that whether the right of plaintiffs is prescriptive or an appropriation for a public use, that the action of the court in striking out the cross-complaint was proper.

[7] Defendants urge that the trial court should have found that they owned 29,000 acres of riparian lands instead of 19,500 acres. This claim is based upon their contention, to quote from their brief, that "land adjoining riparian land may, by becoming united therewith in ownership, become itself riparian if accessible to, susceptible of irrigation thereby, and situate within the watershed of the stream." Our decisions are to the contrary, and there is nothing in the point urged. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 424, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; *Boehmer v. Big Rock C. & I. KERN COUNTY UNION HIGH SCHOOL DIST. v. McDONALD et al. (L. A. 5858.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1919.
Rehearing Denied March 27, 1919.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐191(2)—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT—RESOLUTION OF BOARD.

In school district's action to condemn land for gymnasium, complaint, alleging in effect that the taking was sought pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1237-1264, sufficiently stated "the right of plaintiff" as required of complainants in eminent domain proceedings by section 1244; an allegation of adoption of resolution by board being unnecessary.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐191(2)—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1244, requiring complaint in eminent domain proceedings to state "the right of plaintiff," has reference only to a statement of the legal right or authority to exercise power of eminent domain.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐8—AUTHORITY OF SCHOOL DISTRICT.

School board had power to condemn land for gymnasium prior to the taking effect of St. 1917, p. 1176, such power having existed under Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, Pol. Code, § 1610, subd.

5, added by St. 1917, p. 739, and sections 1668, 1741, 1750, and St. 1909, p. 908.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN §169—CONDEMNATION OF LAND—RESOLUTION OF SCHOOL BOARD—PREAMBLE.

School board's power to condemn land for certain purpose was not restricted to its power specified in preamble of resolution authorizing such condemnation, since preamble was unnecessary to efficacy of resolution, and in absence of statutory requirement; statement in resolution of statutory authority for condemnation being unnecessary.

5. EMINENT DOMAIN §169—CONDEMNATION — RESOLUTION OF SCHOOL BOARD — PREAMBLE.

It was unnecessary to efficacy of resolution of school board, authorizing condemnation of land for certain purpose, that it should have a preamble.

6. EMINENT DOMAIN §169—RESOLUTION OF SCHOOL BOARD—STATEMENT OF STATUTORY AUTHORITY.

School board's resolution, authorizing condemnation of land for certain purpose, is not required, in absence of statutory requirement, to state statutory authority for the condemnation.

7. EMINENT DOMAIN §169—RESOLUTION—LEGAL AUTHORITY FOR PROCEEDINGS.

School board's resolution, directing the condemnation of land for gymnasium, will be construed as having been passed in exercise of right of eminent domain under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1237-1264, though resolution based right to construct gymnasium upon St. 1917, p. 1176, which had not taken effect at time resolution was entered into, since resolution will be construed to have been passed pursuant to power warranting passage.

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW §70(1)—CONDEMNATION OF PROPERTY—PUBLIC USES—LEGISLATIVE POWER.

Power to determine what uses are public is vested in Legislature.

9. EMINENT DOMAIN §56—PUBLIC USE—DETERMINATION OF NECESSITY OF TAKING.

Immediate future needs are ordinarily an essential factor in determining whether there is a present necessity for a taking in condemnation for the purpose of a particular public use.

10. EMINENT DOMAIN §194—AMENDMENT TO COMPLAINT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1262, amended complaint, in school district's action for condemnation of land, differing from original complaint only in not alleging school board's resolution, and in seeking condemnation of the entire 100 feet of the tract of land instead of only 80 feet, did not state new cause of action; resolution not being basic element of cause of action and the demand for additional 20 feet not causing surprise or detriment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County;
J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Kern County Union High School District against Ronald McDonald and others. From judgment and final order of condemnation, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Emmons & Johnstone and Rowen Irwin, all of Bakersfield, for appellants.

W. W. Kaye and Erwin W. Owen, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Gueren, Deputy Atty. Gen., amici curiæ.

LENNON, J. In the action, the corporation plaintiff sought and secured, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, a judgment condemning certain real property belonging to the defendants in the city of Bakersfield. The appeal is from the judgment and final order of condemnation. The complaint was filed June 2, 1917, and, among other things, alleges:

"That the public interest and necessity require the construction by the said Kern County High School District of a gymnasium or athletic building, and also the acquisition by the said district as a site upon which the said building may be erected, of that certain tract of land hereinafter described; that the board of trustees of the said plaintiff on the 24th day of May, 1917, duly passed and adopted by a unanimous vote of the board of trustees a resolution, directing proceedings to be taken under title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California, to condemn said tract of land for the public use set forth."

Issue having been joined by the answer of the defendants denying all of the allegations of the complaint, the case was tried with a jury, which found and fixed the value of the property to be condemned at the sum of $5,500. Thereupon the trial court made its findings of fact in substantial accord with the allegations of the complaint, all of which are sufficiently supported by evidence which in turn supports the judgment, and which, therefore, must be affirmed, unless it be held as a matter of law, as is contended for by appellants, that the plaintiff was precluded from proceeding, or rather, was not authorized under any existing law to proceed to condemn the property in suit for the purpose pleaded. The contention of appellants in this behalf is perhaps more precisely stated in the language of appellants' closing brief, wherein it is said that—

"Appellants claim a reversal * * * upon the ground that the right to condemn the real property involved was based upon a law which, at the time the action was commenced and at the time of trial, had not yet gone into effect."

This contention is rested upon the fact adduced in evidence at the trial of the case that, on May 24, 1917, the plaintiff's board of trustees adopted a resolution which, in a "stately preamble beginning with the emphatic "Whereas," reminiscent of "the style of the early-day legislation," declared that:

"* * * By an act of the Legislature of the state of California adopted at a recent session thereof it is provided that all students of the high schools shall be required to take at least two hours' physical training per week under a competent physical director," and that "the Kern County High School is not provided with an adequate building for the giving of such training."

This resolution then proceeded in the usual and ordinary form to evidence the determination of the said board of trustees that the public interest and necessity required the construction of a gymnasium or athletic building as an adjunct of the Kern County High School, and, after appropriately resolving to proceed with the erection of such a building and declaring that the public interest and necessity required for that purpose the acquisition of the land therein specifically described, concluded with the resolve that said board forthwith take proceedings, under title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the acquisition of said land.

It was an admitted fact in the case that "the act of the Legislature" referred to in the preamble of the resolution was the act of the Legislature of this state, approved May 26, 1917, and which became effective July 27, 1917, wherein it was made the duty of the high school board of every high school district in the state to "prescribe suitable courses of physical education for the pupils thereof" (Stats. 1917, p. 1176), and it was the uncontroverted fact that the preliminary proceedings of the plaintiff purporting to authorize and require the commencement of the action of condemnation and the action itself were commenced and concluded prior to the taking effect of that act.

[1, 2] It was not essential to the sufficiency of the cause of action pleaded that the complaint should contain an allegation that the plaintiff was empowered by a valid or any resolution of its board of trustees to proceed in condemnation. Section 1244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prescribes the essentials of a complaint in eminent domain proceedings, does not require a statement of the adoption of such a resolution, and therefore it was not necessary to allege that fact. Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 308, 92 Pac. 849. The requirement of that Code section (subdivision 3), that the complaint "must contain * * * a statement of the right of the plaintiff," has reference only to a statement of the legal right or authority of the plaintiff to exercise the power of eminent domain, and, as against a general demurrer, the complaint before us sufficiently complied with the mandate of the statute by alleging, in effect, that the taking was sought pursuant to the provisions of title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Lake Shore, etc., R. R. Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. R. Co., 149 Ill. 272, 285, 37 N. E. 91.

[3-7] The resolution in question not being essential to the statement of plaintiff's cause of action, it would seem to follow that proof of its passage was not necessary to the maintenance of plaintiff's cause (Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Feldman, supra), but, however that may be, we are satisfied that the source of plaintiff's power to proceed in condemnation for the purpose stated in the complaint did not begin with and end in the act referred to in the resolution; nor was such power, as granted elsewhere in the then existing law, in any wise restricted or restrained by the verbiage of the preamble of the resolution. The latter proposition is so because it was wholly unnecessary to the efficacy of the resolution that it should have a preamble, or, having it, that the resolution should, in the absence of a statutory requirement, either in its preamble or elsewhere within its context, contain a recital of the statutory authority permitting, and the necessity prompting, the proposed condemnation. Church v. Higgins, 4 Robt. 1; Bohle v. Stannard, 7 Mo. App. 51; McQuillin, Mun. Ord. § 539, p. 846; Cronin v. People, 82 N. Y. 318, 37 Am. Rep. 564. Assuming the resolution in question to be a jurisdictional prerequisite to the plaintiff's proceeding in condemnation, still it should be construed, if necessary, as declaring and directing the exercise of the right of eminent domain primarily pursuant to the provisions of title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure; and this may and should be done in keeping with "the established rule, * * * aptly stated in an early Maryland case" (McQuillin, Mun. Ord. § 139, p. 222), where it is said that—

"It is not essential to the validity of an ordinance executing powers conferred by the Legislature that it should state or indicate the power in execution of which the ordinance is passed. If it state no particular power as its basis, judicial courtesy requires that we should regard it as emanating from that power which would have warranted its passage. If two such powers exist, it may be imputed to either, in conformity to which its provisions and prerequisites show that it has been adopted." Methodist, etc., Church v. Baltimore, 6 Gill [Md.] 391, 48 Am. Dec. 540.

By like reasoning, in the case of Delamater v. Chicago, 158 Ill. 575, 42 N. E. 444, an ordinance creating a special assessment was sustained as having been passed in pursuance of an enabling act, despite the fact of a recital of the ordinance that the authority for its adoption was dependent upon a statute which had been repealed; and within the reasoning of the rule stated in Methodist, etc., Church v. Baltimore, supra, it was held, in the case of Baltimore v. Ulman, 79 Md.

469, 30 Atl. 43, that a misrecital in an ordinance relative to the source of power under which it was enacted would not suffice to limit the source of the power to that specified if the power in fact existed elsewhere. Of course, in this discussion of the scope and effect of the preamble to a resolution, as well as the requirements of the resolution itself, we are not forgetful of the distinction which ordinarily obtains between an ordinance and a resolution, and while the rule relied upon to construe the resolution in question here has more particular application to, or, rather, has been more particularly applied to, ordinances, still we apprehend that, despite the distinction, the rule should be and is the same with reference to resolutions.

This, then, brings us to a consideration of the text of title 2, part 3, Code of Civil Procedure, and we find embodied therein section 1238 of that Code as it existed and was in operation at and before the commencement of the action and the preliminary proceedings in condemnation in question here, which authorizes a school district to exercise the right of eminent domain for the purpose of acquiring "public buildings and grounds for the use * * * of any * * * school district." This Code section, as we read it in conjunction with various other sections and provisions of our Code and statute law relative to and regulating the public school system of the state, all of which were also in full force and effect at all of the times involved in this action, clearly empowered the plaintiff, if not expressly, then by necessary implication, to proceed to condemn the land in suit for the purpose prescribed in the resolution and alleged in the complaint. Section 1750 of the Political Code provides that—

"Every high school course of study may include training in athletics, * * * for which credit may be given as a part of said high school work, and instruction shall be given at such times and in such manner as such high school board shall determine."

Section 1668 of the Political Code commands that—

"Attention must be given to such physical exercises for the pupils as may be conducive to health and vigor of body as well as mind."

Subdivision 5 of section 1610 of the Political Code (Stats. 1917, p. 739), formerly subdivision 21 of section 1617 of the same Code, provides that boards of school trustees and city boards of education shall have power and it shall be their duty "to give diligent care to the health and physical development of pupils," and by virtue of the provisions of section 1741 of the Political Code the powers and duties of school boards now found in said subdivision 5 of section 1610 of that Code and primarily existing in subdivision

21 of section 1617 were at all of the times herein involved applicable to high school district boards. In addition to all of this there was in force and effect at and prior to the commencement of the action and the institution of the preliminary proceedings included therein, a statute entitled "An act to provide for health and development supervision in the public schools," etc. (Stats. 1909, p. 908), which authorized school boards throughout the state to establish health and development supervision in the public schools of the state which should "secure the correction of developmental and acquired defects of both pupils and teachers which interfere with health, growth and efficiency," and (subdivision 2) "to adjust school life and activities to health and growth needs and to development processes. * * *"

[8] It is settled law that the power to determine what uses are public is vested in the Legislature, and clearly the public character of the use sought to be secured in the present case is embodied within the several laws hereinbefore enumerated. While it is true that no express mention is made in any of the Code sections or statutes previously mentioned and outlined concerning the necessity for and construction of a gymnasium and athletic building as an adjunct for the physical development and training of the pupils of the public schools, still the necessity for such a building and its consequent construction is inherently embodied in the underlying principles which permeate and prompted the enactment of those several laws, and the power to put these principles into actual operation by the creation and employment of such agencies as would ordinarily and naturally be required for the accomplishment of the desired results follows by necessary implication. The plaintiff, having thus been duly invested by existing law with the right to provide the agencies necessary to the accomplishment of the legislative design, rightly resorted to the exercise of the power of eminent domain in the furtherance of that design, and it was not essential to the exercise of that power that the plaintiff should have previously prescribed as a part of the high school curriculum a course of instruction in athletics. Granting, for the sake of discussion, that under the terms of section 1750 of the Political Code the institution of a course of instruction in athletics was a matter of discretion with the plaintiff, and that the exercise of such discretion, to be effective, was required to be evidenced by formally including such a course in the "high school course of study," still it cannot be said that a present necessity for the use in suit within the meaning of the law of eminent domain did not exist at the time of the commencement of the action. In this behalf it will be noted that the act of May 26, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 1177), became effective on July 27, 1917, just 1 month and 25 days subsequent to the institution of the action, and required the plaintiff at the taking effect thereof to "prescribe suitable courses of physical education," and the requirement when in operation was mandatory. S. F. v. Hyatt, 163 Cal. 346, 353, 125 Pac. 751.

[9] Clearly under existing laws the plaintiff was empowered in its discretion to provide suitable courses of physical education, and therefore could have exercised such discretion in anticipation of the mandatory requirements of the new law, but doubtless deferred doing so until such time as it could be assured that it would have the appurtenances at hand necessary to the inauguration and effective operation of such a course; and it may be fairly assumed that the act in question was the incentive for the proceedings in condemnation in anticipation of the future and added needs of the school district which were certain to come into being with the operation of the mandatory requirements of the new law. Immediate future needs are ordinarily an essential factor in the determination of the question of whether or not there is a present necessity for a taking in condemnation for the purposes of a particular public use. Central Pac. R. R. Co. v. Feldman, supra. And this is so, because of the obvious fact "that the beneficial exercise of the power of acquiring property for public uses cannot be enjoyed unless allowed in anticipation of the contemplated improvement, and * * * the mere fact that land proposed to be taken for a public use is not needed for the present and immediate purpose of the petitioning party, is not necessarily a defense to a proceeding to condemn it." Matter of Staten Island, etc., 103 N. Y. 251, 8 N. E. 548.

[10] But one other point remains to be discussed, and that involves the right of the plaintiff to amend its complaint, which was done on the day when the action came on for trial. The amended complaint differed from the original in the particulars only that it did not plead the previous passage of a resolution by its board of trustees, and in that a cause of action was stated for the condemnation of the entire 100 feet of land belonging to the defendants, instead of only 80 feet thereof as originally prayed for. It is now insisted that the amendment was in no wise materially related to the cause of action originally pleaded, but constituted the statement of a supplemental and entirely new cause of action. This contention, like the primary contention of the appellants, rests, in effect, upon the erroneous assumption that the resolution of the plaintiff's board of trustees, authorizing and directing the institution of proceedings for the condemnation of only a part of defendants' land, created and conclusively controlled the plaintiff's cause of action in the first instance, and that, as a consequence, a second resolution of plaintiff's board of trustees, not pleaded, but received in evidence, and which called for the condemnation of all of the defendants' land, likewise created a new and distinct right in plaintiff to exercise the power of eminent domain, and therefore it is argued that the amendment of the complaint was the statement of a new and distinctly different cause of action. As previously pointed out, the allegation of a preceding resolution of plaintiff's board of trustees, authorizing and directing the institution of condemnation proceedings was not essential to a statement of plaintiff's cause of action. Obviously, therefore, neither resolution operated to create and then control the plaintiff's cause of action stated either in the first or second instance. The resolutions referred to not being a basic element of the plaintiff's cause of action, we are satisfied that the amendment in question did not plead a new and distinct cause of action, and that, under the circumstances which prompted the amendment, the trial court had no recourse but to allow it. The rules of pleading and practice pertaining to civil actions generally are in this state applicable to proceedings in eminent domain, "and constitute the rules of pleading and practice therein (Code Civ. Proc. § 1262), and it has been held in other jurisdictions, where the same or a similar rule prevails, that—

"Amendments are recognized and allowed in condemnation proceedings as in civil actions * * * to alter the allegations of the petitions as to * * * the quantity of land desired by lessening or increasing the quantity." Standard Ency. of Proc., pp. 296, 297.

An instance of the application of the rule in this behalf is to be found in the case of Newton v. Alabama, etc., Ry. Co., 99 Ala. 468, 13 South. 259, in which the situation, in so far as the pleadings were concerned, was identical with that presented here. There the petition as originally filed sought the condemnation of a strip of land 80 feet in width as a right of way running through the entire premises involved in the condemnation proceedings. Subsequently, the petition was amended to the extent of enlarging the right of way sought to be condemned from 80 feet to 100 feet in width, and in passing upon the merits of a motion made in the court below to set aside the judgment upon the ground that it was void for the reason that the amendment "changed the subject-matter of the suit," it was held in effect, by the court of last resort, that a new and a different cause of action was not pleaded by the amendment to the original petition, and that under the "liberal system of amendments" prevailing in that jurisdiction the lower court had authority to permit the amendment. In the case before us the record shows that the amendment to the complaint was sought and permitted because of the fact that on the day the case was called for trial one of the defendants, Lester McDonald, sought and secured permission, without objection, to file his separate answer which, in effect, averred that the whole tract of land owned by the defendants is of the approximate dimensions of 100 by 344 feet fronting upon a certain street in the city of Bakersfield, and that a judgment in favor of plaintiff as prayed for in the original complaint for the value of 80 feet in width fronting on said street would leave the remaining portion of defendants' land only of the approximate width of 20 feet, and therefore comparatively worthless. It will thus be seen that the effect of this answer, if it were supported by evidence, would be to require the plaintiff to pay practically the value of the entire 100 feet of land belonging to the defendants, while under the pleading and prayer of the original complaint it could acquire only 80 feet thereof. Manifestly, such a result would be unjust, and clearly the exigencies of the situation warranted the plaintiff in seeking, and justified the trial court in permitting, the amendment, and particularly is this so in view of the fact that the defendants do not claim, and under the circumstances narrated could not claim, that they were caused any surprise or detriment by the amendment in question.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

SHEAN v. COOK et al. (S. F. 7688.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS 243(2) — STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY—"STOCKHOLDER."

A "stockholder," within Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, defining stockholder's liability, is one who owns stock, the term being so defined by Civ. Code, § 298, which was in effect at the time of the adoption of Const. art. 12, § 3, and the Legislature, in providing in Civ. Code, § 322, that the term "applies not only to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such," etc., having had in mind section 324, relating to transfer of stock upon books and effect of books as evidence of ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Stockholder.]

2. CORPORATIONS 243(2) — STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY — RECORD STOCKHOLDER — INDORSEMENT OF STOCK.

A wife who refused to accept stock transferred to her on the books of the corporation by her husband, without her consent, did not by signing indorsement on back of certificate, to make possible transfer of stock back to husband on the corporate books, so recognize ownership as to be liable to creditors of corporation, under Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, upon husband's failure to transfer stock from her name; such indorsement having been in nature of quitclaim.

3. CORPORATIONS 243(10) — STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY—ESTOPPEL.

Wife who refused to accept stock tendered her by husband and transferred to her on corporate books was not estopped to deny ownership of stock in action to enforce stockholder's liability, under Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, upon husband's failure to have stock transferred from her name on books, where creditors did not know at time credit was extended that she was shown by books to be a stockholder.

4. CORPORATIONS 243(2) — STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY—"STOCKHOLDER."

Wife who refused to accept stock tendered her by husband and transferred to her on corporate books, and who indorsed certificate to make possible transfer from her name on books of corporation, was not a stockholder within Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, defining stockholder's liability, upon subsequent extension of credit to corporation, though she remained stockholder of record because of husband's failure to make transfer upon books.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Frank Shean against Violet M. Cook, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Carrie M. Cook, deceased, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and A. E. Roth, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Bert Schlesinger and S. C. Wright, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman, of San Francisco, amici curiæ, for San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange.

WILBUR, J. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover from Carrie M. Cook upon her stockholder's liability for indebtedness incurred by the Morton L. Cook Company, a corporation, in which it was alleged she owned 49,095 shares of the total capital stock of 50,000 shares. Morton L. Cook, her husband and guardian, was joined as defendant. The court found that Carrie M. Cook was not a stockholder in the corporation, and rendered judgment in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Mrs. Cook has since died, and the administratrix of her estate with the will annexed has been substituted. The main question presented by the appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the court that Mrs. Cook was not a stockholder in the corporation. In determining that question we must consider the evidence from the view most favorable to the conclusion of the court. The corporation was organized March 6, 1903. Morton L. Cook was the owner of 49,095 shares. On the 28th of October, 1908, he caused a new certificate for these shares to be issued to Carrie M. Cook. Mr. Cook took this certificate to his wife, telling her that they had decided to make her the principal stockholder of the Morton L. Cook Company. She immediately repudiated the transaction and refused to accept the stock or to have anything to do with the matter. Two or three days later her husband told her that, if she was not going to have anything to do with the corporation, she should sign an indorsement that he had written upon the back of the stock as follows: "October 28, 1908. I hereby assign any and all int. I may have to this stock to Morton L. Cook." She thereupon signed said indorsement. Mr. Cook, who was during this whole period president of the corporation, took the stock to Mr. Alderson, who was the secretary, and said: "Mr. Alderson, that is all off; just let that matter remain in abeyance; I will take it up again at a later date." The stock certificate ever since October, 1908, has remained in the custody of Morton L. Cook in his safe deposit box in San Francisco. Mrs. Cook never had anything to do with the corporation or with said stock other than as stated. The corporation was actively engaged in business, and the indebtedness upon which plaintiff sued was incurred by the corporation between the 1st day of January, 1912, and the 1st day of February, 1914. Before that time Mrs. Cook, on December 10, 1910, had been declared an incompetent, and her husband had been appointed her guardian. She was under this guardianship up to the time of her death. It is obvious that there never was any contract or agreement between Mrs. Cook and the corporation that she should become a stockholder. Upon being tendered the stock, she refused the same, and returned it to the president of the corporation, who had presented it to her, and for the purpose of perfecting her repudiation and permitting the ownership of the stock to appear upon the books in conformity with the real fact she indorsed the same, so that such stock might be transferred on the books of the corporation in the usual and proper manner. Morton L. Cook was at all times the owner of the stock. Appellant's contention is that, as Mrs. Cook was shown by the books of the corporation to be a stockholder, and by reason of the presentation to her of the stock certificate and her indorsement thereof must have known that fact, she was liable for her proportionate share of the indebtedness of the corporation during such period as the stock continued to appear upon the books of the corporation in her name. This contention is based upon the following provision contained in section 322 of the Civil Code relating to stockholders' liability:

"The term stockholder, as used in this section, applies not only to such person as appears upon the books of the corporation to be such, but also to every equitable owner of stock, although the same appears on the books in the name of another. * * *

The statutory liability of stockholders is declared by our Constitution (article 12, § 3):

"Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint-stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred, during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association."

At the time this constitutional amendment was adopted, the Civil Code, in accordance with the general law concerning the subject, declared:

"The owners of shares in a corporation which has a capital stock are called stockholders." Civ. Code, § 298, enacted 1871.

[1] The term "stockholder," therefore, as used in the Constitution, must be construed in the light of this definition, and the liability, therefore, attaches to the owner of the stock. Section 322 of the Civil Code uses the exact language with reference to stockholders' liability as that contained in the Constitution, excepting that the words "of joint-stock association" and the words "or association" are omitted in the statutory declaration of liability. The remaining provisions of section 322 are obviously and necessarily for the purpose of carrying out the constitutional and statutory liability thus declared. Under the constitutional declaration of liability, carried into section 322, that liability is predicated upon ownership of the stock. Western Pacific Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 166 Cal. 346, 136 Pac. 284, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 825. It is evident that the Legislature in its declaration that "the term stockholder * * * applies not only to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such," etc., had in mind the provisions of section 324, Civil Code, relating to transfers of stock upon the books of the corporation, and the effect of such books as evidence of ownership. The term "stockholder" had already been defined (Civ. Code, § 298), and it was neither necessary nor desirable to again define the term. By the terms of section 324, Civil Code, it is provided that title to the stock may be transferred "by indorsement * * * and the delivery of the certificate; but such transfer is not valid, except as to the parties thereto, until the same is so entered upon the books of the corporation." In considering whether the fact that the name of Mrs. Cook appeared upon the books of the corporation as a stockholder made her liable under the statute to plaintiff, it will be necessary to consider some of the previous decisions of this court upon the subject. In Welch v. Gillelen, 147 Cal. 571, 82 Pac. 248, and Shattuck & Desmond, etc., Co. v. Gillelen, 154 Cal. 778, 99 Pac. 348, the court had under consideration the statutory liability of a stockholder in a nonbanking corporation, where the books of the corporation showed the defendant to be a stockholder at the time the indebtedness sued upon was incurred. Gillelen was a pledgee of the stock, but by mistake, which he endeavored to correct, the stock was issued to him personally, and he was shown by the books of the corporation to be a stockholder. In the latter case it was said, with reference to section 322, Civil Code:

"* * * The only rational construction of the section, that the language 'such persons as appear by the books,' etc., must be limited to persons who knowingly or voluntarily permit their names to appear as stockholders."

In both cases it was held that a construction of the section which would lead to the result that "would necessarily preclude one from showing that, while upon the face of the corporate books he appeared to be a stockholder, yet in fact he was not, that he had never owned or subscribed for any stock or authorized the issuance of any to him by the corporation, * * * cannot seriously be considered."

In Welch v. Gillelen, supra, it was held that the relation of the stockholder to the corporation was one of contract; that one could not become a stockholder, and liable to the creditors of the corporation, because of entries in the stock book of the corporation made without his consent. See, also, People's Home Sav. Bank v. Stadtmuller, 150 Cal. 108, 88 Pac. 280; Geary St., etc., R. R. Co. v. Bradbury Estate Co., 175 Pac. 457. In Shattuck & Desmond, etc., Co. v. Gillelen, supra, concerning appellant's contention that the stockholders were liable, it was said:

"The decisions relied on by the appellant in that case [Welch v. Gillelen, supra] were shown to be cases where the party asserting that he was not a stockholder had either knowingly and voluntarily assumed that position upon the books of the corporation, or, if he had not originally done so, had by his subsequent conduct estopped himself from denying the relationship."

The case of Hurlburt v. Arthur, 140 Cal. 106, 73 Pac. 734, 98 Am. St. Rep. 17, involved the statutory liability of stockholders in a banking corporation under sections 321 and 322 of the Civil Code. The question of an unauthorized issuance or transfer of stock was not involved or considered. While the construction of sections 321 and 322, Civil Code, are there considered, the effect of the opinion must be determined in the light of the point under discussion, namely, the liability of stockholders in a banking corporation. In such case the stock books and public notice of transfers are by statute declared to be conclusive evidence of the ownership of stock. Civ. Code, § 321. It was therefore held that, where the holder of stock as pledgee had the stock transferred to him in his own name and was shown on the books as owner thereof, and not as a pledgee, he was liable as a stockholder to creditors. The same rule also holds good in other corporations. Welch v. Gillelen, supra; Shattuck & Desmond, etc., Co. v. Gillelen, supra; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158. In Baines v. Babcock, supra, the defendant, who was shown by the books of the corporation to be the owner of stock, offered to prove that he was the real owner of only 425 shares issued to him by the corporation, and that the others standing in his name on its books were owned by other parties, and that they were issued to him as matter of convenience to enable him to negotiate a loan for such owners. The evidence was excluded because of the rule which was there stated to be well settled:

"That one to whom stock is issued by the corporation, and who has the same placed in his name on the corporation books as the owner, is liable to the creditors of the corporation as though he were the absolute owner; and this whether he was in fact a pledgee, agent, or trustee for the real owner."

As was suggested in Hurlburt v. Arthur, supra, the construction placed upon the sections of the National Banking Act by the federal courts is of assistance in construing sections 321 and 322 of the Civil Code. Section 5151 of the U. S. Revised Statutes provides:

"Shareholders of every national banking association shall be individually responsible," etc.

Section 5210 of the U. S. Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. § 9773), like section 321 of our Civil Code, requires the keeping of a list of stockholders for the inspection of shareholders and creditors, but it does not provide that such lists shall be "conclusive evidence as to who are stockholders," as does section 321, Civil Code. The general tenor of the decisions of the federal courts is very well set forth in Williams v. Vreeland, 244 Fed. 346, 156 C. C. A. 632, Circuit Court of Appeals, Third District. In that case the facts were very similar to the instant case. There the wife indorsed a dividend check, which, however, was issued in her husband's name, and also signed a power of attorney upon the back of the stock authorizing its transfer. She did not know that the stock had been issued in her name, and her signature to the power of attorney for the transfer of the stock was procured without her seeing the face of the certificates or knowing what they were. Her husband placed the certificates before her, face down, and said, "Mary, will you sign these papers for me?" She said, "What are they?" He replied, "They are some bank stock; I have made a mistake." The court states the rule to be applied in testing the question of liability, to the creditors of the corporation, of the wife under the circumstances as follows:

"The test of liability, therefore, seems to be the fact of being a record shareholder, knowledge of that fact, and some act in approval or ratification of it. Along this line the cases have been tried."

The court cited with approval the decision of the Court of Appeals of New York in Glenn v. Garth, 133 N. Y. 38, 30 N. E. 651, 31 N. E. 346, and quoted therefrom a part of the opinion pertinent here, as follows:

"It [a ratification] implies a conscious and intended approval of the act done. It rests upon the actual and existing purpose to make such approval. Hence the courts say that it must occur with full knowledge of all the facts. * * * Where the shareholder consciously accepts that relation, he ought to bear its burdens as well as enjoy its benefits, and it is easy to imply a promise to perform that duty. But where he does not accept the relation, where it was put upon him by another without authority and against his will, where, instead of accepting its benefits, he repudiates them at serious loss, where his mind and that of the company never met in any contractual relation, where it was not his duty to pay, and he explicitly refused to take what was offered, all foundation for an implied promise is gone. The facts do not admit of it, for the law does not raise a fiction to accomplish a wrong. And thus again we come to the proposition that the real truth must be ascertained, and when ascertained must control. And that real truth is that the defendants repudiated and did not ratify the unauthorized act of McKim. The whole force of a ratification lies in conscious and intended assent with full knowledge of the facts. If there is no such intent and no such volition, but a contrary intent and an opposite purpose, there is no ratification. The absence of any such intent and the presence of a different one is clearly disclosed by the facts."

[2, 3] The United States Circuit Court of Appeals sustained the finding of the trial court that Mrs. Vreeland was not liable as a stockholder of the bank to the creditors of the corporation. In the instant case Mrs. Cook refused to accept the stock offered her, and her indorsement is not the usual power of attorney consistent with an assumption of ownership of the stock, but is more in the nature of a quitclaim. There is no element of estoppel in the case. The creditors did not know at the time credit was extended that Mrs. Cook was shown by the books of the corporation to be a stockholder.

Appellant relies upon the case of Abbott v. Jack, 136 Cal. 510, 69 Pac. 257. In that case, at the request of the husband, a certificate for 330 shares of stock had been issued to Mrs. Jack as owner, March 14, 1896, and the same stood in her name on the books of the corporation until July 17, 1899, when it was surrendered and canceled, "and her acceptance of the stock is shown by her written assignment of it to R. E. Jack, her husband, of date March 16, 1896." It was there held:

"From this it appears that she became a stockholder of the corporation on or before March 16, 1896, and that she continued to appear as such on the books of the company until the cancellation of the certificate, July 17, 1899. She therefore continued to be a stockholder as the term is defined in section 322 of the Civil Code, and under the provisions of that section (no facts being found to exonerate her) she continued to be liable, along with her husband. Civ. Code, §§ 322, 324; Duke v. Huntington, 130 Cal. 274 [62 Pac. 510]; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 593 [27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158]; Moore v. Boyd, 74 Cal. 174 [15 Pac. 670]; O'Connor v. Witherby, 111 Cal. 528 [44 Pac. 227]."

The holding of the court would thus seem to be that the issuance of the certificate, coupled with the indorsement and the fact that her name appeared upon the books of the corporation, ipso facto created Mrs. Jack a stockholder, and the finding of the court to the contrary was erroneous. The court added:

"R. E. Jack indeed testified that on notifying her of the issue of the stock she refused to receive it; and he further testified that he told her, if she would not receive it, she must assign to him. * * * On a new trial the question of her liability as affected by the facts testified to by R. E. Jack, or otherwise appearing, can be considered; and as it is clear that there is a liability on her or her husband, or on both, the plaintiff, if he be so advised, should be permitted to amend his complaint by charging the latter with such liability."

The reversal of the trial court in that case seems to be based rather upon the condition of the record than upon the substantive rights of the parties. It is said:

"But there is no finding as to these or other facts tending to exonerate her, and their effect cannot, on the record as presented, be considered."

The necessary implication from the decision is that, if the court had found the fact to be that the wife had refused to receive the stock and had assigned it to her husband for the purpose of making effective her repudiation, she should not be held as a stockholder. In view of the construction placed upon the record in that case, the decision cannot be said to be an authority for the plaintiff in this case, but rather, on the whole, either leaves open the question as to the effect of the repudiation by the wife of the transaction, or decides that question in favor of the nonliability of the wife. In the case of Abbott v. Jack, the fact that section 321 of the Civil Code makes the books conclusive evidence of the liability of the stockholder is apparently not relied upon by the court. In so far, however, as this case can be considered an authority for the proposition that the stock books of the corporation are conclusive as to the liability of stockholders in a nonbanking corporation, the case has been overruled by the subsequent cases of Welch v. Gillelen, supra, and Shattuck & Desmond, etc., Co. v. Gillelen, supra. See, also, Western Pac. Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, supra.

[4] In addition to the facts heretofore stated, it may be said that M. L. Cook, the husband, while acting as guardian, reported to the court sitting in probate, on several occasions, that the stock in question belonged to his wife and was a part of her estate. These declarations, however, merely went to the question of his credibility, and the court having based its decision upon the truth of his statement concerning the original transaction, if we hold his statement sufficient to support the finding that she was not a stockholder, as we must do upon the authorities above quoted, the judgment must be affirmed.

The judgment is affirmed.

RIVERSIDE COUNTY v. BRINSMEAD.
(L. A. 4826.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1919.)

1. AGRICULTURE — 11 — DESTRUCTION OF FRUIT PESTS—SERVICE OF NOTICE ON OCCU-PANT OF PREMISES.

The notice required by Pol. Code, § 2322a, for the abatement of nuisance created by fruit pests in orchards may properly be served upon the occupant of the property, the former owner who had conveyed to his mother, the present owner, she then living in a foreign country.

2. AGRICULTURE — 15 — DESTRUCTION OF FRUIT PESTS—OWNER'S LIABILITY FOR EX-PENSES.

In an action by a county against the owner of an orchard to recover for fumigating it to destroy fruit pests under Pol. Code, § 2322a et seq., that the inspector only inspected one-eighth of the trees did not justify an assumption that the remaining trees were not infected, and that no recovery should be had thereon, in view of testimony that the orchard was generally infected.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by the County of Riverside against Elizabeth Brinsmead. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. A. Massey and Peyton H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lyman Evans, of Riverside, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] Plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant for the costs of fumigating her orchard, amounting to $871.45. Defendant appeals from the judgment. The lien is based upon the provisions of section 2322 of the Political Code, et seq. Appellant claims that the notice required by section 2322a was not served upon the proper party. Plaintiff alleged and the court found that the notice was served "upon the person in charge and in possession of said premises and orchard for the defendant as his agent." It is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to justify this finding. The proof showed that the notice was served upon Reginald Brinsmead, who was living in a residence upon the property in question. The owner of the property was living in England. C. White Mortimer, living in Los Angeles, had charge of the property, and a Mr. J. A. Thompson cultivated and cared for the property. Mr. Brinsmead, upon whom the notice was served, had lived upon the property for years while he was the owner thereof, and remained in the same house after transferring the property to the defendant, his mother. No one else lived upon the property or was in visible possession thereof. The defendant claims that the decision in San Bernardino v. Stewart, 173 Cal. 236, 159 Pac. 717, controls. In that case, however, the owner was living on the property, and was there at the time the notice was served. Here the owner was living in England, and no one was on the property at the time of the service other than the party served. The evidence sustained the finding of the court.

[2] Appellant further claims that, because the inspector only inspected one-eighth of the trees, it must be assumed that the other trees were not infected, and that no recovery should be had thereon. This point hardly merits consideration, particularly in view of the testimony that the orchard was generally infected.

The judgment is affirmed.

HERTWECK et al. v. FEARON et al.
(S. F. 8087.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT ⇨752—LIEN—CREATION.

Judgment lien is purely creature of statute; no such lien having existed at common law.

2. JUDGMENT ⇨772—LIEN—CREATION—TIME.

Judgment does not become lien on property subsequently acquired by judgment debtor, as of the time it was docketed, but lien attaches, under Code Civ. Proc. § 671, at time of acquisition of property.

3. JUDGMENT ⇨784—LIEN—PRIORITY.

Upon acquisition of land by one against whom there are undocketed judgments, the liens of such judgments, under Code Civ. Proc. § 671, are equal without regard to order of time in which docketed, having become liens at same time by single act of acquisition of property.

4. JUDGMENT ⇨784—LIEN—PRIORITY—EXECUTION.

Where judgment liens are equal, the judgment debtor who first has execution issued and levied upon the land thereby obtains a lien superior to that of the other judgments upon which executions have subsequently issued, the owners of which may redeem from sale upon first execution.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by Edward Hertweck and another against Joseph Fearon and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. H. H. Hart, of San Francisco, for appellants.

G. L. Aynsworth and S. L. Strother, both of Fresno, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action to enjoin the sale of certain land in Fresno county under a writ of execution issued upon a judgment of the superior court of Fresno county in favor of defendant Fearon against one Rauer for $513.25. The plaintiffs were the purchasers of said land at a sale thereof under execution issued upon a judgment of the superior court of Fresno county in favor of one Webb against said Rauer for $15.90, and, the time for redemption from said sale having expired, they had received the sheriff's deed to said land before any levy was made on the land under the Fearon judgment execution. Plaintiffs had judgment herein, and defendants appeal therefrom.

The Fearon judgment was the prior judgment. It was given and docketed against Rauer on March 13, 1912. The Webb judgment was given and docketed against Rauer on June 10, 1912. Rauer had no interest in the land here involved prior to October 22, 1912, on which date he became the owner thereof. This, it will be observed, was some months after the recovery and docketing of both judgments. Thereafter a writ of execution under the Webb judgment was issued and levied upon the land, and a sale had, and, no redemption having been had, the plaintiffs received their sheriff's deed January 20, 1914. Thereafter, viz. on May 10, 1915, the writ of execution was issued on the Fearon judgment and levied on the land.

The principal question presented is whether as to this after-acquired land the lien of the prior judgment, given by section 671, Code of Civil Procedure, was the prior and paramount lien. If it was, of course the sale of the land under the junior judgment execution was made subject to the prior judgment lien, and such prior lien could be enforced by execution, levy, and sale without regard to the sale, under the junior judgment. But if it was not the prior lien as to this land, it seems manifest to us that the purchasers at the sale acquired the land free of the lien.

[1-3] It being true, as was said in Boggs v. Dunn, 160 Cal. 283, 116 Pac. 743, that "the lien of a judgment is purely the creature of the statute, no such lien having existed at common law," the question presented must be determined by ascertaining the meaning of section 671, Code of Civil Procedure, the statutory provision covering this matter. That section, after providing for the docketing of the judgment by the clerk, is as follows:

"And from the time the judgment is docketed it becomes a lien upon all the real property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution in the county, owned by him at the time, or which he may afterwards acquire, until the lien ceases. The lien continues for five years," unless enforcement of the judgment be stayed on appeal by a sufficient undertaking, in which event it ceases.

This section is in all material respects substantially the same as it was when originally enacted in 1851 as section 204 of the old Practice Act, the only changes being the substitution of the word "becomes" for "shall become" as it originally was and the substitution of the word "ceases" for the word "expires." Of course, under this provision both judgments became liens upon this property acquired by the judgment debtor after their docketing. Manifestly, however, neither judgment could become a lien upon such property until it became the property of the judgment debtor. It was the single act of acquisition of the property by the judgment debtor that caused both docketed judgments to become liens thereon, and in the very nature of things there could be no priority in point of time between them in so far as the creation and inception of the liens are concerned. The two liens on this property were simultaneously created, and, unless there can be found in section 671, Code of Civil Procedure, an intention to make the liens of docketed judgments on after-acquired property of the judgment debtor rank according to the order of the respective docketings, it cannot be held that one has any priority over another. We can see no such intention expressed in our statute. The claim is that this intention is to be found in the words "and from the time the judgment is docketed it becomes a lien," etc., but certainly if such was the intent as to after-acquired property it was a very poor way in which to express it. We have already noted that the docketed judgment cannot "become a lien" on after-acquired property of the judgment debtor until the property is actually acquired by him. If it had been intended to provide for any priority as between judgment liens on after-acquired property, actually created at the same moment, based on the dates of docketing of the judgments, it would have been a simple matter to make that intention clear in apt words. Provisions in all substantial respects similar to those of section 671, Code of Civil Procedure, have been considered by the courts of many other states, and the overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that under such provisions there is no priority as between such liens on after-acquired property as are here involved—that they become liens at the some instant upon the after-acquired property, viz., at the instant there is a title to attach to, and do not relate back to the original judgment, and that neither has any priority over the other. See particularly In re Hazard's Estate, 73 Hun, 22, 25 N. Y. Supp. 928, affirmed on opinion of Supreme Court, 141 N. Y. 586, 36 N. E. 739; Moore v. Jordan, 117 N. C. 86, 23 S. E. 259, 42 L. R. A. 209, note; 53 Am. St. Rep. 579, note; Kisterton v. Tate, 94 Iowa, 665; Ware v. Purdy, 95 Iowa, 667, 64 N. W. 648; 2 Freeman on Judgments, § 368; 1 Black on Judgments, § 460; 5 Ruling Case Law, § 262, p. 802; 23 Cyc. 1381. Mr. Freeman says that "this construction seems to be of undisputed correctness, and to be adopted wherever the question has arisen, except in Oregon." Freeman on Judgments, § 368. The Oregon case referred to is that of Creighton v. Leeds, 9 Or. 215, and the statute there involved was similar to our own. The question was there learnedly and exhaustively considered, but we find ourselves unable to assent to the conclusion reached therein. We are of the opinion that the words "and from the time the judgment is docketed," etc., on which so much reliance is placed, can reasonably be taken as meaning in the connection in which they are used no more with regard to after-acquired property than that from such time the judgment becomes a lien at the instant there is a title to attach to. It follows from what we have said that the judgment liens here involved were equal, neither party having priority over the other.

[4] The necessary consequence of this conclusion, it appears to us, is that the purchaser at the sale under the execution issued on the Webb judgment took a title free of all claim based on the Fearon judgment lien. The situation in this regard was well expressed in Elston v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754, where the court said:

"The result of all these authorities * * * is that where there are different judgments, which are equally liens upon the lands of the judgment debtor, the judgment creditor who first has issued and levied an execution thereby obtains a lien which is superior to that of the other judgments upon which executions have been subsequently issued. * * * The result of this is that the first execution so far subordinates the lien of the other judgments that the owners of them may redeem from the sale upon the first execution, under the statute which provides that junior judgment creditors may redeem. * * * This does not conflict with the rulings that a judgment lien which is superior by seniority cannot be overthrown by a junior judgment lien. There the preference is completed by the seniority. Here there is no seniority, and the preference is brought about by the superior diligence in following up the steps of the law, and, in a sense, appropriating the property by the levy of an execution."

See, also, Freeman on Judgments, § 374.

No question as to any possible right of Fearon to share with Webb in the proceeds of the sale upon the execution on the Webb judgment is material in this action, and therefore any such question need not be here discussed.

Plaintiffs, being by virtue of their purchase and deed the owners of this land free of all claims based on the Fearon judgment, were entitled to the relief sought by them.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEIDLEIN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

(Sac. 2596.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1919.
Rehearing Denied March 27, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT — 278(18)—INJURIES TO SERVANT.

In action for death of switch tender in freight yard at night by being crushed between cars, evidence held insufficient to show that either foreman of switching crew or any of crew had reason to believe any special care was essential to the switch tender's protection, or that he was in, or likely to be in, a position of danger.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⚡278(18) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action for death of switch tender, crushed between cars in freight yard, evidence held sufficient to justify conclusion there was no negligent omission of railroad with relation to switch tender.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1050(1) — HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In action for death of switch tender, crushed between cars in freight yard, testimony of car inspector as to rule or practice as to employes in yard looking out for themselves held not prejudicial.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⚡270(16)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE.

In action for death of switch tender between cars in freight yard, evidence as to usual practice in moving of cars and making up trains was admissible as illustrative of known knowledge of deceased, in considering administratrix's claim as to special negligence through knowledge of foreman of dangerous situation, also in considering question of contributory negligence, available in diminution of damages.

Wilbur, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by Catherine Neidlein, as administratrix of the estate of Francis J. Neidlein, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Theodore A. Bell and Arthur L. Shannon, both of San Francisco, and Shinn & Hart, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Francis J. Neidlein, a switch tender in the employ of defendant, was killed while working in defendant's freight yard at Sacramento by being crushed between two cars. He left surviving him as his sole heir at law his mother, Catherine Neidlein. She was appointed administratrix of his estate, and upon the theory that at the time of the accident the deceased was engaged as the employé of defendant in interstate commerce, a matter not disputed, brought this action as such administratrix, alleging negligence on the part of defendant proximately causing the death. At the trial, the case for the plaintiff being closed, a motion for a nonsuit was made upon various grounds, including among others a want of a showing of negligence on the part of defendant or any of its officers, agents, or employes. The motion was granted, and judgment given for defendant. This is an appeal by plaintiff from such judgment.

Concededly the rights of the parties are to be determined under the act of Congress approved April 22, 1908, commonly known as the federal Employers' Liability Law. 35 Stat. L. 65, c. 149 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665). The act involved allows a recovery in such cases for the damage occasioned by the injury or death of an employé "resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employes of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its cars, engines, appliances, machinery, track, roadbed, works, boats, wharves or other equipment." No defect or insufficiency of equipment of any kind was here alleged or relied upon, the sole negligence alleged being that while the deceased was upon one of the railroad tracks engaged in the discharge of his duties, the track then being in total darkness, the agents and employes of defendant other than deceased, in the switching and moving of cars in the yard "negligently caused to be kicked, and to be moved along and over said track No. 2, at the point where the deceased then was, * * * a detached, unattended, unguarded and unlighted tank car, without giving any notice or warning of any kind or character to the deceased of such movement of such tank car," which car struck deceased and crushed him between the end thereof and the end of another car standing on said track.

The accident occurred about 7 o'clock of the evening of December 2, 1913. At that time it was dark. The yard had no light therein except such as came from the lanterns carried by the employes, the light from the switch engine and the lights on the various switch targets. It was the private property of defendant, and no street or way traversed it. Located therein were the two main line tracks of defendant, and to the south of these five other tracks for the switching of cars and the making up of trains, all of which lay parallel, and are numbered from north to south on the diagram in evidence as tracks 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and the track known as the "lead" to the south of the others, into which all these switch tracks ran, the "lead" itself finally running at its westerly end into the west-bound main line track. In this yard something was moving nearly all night. Deceased had been for some time engaged therein in the capacity of switch tender, his duties being, under the direction of the assistant yardmaster, to keep the main line switches lined up so as to permit the safe passage of main line trains, and also apparently to supervise the use by the switching crew and other crews of the tracks used for making up trains and switching cars, as well as of the "lead." It is not questioned that he was thoroughly acquainted with the conditions in the yard and the manner of doing the work therein. At the time of the accident daily train No. 223, due to leave at 7:40 p. m., had been partially made up on track 2, consisting at that time of some seven or eight cars, without engine attached. Some other cars were to be attached at the westerly end, as to which deceased had full knowledge. These cars, with several others, were then attached to the switch engine. One William Bowles was the foreman of the switching crew, and he told deceased that he had two cars for train 223, and others to be sent down the lead track. Deceased told him that he had an engine on track 6 to be sent back along track 3, and Bowles told him in substance that he would take his cars up the west-bound main line so as to leave the switch tracks clear, and there wait until the tracks were cleared for his work. Accordingly Bowles took his engine and cars up to the main track, and, leaving them and the remainder of the crew there, walked back to observe the work being done until he could proceed further with his own duties. Deceased, carrying his lantern, went to the switch of track 6, apparently opened it, and then went back along track 6 and spoke to the engineer of the train on that track, and apparently found him to be not ready to move. He then went again to the switch of track 6 and closed it, and then, walking back northerly across the tracks to somewhere between tracks 4 and 3, swung his lantern around his head, giving a signal which Bowles called a "highball" or "back up sign," calling out at the same time substantially: "Go ahead, Billy, with your work; he ain't ready." Bowles testified that in the giving of this signal the lantern of deceased was extinguished. This was the last that Bowles saw of deceased till after the accident. Bowles then gave his own engineer a "back up signal," and they backed down and kicked one car down the lead, and then lined the switch for track 2, and kicked one of the cars for train 223 down that track. Another car was kicked down the lead, and another about to be kicked down track 2 for train 223 when Bowles was notified of the accident. It appears that after deceased gave his signal to Bowles and his light was extinguished, he had walked over track 3 to track 2 and the cars thereon, had gone up to the westerly end of those cars, and half crossing this track had stopped at the center of the track at the coupling of the most westerly car and facing easterly, away from the work that was then going on in the yard, rested his lantern on the coupling, and attempted to light it. He was here seen thus engaged by one Ensbury, a foreman of car inspectors, who, looking over the cars on track 2, and crossing the track to see that the cutting lever of the end car was in proper shape and then to go down the other side of the cars, saw him there. He asked deceased to lift his lantern so that he could try the lever, which deceased did, and he tried it. He said to deceased, "You are in a hell of a place, kid," to which deceased did not respond. He then walked down the other side of the cars a very short distance when he heard the impact of the car kicked down track 2 against the partially made up train standing thereon, and a cry from deceased. Apparently when the kicked-in car came in contact with the cars on track 2, deceased was still in the position in which Ensbury had left him, and was so injured by being crushed between the two cars that he died very shortly thereafter. The car was kicked in on track 2 very gently, traveling with very little noise only a mile or two an hour, and only a car length or so after being cut off from the engine, there being only about two car lengths in the clear on track 2 west of the westerly end of the partially made up train. There was no light on the car so kicked in, and no attendant. The work was being done in accord with the usual custom and practice obtaining in the yard.

[1] So far as we can see, after a most thorough consideration of the evidence, there was absolutely nothing to indicate that either Bowles or any of the switching crew had the slightest reason to believe or even suspect that any special care in the matter of the work was essential to the protection of deceased, or that he was at any time in or likely to be in a position of danger with relation to the work that the crew was about to do. That Bowles knew that the light of the lantern carried by deceased had been extinguished has no significance in this connection. Bowles, of course, knew that deceased was somewhere in the yard without a light in his hands, and we may assume that he knew that some time after having given him the signal to proceed with his work deceased would cross track 2 on his way northerly to get back to the main line tracks and his switchman's shanty on the northerly side thereof. But he also knew that deceased was thoroughly familiar with the location of the tracks in the yard and with the manner of doing the work of switching and making up trains therein, and that he knew that part of the work that was about to be proceeded with in accord with his own signal and direction was the completion of the making up of the train on track 2, and he was entirely justified in relying on the presumption that deceased, who had no further duty to perform with reference to that work, would take all reasonable precautions to insure his own safety by keeping out of the way of the cars about to be moved. See Casey v. Boston & M. R. R. Co., 121 N. E. (Mass.) 403; Aerkfetz v. Humphreys, 145 U.

S. 418, 12 Sup. Ct. 835, 36 L. Ed. 758. While there is testimony to the effect generally that it was "dark" in the yard, there is nothing substantial enough to justify the inference that if deceased had observed he would not have been able to detect the actual approach of the car in ample time to have avoided it. There was nothing in the circumstances to even suggest to Bowles that there could be any danger to deceased in his proceeding with his work in the ordinary way. The possibility that deceased would stand on track 2 with his back to the work, or even attempt to cross the track where he did without any attempt whatever to ascertain whether a car was approaching, would not reasonably occur to him. Upon this point the evidence appears to us to be such that there could not be any reasonable difference of opinion.

[2] Nor can we see that there is any reasonable basis in the evidence for a conclusion that there was any negligent omission on the part of the company with relation to deceased. Learned counsel for appellant devotes himself almost entirely to a discussion of the claim that in view of the fact that the lantern of deceased had been extinguished Bowles was negligent in not taking unusual and special precautions to avoid any possible injury to him. We are entirely at a loss to see in the evidence any fair warrant for an inference that with relation to the class of employes to which deceased belonged, switch tenders, etc., in railroad yards, there was any negligence on the part of the company in the usual manner of the doing of the work in this yard, which manner apparently was followed in this case. So far as we can see, the cars were so moved that, to use the language of Aerkfetz v. Humphreys et al., supra, "any ordinary attention on the part of the" employe "to that which he knew was a part of the constant business of the yard would have made him aware of the approach of the cars, and enabled him to" avoid them. With relation to such employes the very nature of the business is such that the obligation of the employer must necessarily be measured in the light of the obligation of the employe to use at least ordinary care to avoid injury in his dangerous work. That is to say, the employer is "not bound to assume that any employe, familiar with the manner of doing business, would be wholly indifferent to the going and coming of the cars." Aerkfetz v. Humphreys et al., supra. Wherein defendant may reasonably be said to have failed in the duties to such employes with relation to this yard and the manner of doing work therein, we are unable to perceive from the evidence. See Aerkfetz v. Humphreys et al., supra; Crowe v. N. Y. C. & H. R. Co., 70 Hun, 37, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1100; Connelley v. Penn. R. Co., 228 Fed. 322, 142

C. C. A. 614; Travis v. Kansas City So. Ry., 121 La. 886, 46 South. 909. The point specially made in the brief of learned counsel is that the company had not made any rule "as to what should be done in the event that a switch tender or switchman's light should become extinguished." The record is not clear as to whether or not this is true, but assuming it to be so we cannot see how in so far as the protection of switchmen or switch tenders is concerned any rule could reasonably have been considered necessary.

It seems to us very clear that the sole cause of the deplorable accident was the negligence of the deceased, and that in no respect was there any negligence on the part of any officer, agent, or employe of defendant contributing thereto. It follows that the learned judge of the trial court properly granted the motion for nonsuit.

[3] Complaint is made that the car inspector, Ensbury, was improperly allowed to testify as to a rule or practice as to employes in the yard looking out for themselves. The substance of his testimony was that, according to his understanding of the custom in the yard, everybody was supposed to use care to avoid being injured. We are at a loss to see anything of a prejudicial nature in the evidence.

[4] Evidence as to the usual practice and custom in the moving of cars and making up trains in the yards was undoubtedly admissible, not, as was suggested by counsel for plaintiff in his objection and expressly recognized by the trial judge, that a negligent course of conduct would be any the less negligent simply because long continued without mishap, but as illustrative of the known knowledge of deceased in considering the claim of plaintiff as to any special negligence on the part of Bowles arising from knowledge of a dangerous situation on the part of deceased, and also in considering questions of contributory negligence which was available to defendant in diminution of damages.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

WILBUR, J. I dissent. It does not seem to me that it can be said that as a matter of law the defendant was guilty of no negligence, and, unless it can be so said as a matter of law, the question of negligence should have been submitted to the jury, who were charged with the responsibility of determining what constitutes ordinary care. No one would doubt that to kick an unlighted car across a public highway when it was so dark that the car could not be readily seen, the car moving so slowly and so silently that it could not be heard, would constitute negligence. Whether or not the moving of a car under similar conditions in a yard where workmen had a right to be and were expected to be, in view of the deadly results of a collision with such a moving car, seems to me to be a question to be determined by the jury by applying the standard of ordinary prudence. While it is true that the engineer had a right to rely upon the deceased taking reasonable precautions to insure his own safety, that did not justify him or the defendants in omitting that degree of care required by ordinary prudence. Scott v. San Bernardino, etc., 152 Cal. 604, 93 Pac. 677.

I think the judgment of nonsuit should be reversed.

CLARKE v. NEW AMSTERDAM CASUALTY CO. (S. F. 7984.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1919.
Rehearing Denied March 27, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE ⚡666—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—CAUSE OF DEATH—DISEASE.

Under an insurance policy covering death from bodily injuries, which independently of all other causes are effected solely and exclusively by accidental means, if disease plays a part in the death of insured after an accident, it is essential to recovery on the policy that such disease was due to the accident.

2. INSURANCE ⚡666—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—CAUSE OF DEATH—DISEASE.

Under an insurance policy covering death by accidental means exclusively, if the death of the insured was in part caused by heart disease, which was not in fact caused by the accident, there could be no recovery.

3. INSURANCE ⚡665(5)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—CAUSE OF DEATH—EVIDENCE.

In an action under an insurance policy covering death by accidental means exclusively, where it appeared that insured was struck by an automobile resulting in concussion of the brain, and consequently developed appendicitis and heart disease, evidence held to sustain a finding that the proximate cause of death was concussion of the brain.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1001(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF FACT.

A verdict will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is sufficient evidence to support it.

5. INSURANCE ⚡146(3)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY.

If doubt arises in respect to the application, exceptions to, or limitations to liability, the construction of the contract most favorable to insured should be adopted.

6. TRIAL ⚡296(9)—INSTRUCTIONS—CURE OF ERROR.

In an action on an accident policy, an instruction that the jury might, in case of doubt as to the application, exceptions to, or limitations to liability in the contract, accept the construction most favorable to plaintiff was not erroneous, as directing a verdict for plaintiff if they should be in doubt regarding what decision to render; the court elsewhere charging that plaintiff must establish her case by the preponderance of the evidence.

7. INSURANCE ⚡669(11)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—ACTIONS ON POLICY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action on an accident insurance policy, instructions that if the jury found "or believed" certain facts as to the proximate cause of death, a verdict for plaintiff would be justified were not misleading.

8. INSURANCE ⚡669(11)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

In an action on an accident insurance policy, where the accident was followed by heart disease, which was the immediate, but not the proximate, cause of death, an instruction that the diseased condition must have existed at the time of the accident, when considered in connection with other instructions, held not misleading.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Mary B. Clarke against the New Amsterdam Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lilienthal, McKinstry & Raymond, of San Francisco, and B. A. Herrington and H. G. Hill, both of San Jose (Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Gavin McNab and Nat Schmulowitz, both of San Francisco, and Holland, Rutledge & Lashly, of St. Louis, Mo., amici curiae.

H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff after a trial by jury. Plaintiff, who is the widow of James T. Clarke, deceased, sued as beneficiary named in an accident policy issued to her husband.

The policy in question provided for the payment to plaintiff of $7,500 for "loss of life * * * from bodily injuries, * * * which independently of all other causes are effected solely and exclusively by accidental means. * * * Nor shall the company be liable for any loss caused or contributed to by illness or disease."

Mr. Clarke was struck by an automobile while he was crossing a street in San Jose, was knocked to the pavement, and suffered a severe concussion of the brain. The date of the accident was December 10, 1914. Mr. Clarke was confined to his bed, either in the hospital or at home, for a little more than a week. After that he was up for a few hours each day, and later was able to go into his garden and even to take walks of several blocks. On the Sunday before he died he complained of a pain in his side, and on the following Wednesday, January 13, 1915, an operation was performed upon him, and the appendix was removed. It was one of those not infrequent cases in which nature had walled off and localized the pus, and there was no apparently serious general infection. On January 16, 1915, Mr. Clarke died, the immediate cause of his death being acute myocarditis, a disease of the heart. Prior to the accident he had been a man of robust health, and had exhibited no symptoms either of heart disease or of appendicitis. Immediately after the accident Dr. Van Dalsem examined him, using a stethoscope, but found no indication of heart trouble, but just before the operation a slight heart murmur became evident. This indicated a leak of the tricuspid valve. The autopsy revealed a heart of more than normal size. The valves were thickened and covered with a calcareous deposit, which, according to the experts, would account for the murmur noticed just before the operation.

There was testimony to the effect that Mr. Clarke was struck across the stomach by the fender of the automobile, and was thrown so that his head struck the pavement. There was upon his head when he was first examined by Dr. Van Dalsem a contusion $2\frac{1}{2}$ or 3 inches in diameter. There was a concussion of the brain which caused unconsciousness for five or six hours, and for several days thereafter he was so disturbed mentally that he was unable to understand his surroundings or his condition.

[1, 2] The court instructed the jury that if disease plays a part in the death of an assured person after an accident, it is essential to recovery that such disease was due to the accident. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Shields, 155 Fed. 54, 85 C. C. A. 122. The jurors were also given the following instructions:

"Under the terms of this policy plaintiff cannot recover for the death of James T. Clarke, unless that death was caused by accidental means, and solely and exclusively by such means, independently of other causes. * * * If you shall find that the death was caused in part by the heart disease, and that this heart disease was not in fact caused by this accident, your verdict must be for the defendant. * * * If you shall be in doubt whether this accident caused either appendicitis or the heart disease, your verdict must be for the defendant."

These instructions substantially stated the rule governing such cases, and therefore the problem before us is whether or not there is substantial evidence to support the verdict in view of the court's charge.

It appears from abundant and uncontradicted testimony that Mr. Clarke was a man of extraordinary health and bodily vigor for a man of his years. Just before the operation a slight leak of the tricuspid valve was discovered, but, according to the testimony of his physician, the heart was then functionally normal and was propelling the blood throughout the body. The autopsy revealed no abnormal condition of the lungs or liver indicative of any chronic heart condition. Dr. Van Dalsem testified, regarding the myocarditis, as follows:

"In my opinion this acute myocarditis was due to the appendicial abscess, aided by the lowered resistance caused by the concussion of the brain. That is the way of poisons gathered up from the appendicial abscess and carried through the heart."

[3] Regarding the infection resulting in the appendicitis, one of the physicians, Dr. Blanchard, testified that in his opinion the accident so lowered Mr. Clarke's vitality and put him in such a physical condition, with reference to resistance, that he became a prey to the malady to which otherwise he would have been immune; that the appendix would not have been infected from the bacilli in the larger intestine had it not been for the accident. There was other evidence regarding these matters, but the above synopsis sufficiently illustrates the theory of respondent and the substantial support to that theory upon which the jury was justified, in our opinion, in reaching the conclusion that the concussion of the brain, due to the accident, was the proximate cause of Mr. Clarke's death.

Great stress is laid by defendant's counsel upon the fact that at the post mortem examination the heart showed lime deposits. One of the defendant's expert witnesses, a physician, testified that "the lime deposits in the heart were due to arteriosclerosis, which is frequently due to old age." But there was no showing that this condition was pathological, or that it was even unusual in a man of the age of the assured. Naturally, a man of 60 or more would have less power to resist evil consequences resulting from an accident than a younger person would possess, but an insurer, accepting as premiums the money of a client of advanced years, may not complain of that fact. It has been held that the existence of unknown conditions tending to shorten the life of the assured does not nullify a policy. Stanyan v. Security Mutual Life Insurance Co., 91 Vt. 83, 99 Atl. 417, L. R. A. 1917C, 350; Freeman v. Mercantile Mutual Accident Association, 156 Mass. 351, 30 N. E. 1013, 17 L. R. A. 753. It may be conceded that morbid conditions induced by bodily injury may be more readily caused and more deadly in result when the victim is an aged person than in the case of a healthy youth, but that concession would not excuse the insurer of the maturer individual. If the accidental injury produces morbid change in the exercise of vital functions, which in turn results in death, the injury and not the morbid change is held to be the cause of death. Ward v. Aetna Life Insurance Co., 82 Neb. 499, 118 N. W. 70; New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Shields, 155 Fed. 54, 85 C. C. A. 122; Ludwig v. Preferred Accident Insurance Co. of New York, 113 Minn. 510, 130 N. W. 5.

[4] The cause of death is a question for the jury, and where, as here, there is sufficient testimony in the record to support the conclusion reached by the jury, the verdict and judgment based thereon will not be disturbed. Hanley v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 180 Iowa, 805, 161 N. W. 114; Hatfield v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Association, 180 Iowa, 39, 161 N. W. 123; Semmons v. National Travelers' Benefit Association, 180 Iowa, 666, 163 N. W. 338.

Defendant's counsel cite many authorities, of which Maryland Casualty Co. v. Morrow, 213 Fed. 599, 130 C. C. A. 179, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1213, is typical. In that case the jurors were told, in effect, that although death might have resulted from two concurring causes—one being the injury and the other being pre-existing diabetes—the plaintiff would nevertheless be entitled to recover. This was very properly held to be error. But in the present case the theory of the plaintiff, supported by testimony which the jurors were entitled to accept, was that no heart disease existed before the accident, and that both the appendicitis and the myocarditis were results of the injury itself. In Bellows v. Travelers' Insurance Co. (Mo.) 203 S. W. 978, the court was considering the case of a man who had been severely beaten about the head and body by robbers. He recovered from the external wounds, but the internal results progressed from stage to stage until, according to certain testimony, death resulted from them. The immediate cause of death was nephritis (inflammation of the kidneys) occurring nine months after the accident, but the court held that from the evidence the jurors were justified in deciding that death resulted directly and independently of all other causes from the injury.

Where real and substantial evidence in a case supports a verdict the judgment will not be set aside on the ground that it was not justified by the proofs. Marks v. Reisinger, 35 Cal. App. 44, 169 Pac. 243.

[5] The instructions were unusually full and fair, and it would serve no good purpose to review all of those to which appellant's counsel call our attention. Some of them, however, require notice. The twenty-eighth instruction was as follows:

"When a doubt arises in respect to the application, exceptions to, or limitations to liability, you will adopt the construction most favorable to the plaintiff."

It is not contended that the rule announced is not a correct one for the guidance of a court, nor could such contention well be sustained, because this court, and, generally speaking, all American courts, have declared in favor of that principle of construction of contracts which are at all doubtful in the matter of the exact meaning of the language employed. 1 Corpus Juris. 415; Bayley v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, 125 Cal. 345, 58 Pac. 7.

[6] But appellant's counsel complain that by giving this instruction, applicable, if at all, to issues of construction to be determined alone by the court, the jurors must have understood the court to say that, if they were in doubt regarding what decision to render in the case, they should find a verdict for the plaintiff. We cannot see that jurors would be so misled, nor can we agree with counsel for appellant regarding the alleged harmful result of the giving of this instruction. Elsewhere in the charge the jury had been told by the court that "plaintiff must establish her case by a preponderance of the evidence." We may not assume that the jurors disregarded this rule, nor that they were misled by the statement of a canon of construction of insurance contracts, which is, undoubtedly, one recognized by the courts.

[7] The twenty-sixth instruction began with the words, "If you find from all the facts and circumstances," and these words are followed by a recital of the details of the accident, the contusion and the shock to his nerves, which Mr. Clarke experienced. Then occur the words, "and if you find or believe" (the italics are ours), followed by a recital of respondent's theory of the proximate cause of death, which they were told, if believed by them, would justify a verdict for plaintiff. Appellant's counsel insist that this instruction is prejudicially erroneous, citing in that behalf Fries v. American Lead Pencil Co., 141 Cal. 610, 75 Pac. 164. That authority does not sustain the contention. It is true that in the Fries Case an instruction was condemned which began with the words, "If in this case you believe from the evidence," etc., but the error lay not in the use of the word "believe," but in the statement to the jurors that they could award such damages as they might "feel" the child entitled to receive. This gave the jurors, as the court held, a right to allow "play to their emotions of sympathy for the injured child." It is clear that the instruction there held erroneous is not at all similar to the one here criticized.

[8] It is further asserted that the court committed radical error by instructing the jury that in order to defeat the claim the diseased condition of the heart or appendix "must have existed in the body of James T. Clarke at the time of the accident." This statement, wrenched from its context, would of course be an erroneous one, but it occurs in the course of a long instruction to the effect that if the diseased condition existing at the time of the operation or autopsy was "not concurrent with the injury, or existing prior thereto," and was "a natural result of the injury, and that the resulting death was solely due to the bodily injuries, and not to any independent cause," the verdict must be for the plaintiff. The part of the instruction to which objection is made was followed by this sentence:

"If you believe from the evidence that the acute suppurative appendicitis and the valvular heart disease, with hypertrophy of the heart, was brought about by the weakened condition of the body of James T. Clarke, as the result of said injuries, and not from some condition existing at the time or prior to the injury on December 10, 1914, then your verdict must be in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant."

The instruction was proper by reason of the conflicting claims of the litigants as to the existence or nonexistence of disease prior to the accident. Undoubtedly, death from any independent cause, whether existing prior to or supervening at a time subsequent to the accident, would defeat the claim of plaintiff, but the instruction was dealing with one phase of the problem, namely, the existence or nonexistence of disease prior to the accident. Nevertheless, the jurors were told that death from "any independent cause" would prevent recovery. Therefore we are of the opinion that the jurors were not misled by the instruction. An instruction somewhat similar was approved in New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Shields, supra.

No other alleged errors in the giving or refusing of instructions require further comment than that we are of the opinion that the very exhaustive charge was fair and free from substantial error.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LONG BEACH v. LIENBY, Mayor, et al. (L. A. No. 5795.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 864(7) — ISSUANCE OF REFUNDING BONDS — CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 11, § 18, prohibiting cities from incurring liability exceeding annual income without the assent of two-thirds of the voters, does not prohibit city from issuing a refunding bond to pay a judgment against it for personal injuries, regardless of whether its liabilities exceed its annual income.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 913 — ISSUE OF BONDS — "FUND" — "REFUND."

St. 1897, p. 75, § 1, as amended by St. 1901, p. 274, authorizing cities other than those of the first class to fund or refund certain indebtedness, permits a municipality to issue a refunding bond to cover a warrant given in payment of a judgment for personal injuries; to "fund" an outstanding debt being to convert the indebtedness into a more permanent form, with an extended time of payment, and with interest which is regular and which may also be reduced, and to "refund" being to replace that which has once been funded by a new fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fund; Refund.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 907 — PAYMENT OF JUDGMENTS — STATUTES — REPEAL.

St. 1897, p. 75, § 1, as amended by St. 1901, p. 274, providing for refunding bonds was not repealed, either expressly or by implication, by St. 1901, p. 794, providing for a tax levy to pay judgments; the two acts being complementary.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 913 — ISSUE OF BONDS — PAYMENT OF LIABILITIES ARISING EX DELICTO.

A city may issue refunding bonds to provide for the payment of a judgment against it for personal injuries, payable out of funds derived from general taxation, notwithstanding that the liability arose from the exercise of the proprietary as distinguished from the governmental functions of the city.

Mandamus proceedings by the City of Long Beach, a municipal corporation, against W. T. Lisenby, Mayor, and another, to compel them to execute a refunding bond. Writ of mandate issued.

Wheaton A. Gray, Waldo M. York, Harry M. Irwin, and Geo. L. Hoodenpyl, all of Los Angeles, and D. L. Bathurst, of Long Beach, for petitioner.

Eugene C. Tincher, of Long Beach, for defendants.

K. A. Miller, Barstow, Rohe & Jeffers, Nathan Newby, and T. E. Gibbon, all of Los Angeles, T. A. Williams, of Richmond, Va., W. C. Shelton, Harry A. Holzer, Slosson & Mitchell, W. A. Alderson, all of Los Angeles, and Beverly L. Hodghead, of San Francisco, amici curiæ, for petitioner.

T. A. Sherwood, of Long Beach, and James E. Kelby and Parke Godwin, both of Los Angeles, amici curiæ, for defendants.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding in which the petitioner seeks a writ of mandate requiring the defendants, as its officials charged with a duty so to do, to execute a certain bond for the sum of $563.23, issued under the provisions of a certain ordinance of the petitioner authorizing the issuance of such bond for the purpose of funding and thereby providing for the eventual payment of an outstanding indebtedness in the form of a judgment against the petitioner, evidenced by a warrant issued to the judgment creditor for said sum. The facts of the case are undisputed and may be briefly stated as follows:

The city of Long Beach is a municipal corporation operating under a charter duly adopted by its people and approved by the Legislature in the year 1915. Prior to said time, and acting under the permission of an act of the Legislature adopted in the year 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 412), authorizing municipalities to issue bonds and incur indebtedness for the purpose of constructing and maintaining public assembly or convention halls, the city of Long Beach had proceeded to erect and conduct an auditorium for the purposes of public assemblage. When such auditorium was about to be used for such a purpose, and while a large number of people were assembled in front thereof, the approach to the building collapsed, and many persons were killed or injured. Actions were brought against said city for damages resulting from the death or injury of these people, based upon the alleged negligence of the said municipality in the construction of said building, some of which resulted in judgments in favor of the several plaintiffs therein. One of these cases affirmed upon appeal to this court was that of Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 Pac. 670, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106, and upon the affirmation of this judgment other judgments based upon the authority thereof were obtained against said city. In all, these judgments aggregated the sum of over $370,000, a sum much in excess of the income and revenue of said city provided for any single year. M. A. Poll was one of those persons in whose favor one of said judgments had been entered, and, said judgment not having been satisfied, he applied to and received from said city a warrant for the payment of the sum of $563.23, the amount of said judgment, dated March 13, 1918. Thereafter, and on March 15, 1918, the governing body of said city, who are termed the commissioners thereof, by a two-thirds vote of its members, adopted an ordinance entitled "An ordinance providing for the issuance of a bond in the sum of $563.23 to refund outstanding indebtedness of the city of Long Beach in the sum of $563.23, evidenced by a warrant of said city. It is the bond which was to be issued pursuant to this ordinance which the defendants herein as mayor and treasurer of said city refused to sign, and it is their signature of the same which it is the purpose of the writ sought herein to compel. The act of the Legislature under the terms of which the petitioner seeks to justify attempted issuance of the bond in question by a two-thirds vote of the governing body of said city is the act of 1897 (Stats. 1897, p. 75), which reads in part as follows:

"Section 1. The common council, board of trustees, or other governing body of any incorporated city or town other than cities of the first class, in this state, having an outstanding indebtedness, evidenced by bonds or warrants thereof, is empowered, by a two-thirds vote of its number, to fund or refund the same and issue bonds of such city or town therefor in sums of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars each, and having not more than forty years to run, and bearing a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, payable semiannually."

It may be here noted that the foregoing section of the act of 1897 was amended in 1901 (St. 1901, p. 274) in an important particular to be hereinafter discussed.

The first contention of the defendants herein in opposition to the issuance of said writ is that the payment of said indebtedness in the manner provided by the terms of the statute above quoted or of any amendment thereto is inhibited by the provisions of section 18 of article 11 of the state Constitution, reading as follows:

"No city * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose."

It being conceded that the indebtedness or liability evidenced by said warrant is part of a total indebtedness or liability arising from a common cause which exceeded in the year of its creation the income or revenue of said city provided for such year, the first question presented for our consideration is that of the scope, application, and effect of the provisions of the state Constitution last above quoted. The purpose for which the foregoing section of the state Constitution was adopted is somewhat outlined in the debates of the constitutional convention of 1879, to which our attention has been directed, from which it appears that the framers of this particular section of the Constitution stated its object to be to put an end to "the practice prevalent both in California and in Eastern states, a practice that has grown rapidly of late years, of extravagance and expenditure in engaging in improvements of various kinds which has resulted in an enormous increase of municipal indebtedness." A yet more definite expression of the purpose of this provision of the Constitution is to be found in the decision of this court in the case of San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641, wherein it is stated:

"The system previously prevailing in some of the municipalities of the state, by which liabilities and indebtedness were incurred by them far in excess of their income and revenue for the year in which the same were contracted, thus creating a floating indebtedness which had to be paid out of the income and revenue of future years, and which, in turn, necessitated the carrying forward of other indebtedness, was a fruitful source of municipal extravagance. The evil consequences of that system had been felt by the people at home and witnessed elsewhere. It was to put a stop to all of that, that the constitutional provision in question was adopted."

The subject was further considered in the case of McBean v. City of Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191, and Arthur v. City of Petaluma, 175 Cal. 216, 165 Pac. 698, wherein the language of the foregoing case was expressly referred to and approved.

Having thus determined the general scope and purpose of the constitutional provision under review, we may next consider the limitations imposed upon its application by our previous decisions. In the case of Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 412, 33 Pac. 1128, this court decided that the payment of the salary of a public officer (in that case the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco), whose office has been created and salary fixed by the Legislature of the state, is not within the prohibition of section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution. In so deciding, this court, after quoting the foregoing language of the Constitution, said:

"It is quite apparent, however, that this clause of the Constitution refers only to an indebtedness or liability which one of the municipal bodies mentioned has itself incurred—that is, an indebtedness which the municipality has contracted, or a liability resulting, in whole or in part, from some act or conduct of such municipality. Such is the plain meaning of the language used. The clear intent expressed in the said clause was to limit and restrict the power of the municipality as to any indebtedness or liability which it has discretion to incur or not to incur. But the stated salary of a public officer fixed by statute is a matter over which the municipality has no control, and with respect to which it has no discretion; and the payment of his salary is a liability established by the Legislature at the date of the creation of the office. It, therefore, is not an indebtedness or liability incurred by the municipality within the meaning of said clause of the Constitution."

The reasoning of the foregoing decision, as well as that of the other cases above cited dealing generally with the scope and purposes of this constitutional provision, would clearly seem to confine the application of said provision to those forms of indebtedness and liability which may have been created by the voluntary action of the officials in charge of the affairs of such city and to have no application to cases of indebtedness or liability imposed by law or arising out of tort. As to the latter class of liabilities to which the indebtedness existing in the instant case belongs, viz. that arising out of tort, there is no direct adjudication in this state. The Constitutions and statutes of several of the other states of our Union contain similar provisions to that embraced in the foregoing clause of our own Constitution, and in construing these it has been uniformly held by the courts of these states that said limitations do not apply to liabilities arising out of torts. Conner v. City of Nevada, 188 Mo. 148, 86 S. W. 256, 107 Am. St. Rep. 314; City of Bloomington v. Peurdue, 99 Ill. 329; Rice v. City of Des Moines, 40 Iowa, 638; City of Chicago v. Sexton, 115 Ill. 230, 2 N. E. 263; Ft. Dodge, etc., Co. v. City, etc., 115 Iowa, 568, 89 N. W. 7; Lorence v. Bean, 18 Wash. 36, 50 Pac. 582; People, etc., v. May, 9 Colo. 404, 12 Pac. 838; O'Bryan v. Owensboro, 113 Ky. 680, 68 S. W. 858, 69 S. W. 800; Little v. Portland, 26 Or. 235, 37 Pac. 911.

[1] In McQuillin on Municipal Corporations it is stated to be the well-settled rule that such provisions in the Constitutions and statutes of the various states apply only to indebtedness which arises ex contractu, and have no application to involuntary liabilities arising ex delicto. We are therefore constrained to hold that the section of the Constitution above quoted may not be relied upon to defeat the asserted right of the city of Long Beach to provide for the payment of its indebtedness of which the judgment sought to be funded through this proceeding forms a part, without regard to the state of its revenues for the year in which such liability arose, and without a vote of the people of said city.

The question still remains, however, whether the provisions of the act of 1897 above quoted, or of the later amendment thereto, furnish the proper legal authority for the attempted action of the governing body of said city in its endeavor to provide a means for the ultimate payment of said indebtedness. This leads us to a closer consideration of the terms of the act of 1897 and of the amendment thereto adopted in the year 1901. The act of 1897 in its original form was one of a series of similar acts authorizing the funding or refunding of the outstanding indebtedness of municipalities by the issuance of bonds. The first of these acts was passed in the year 1880, and had reference only to the indebtedness of municipalities outstanding on and prior to January 1, 1880, which might be funded in the form of bonds by a two-thirds vote of the members of the governing body. The next enactment touching the subject was the act of 1883 applicable to all cities and towns of the state except cities of the first class. This act provided for the funding or refunding of the outstanding indebtedness of such cities or towns, evidenced by bonds or warrants thereof by a four-fifths vote of the members of the governing body thereof. The next act was that of 1893, which amended the act of 1883, adding the important requirement that the question of the issuance of the funding or refunding bonds should be submitted to a vote of the electors. The act of 1895 again amended the act of 1883 by omitting the word "warrants" and also the requirement of its immediate predecessor for submitting the matter of the issuance of such bonds to the vote of the electors, but limiting the outstanding indebtedness which might be funded or refunded to the principal of the bonds. Then came the act of 1897, which went back as to its language to the form substantially of the act of 1883. Had the legislation of the state been permitted to remain in the form into which it was crystallized in the act of 1897, it cannot be fairly disputed that it was the intention of the Legislature to enable towns and cities to fund or refund every form of their indebtedness by the issuance of bonds therefor through a vote of two-thirds of their governing body. This, of course, they could not do as to such of their contractual obligations as would come within the inhibition of section 18 of article 11 of the state Constitution; but as to such forms of indebtedness as arose by operation of law, such as official salaries fixed by state law and the like, or as had arisen ex delicto and been put in the form of judgments and evidenced by either bonds or warrants, there would seem to be no constitutional objection to the method provided in said act of 1897 for funding or refunding these latter forms of indebtedness. This view of the scope of these several successive acts is further enforced by the meaning to be given to the use of the phrase "fund or refund" found in each of them. To "fund" an outstanding debt of a municipal corporation which is payable presently or at short periods is to convert such indebtedness into a more permanent form with an extended time of payment and with interest which is regular and which may also be reduced. The usual method of "funding" such a debt is by the issuance of bonds. People v. Carpenter, 31 App. Div. 603, 52 N. Y. Supp. 781; Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356; Webster's New International Dict., subject "fund"; Bouvier's Law Dict., subject "fund." To "refund" is to replace that which has once been funded by a new fund. Webster's New International Dict., subject "refund."

Applying these definitions to these several statutes, it would seem that the term "fund" should be given application to those forms of municipal indebtedness referred to therein as evidenced by "warrants," and the term "refund" to those forms of such indebtedness as had already once or oftener been funded by being put into the form of bonds. Our attention has, however, been called to the fact that two important changes were made in the law relating to the indebtedness of municipalities by the Legislature in the year 1901. The first of these consisted in an amendment to the act of 1897, by which the words "or by judgment or judgments recovered against it upon bonds or warrants originally issued by such town or city" were inserted in said act, making the portion of said act important to this inquiry read as follows:

"Section 1. The common council, board of trustees, or other governing body of any incorporated city or town other than cities of the first class in this state, having an outstanding indebtedness, evidenced by bonds or warrants thereof, or by judgment or judgments recovered against it upon bonds or warrants originally issued by such town or city, is empowered, by a two-thirds vote of its number, to fund or refund the said indebtedness and issue bonds of such city or town therefor in sums of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars each, and having not more than forty years to run, and bearing a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, payable semiannually." St. 1901, p. 274.

[2] It is the contention of the respondents herein that as to the above-quoted amendment inserted in the act of 1897, this amendment is to be construed as a limitation upon the powers of the governing bodies of such towns or cities as are embraced in the act confining the issuance of bonds for the funding or refunding of judgments to such judgments only as had been recovered against the town or city upon bonds or warrants previously issued by such town or city; and hence that the judgment in the instant case, not being of that character, was not susceptible of being funded under the terms of the amended act. We cannot adopt this contention. We think the purpose of the amendment to this act made in 1901 was to enlarge rather than to limit its application, and was to so enlarge it as to render it applicable to cases wherein the holders of warrants or bonds against such municipalities who had put these into the form of judgments might also have these judgments funded or refunded in the same manner as they might have had funded or refunded the indebtedness in its original form. Any other construction would leave the term "warrants" without meaning or place in the act. It is to be noted in this connection that the matter of funding or refunding so much of the indebtedness of a municipality as may come within the scope of these acts is a matter which is reposed in the discretion of the governing body of the municipality, and is not a right to such action which holders of the warrants, bonds, or judgments evidencing such indebtedness can either invoke or compel. It rests entirely with the governing body of the town or city to determine whether or not an outstanding indebtedness which is presently due or is soon to become due, or which is bearing a high rate of interest, shall be converted into long-term bonds at reduced interest, payable as to both principal and interest in annual or periodical installments. It may not be denied that in many instances of outstanding municipal obligations, possibly even in the instant case, this would be both the desirable and prudential course to pursue. The statute of 1897, as amended in 1901, in our view permits municipalities of the kind covered by its terms to fund or refund their outstanding indebtedness, evidenced by their issued warrants or bonds or by judgments obtained thereon when such indebtedness is not of the sort inhibited by the state Constitution, and that they may do so by the action of two-thirds of their governing body as provided in said amended act; and that the indebtedness due the creditor of the petitioners in the instant case, evidenced as it is by a duly issued warrant, may be thus funded; and that the petition herein having by the due and regular action of its governing body adopted an ordinance to that effect it is now entitled to have its ministerial officers, the respondents herein, perform the ministerial act of affixing their official signatures to the bond to be issued pursuant to said ordinance.

[3] In reaching this conclusion we are not unmindful of the second contention of the respondents herein that the act of 1897, as amended in 1901 by the act making such amendment approved March 12, 1901, was repealed by the act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of judgments against counties, cities, cities and counties, and towns," approved March 23, 1901. Stats. 1901, p. 794. This later act does not purport expressly to repeal any former enactment touching the indebtedness of municipalities. It provides in substance that it shall be the duty of the county clerk to file with the auditor and furnish to the governing bodies of the local municipality affected by the act a list of such existing final judgments against each as are of record in his office 15 days before the day on which the tax levy must by law be made. It is then made the duty of the governing body of the municipality affected by such judgment having authority to levy taxes upon its taxable property to include in the tax levy a rate or sum sufficient to pay such judgment or such aliquot portion thereof as during a series of like successive levies covering a period of not to exceed 10 years would eventually pay the whole of such judgment. This act does not purport to expressly repeal the former act, nor do we think it does so by implication. It is to be noted that the former act excepts from its operation cities of the first class, and that it has no reference of the indebtedness of counties, while the second is general in its application to counties, cities and counties, and cities and towns of every class. The chief distinction between these two acts, however, is this: The former act and all of its predecessors touching the same subject are, as we have seen, acts purporting to provide a means by which cities and towns excepting those of the first class may through the discretionary action of their governing bodies elect to fund or refund their outstanding indebtedness in the form of long-term bonds. This method of gradually relieving such municipalities of a burden of debt presently due cannot be compelled by the creditor, but rests entirely in the voluntary action of two-thirds of the membership of the governing body. The later act, on the other hand, is compulsory in its nature. It imposes upon the official body invested with the power to levy taxes the duty of making a special tax levy to pay judgments against the municipality, the performance of which duty the judgment creditor could compel by an appropriate writ. These two provisions for the payment of outstanding judgments against the municipalities respectively affected thereby are thus not inconsistent or in conflict with each other, the former providing a means by which the municipality may in its discretion adopt a method for funding or refunding such portion of its indebtedness as may thus be paid; the latter prescribing a means by which the creditor may compel the payment of his judgment by an enforced levy of taxes. These acts are thus in effect complementary in providing a twofold means by which municipalities may elect, or if they do not do so, may be compelled to pay such of their debts as are payable out of revenues other than those of the year in which the obligation was incurred.

[4] As to the respondents' contention that the indebtedness which it is herein sought to have funded in the form of bonds payable by general taxation was in its inception a liability arising out of the exercise of the proprietary as distinguished from the governmental functions of the municipality, and hence cannot be made payable out of funds derived from general taxation, we do not deem the point deserving of extended consideration. It has long been the settled policy in this state to permit municipalities to issue bonds for the purpose of creating and carrying on public activities which are proprietary in character, such bonds being made payable out of funds derived from general taxation. No distinction can be drawn between obligations thus created and payable and obligations in the nature of liabilities arising ex delicto out of the operation of the public properties thus called into being. In the instant case the creditor has secured a general judgment against the petitioner herein payable generally out of whatever funds or property of the city may be available and upon which a warrant has been duly issued, also payable out of the general funds of the municipality. We are satisfied that the statute of 1897, as amended in 1901, is available for the purpose of providing a means for the funding and eventual payment of this indebtedness, and hence that the petitioner is entitled to the issuance of a writ of mandate, commanding the respondent, its officials, to sign and issue the bond in question. Let the writ issue accordingly.

ZARZANA v. NEVE DRUG CO. et al.
(Sac. 2717.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1919.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⚡136(30) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION OF FACT.

In an infant's suit in his own right for personal injuries when run into by a motorcycle, the question of imputed negligence of plaintiff's parents, if properly a part of the case, was one of fact, and not of law.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⚡95(1) — NEGLIGENCE OF PARENT—IMPUTATION TO CHILD.

The rule of imputed negligence as applied to actions by children in their own right no longer prevails in California, if it ever did prevail.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡705(1)—MOTOR VEHICLES—USE OF STREETS—CARE.

Apart from Motor Vehicle Act, § 22(b), the driver of a motor vehicle is bound to use reasonable care to anticipate the presence on the streets of other persons having equal rights with himself.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚡706(5)—INJURIES FROM MOTORCYCLE — NEGLIGENCE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a child's action for injuries when struck by a motorcycle, evidence that the driver was going at 15 miles an hour on a slippery street crowded with traffic, a speed sufficient on sudden stoppage to throw him over the handlebars, held sufficient to sustain finding of his negligence.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by Salvatore Zarzana by Albert Zarzana, his guardian ad litem, against the Neve Drug Company and Albert Holthaus. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Downey, Pullen & Downey, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Fred J. Harris, of Sacramento, for respondent.

LENNON, J. In this action plaintiff sued in his own right for the sum of $5,000, and recovered judgment in the sum of $350, with costs of suit, as damages for personal injuries, the result of being struck by a motorcycle ridden and driven by the defendant Albert Holthaus, who at the time was in the employ of the defendant Neve Drug Company. Issue was joined as to the negligence of the defendants, and as a special defense the answer of both defendants pleaded that—

"The injuries occurring to * * * plaintiff were proximately caused by the negligence of the parents of * * * plaintiff in allowing * * * plaintiff, a boy of five years of age, to be upon the highway where said accident occurred unaccompanied and unprotected, except by an older brother of * * * plaintiff, who was then and there of tender age, and not a fit and proper person to accompany * * * plaintiff across said highway."

The action was tried by the court below without a jury, and the appeal is from the judgment upon a record which shows the facts of plaintiff's case, in so far as they appertain to the time, cause, and character of the accident, to be substantially as follows: The accident occurred between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock p. m. on January 24, 1916, at the intersection of two streets in the residential district of the city of Sacramento, which streets at the time of the accident, as was usual at that hour of the day, were crowded with the traffic of pedestrians, street cars, motor vehicles, and other conveyances. The injuries complained of consisted generally of bodily bruises and lacerations and fractures of the bones of plaintiff's left leg. The plaintiff, a boy of five years of age, in company with his brother, two years older, was on his way from his home on an errand to nearby relatives. The boys had arrived at the northeast intersection of the streets in question as the defendant Holthaus was approaching on a motorcycle traveling, as he testified when called as a witness for plaintiff, at a speed of 15 miles an hour, and at a time when the asphalt paved streets were wet and slippery. When approaching the intersection of said streets, and when 30 feet distant therefrom, the defendant Holthaus saw the plaintiff and his brother standing on the edge of the sidewalk. While Holthaus was approaching, the plaintiff and his brother, the latter holding plaintiff's hand, started to cross the street, and when within about 8 feet of the boys, Holthaus applied the brake of the motorcycle, with the result that the machine skidded upon the wet and slippery pavement and collided with the plaintiff with great force and caused the injuries complained of. The sudden stoppage of the machine, resulting from the application of the brake precipitated Holthaus over the handlebars and onto the ground. The testimony is in conflict as to whether or not Holthaus, at any time after he saw the plaintiff and his brother standing on the corner, sounded the horn of his machine. The evidence is also in conflict as to whether it was daylight or dark at the time of the accident, but the fact that the motorcycle was without a light at the time of the accident is undisputed. Upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's case as thus outlined the defendants interposed a motion for a nonsuit upon the ground that the plaintiff's evidence did not show negligence on the part of Holthaus, and did show as a matter of law "imputed negligence" on the part of the mother of plaintiff in allowing him to be exposed to the hazards of the street without adequate protection. The trial court found that Holthaus was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the injury, and that the parents of the plaintiff were not guilty of "imputed" or any negligence. The correctness of the trial court's ruling upon the motion for a nonsuit and the claimed insufficiency of the evidence to support the trial court's finding of negligence are the only points involved on the appeal.

[1, 2] The contention that the trial court was compelled, as a matter of law, upon the decision of the motion for a nonsuit, to deduce from plaintiff's proofs the existence of imputed contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff's parents sufficient to defeat plaintiff's action, is based upon the assumption that the doctrine of imputed negligence is a firmly fixed feature of the law of negligence in California, and has been adopted in this state to the extreme extent that, when such a defense is relied upon, as was done here, the question of whether or not there was such negligence is wholly and exclusively a question of law; and, with this assumption as a basis, it is argued that, even though the action was not by the parents in their own behalf, but was by the plaintiff alone in his own right for personal injuries to him, the court below should have invoked and applied the doctrine of imputed negligence to the facts of plaintiff's case, and then have determined as a matter of law whether the claim of contributory negligence on the part of the parents was well or ill founded. This contention is attempted to be supported by the citation of the following cases: Schierhold v. North Beach, etc., Ry. Co., 40 Cal. 447; Meeks v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 602; McQuilken v. Central Pacific Ry. Co., 64 Cal. 463, 2 Pac. 46; Higgins v. Deeney, 78 Cal. 578, 21 Pac. 428; Daly v. Hinz, 113 Cal. 366, 45 Pac. 693; Fox v. Oakland, etc., Ry. Co., 118 Cal. 55, 50 Pac. 25, 62 Am. St. Rep. 216. Our perusal of these cases has not satisfied us that the doctrine of a parent's "imputed negligence" in the care and control of the activities of its child is firmly fixed as a part and parcel of the substantive law of this state, in so far as it concerns the adjudication of cases of an infant suing in his own right for compensation for personal injuries to him. All but two of the cases cited do no more, primarily and directly, than decide that the solution of the question of whether or not "imputed negligence" as a contributing cause of an infant's injury is one of fact or of law is dependent, as is commonly the case, upon a consideration of the evidentiary circumstances preceding and attending the infliction of the injury and that when such circumstances, even though the evidence be nonconflicting, may, as oftentimes happens, readily and rightfully respond to one of two distinctly different deductions, the question of negligence, imputed or otherwise, is always a question of fact. Applying, as doubtless the trial court did, these fundamental and familiar principles of the general rules of evidence pertaining to the law of negligence to the facts of the case, it correctly concluded that the question presented, assuming it to be properly a part of the case, was one of fact, and not of law. Meeks v. S. P. R. R. Co., supra; Daly v. Hinz, supra. But was the question properly a part of the case? Doubtless, where the parent is suing in his own right, the doctrine of imputed negligence applies (Neff v. Cameron, 213 Mo. 350, 111 S. W. 1139, 18 L. R. A. [N. S.] 320, 127 Am. St. Rep. 606), but in this behalf it will be noted that only in two of the cases relied upon to support the contention made here (Meeks v. S. P. R. R. Co., supra; Daly v. Hinz, supra) does it appear that the injured infant was a plaintiff suing in his own right, and while the doctrine in question was in those cases dealt with, still it was not definitely and distinctly invoked and applied as a decisive factor in either case, nor was its soundness, in so far as its applicability to the instant cases was concerned, challenged or considered in either case, and therefore we are of the opinion that it cannot be held that the tacit recognition of the doctrine in those two cases warrants the conclusion that the doctrine, unrestricted, was ever the carefully considered and finally accepted law of this state; and we have but little difficulty and less hesitation in here and now refusing to recognize the doctrine as having any application to cases of the character under consideration here when we stop to consider that the doctrine found no sanction in the common law, was originally conceived in the sin of a far-fetched fiction, and wormed its way into the law of a few jurisdictions through the medium of a dictum declared in the case of Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273, and thereafter blindly followed despite the fact that it has never, so far as we are aware, been decisively accepted by any court of last resort where its soundness was squarely challenged, and, when challenged, it has been judicially anathematized by the "overwhelming weight of authority as well as of argument" as an obsolete and exploded legal heresy which was ever contrary to humanitarian and common sense conceptions of the justice of rules which should be employed in the adjudication of the relative and immediate rights and wrongs of individuals (Neff v. City of Cameron, supra; Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67; Berry v. Lake Erie, etc., Co. [C. C.] 70 Fed. 682; Chicago, etc., Co. v. Kowalski, 92 Fed. 312, 34 C. C. A. 1; Wy-more v. Mahaska County, 78 Iowa, 398, 43 N. W. 264, 6 L. R. A. 545, 16 Am. St. Rep. 449; Flaherty v. Butte, etc., Ry. Co., 40 Mont. 454, 107 Pac. 416, 135 Am. St. Rep. 630; Shearman & Redfield, Cont. Neg. §§ 75, 78. Commenting on Hartfield v. Roper, supra, the parent case in the United States on the doctrine of imputed negligence, and referring to the approval of the doctrine by the English courts, Beach on Contributory Negligence (3d Ed.) § 127, has this to say:

"The rule of imputed negligence, as applied to persons non sui juris, is an anomaly. The English law on this point presents an extraordinary illustration. On the one hand, it is held that the negligence of the person having charge of a child is the negligence of the child, and imputable to it, when the child comes into a court of justice and asks damages for an injury negligently inflicted upon it by the defendant. But, per contra, when a donkey is carelessly run down in the highway, where he is negligently exposed, the defendant is liable, and though oysters are negligently placed in a river bed, it is an injury redressible at law in damages for a vessel negligently to disturb them. It appears, therefore, that the child, were he an ass or an oyster, would secure a protection which is denied him as a human being of tender years in such jurisdictions as enforce the English or the New York rule in this respect."

The rule first enunciated in Robinson v. Cone, 22 Vt. 213, 54 Am. Dec. 67, to the effect that the negligent exercise of a parent's care and control of a child is not to be imputed to the child as a defense to an action by the child itself for personal injuries, is abundantly approved by the rulings and reasoning to be found in twenty and more jurisdictions throughout the United States (Shearman & Redfield on Cont. Neg. supra), and "in at least three states where the doctrine of Hartfield v. Roper, supra, was once followed, Indiana, Minnesota, and Illinois, it is now repudiated." Neff v. City of Cameron, supra. Following in the wake of the preponderating weight of authority, we may well and wisely, although somewhat tardily, declare that the rule of imputed negligence as applied to actions by children in their own right no longer prevails, if it ever did prevail, in this jurisdiction.

[3, 4] The evidence sufficiently supports the finding of negligence on the part of the defendant Holthaus. In this behalf it will be noted that at the time of the accident there was in force and effect the Motor Vehicle Act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 397), which provided that—

"Every person operating or driving a motor or other vehicle on the public highways of this state shall operate or drive the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway, and no person shall operate or drive a motor or other vehicle on a public highway at such rate of speed as to endanger the life or limb of any person or the safety of any property." Section 22(b).

Aside from the mandate of the statute, the driver of a motor vehicle is bound to use reasonable care to anticipate the presence on the streets of other persons having equal rights with himself to be there. Motor vehicles have not as yet been granted an exclusive right of way over public thoroughfares. In the presence of the uncontroverted testimony that the defendant Holthaus just prior to the accident was driving his motorcycle at a speed of 15 miles an hour upon a wet and slippery street crowded with the traffic of street cars, motor vehicles, and pedestrians, which speed was sufficient upon a sudden stoppage to throw him over the handlebars, we cannot say that the trial court was not justified in finding that the defendant Holthaus was guilty of negligence. O'Dowd v. Newnham, 13 Ga. App. 220, 80 S. E. 36.

The judgment is affirmed.

SMITH v. MATHEWS CONST. CO. et al.
(Sac. 2719.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1919.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ¶258(2) — DISSOLUTION BY DEATH—JUDGMENT.

Where complaint was filed against existing copartnership and others, by their answer defendants alleged dissolution of firm by death of partner, but counsel appeared for all defendants, including firm, and defended for them, as they had a right to do under Code Civ. Proc. § 1585, defendants may not complain judgment is against firm after its dissolution by death.

2. CONTRACTS ¶146(12) — PLEADING FULL PERFORMANCE — RECOVERY ON QUANTUM MERUIT.

Pleading of full performance will not support a cause of action on quantum meruit.

3. CONTRACTS ¶296—FAILURE OF PERFORMANCE—DEVIATION.

Any conscious deviation from the absolute terms of a contract does not necessarily cause a failure of performance.

4. CONTRACTS ¶305(1)—BUILDING CONTRACT — DEPARTURE FROM SPECIFICATIONS — WAIVER.

By failure of owner to demand any re-execution of a building contract or change in materials, contractor's departures from strict performance according to letter of specifications were waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by James F. Smith against the Mathews Construction Company, copartners composed of C. J. Mathews and Lettie P. Mathews and others. From judgment for plaintiff, the construction company and certain others appeal. Affirmed.

C. E. McLaughlin and C. P. McLaughlin, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

John W. Johnston and Frank J. O'Brien, both of Sacramento, and W. A. Kelly, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment for something more than $5,000, balance due for work done and materials furnished in the construction of improvements on the Forum building in Sacramento. A lien on the property was also adjudged.

The action was based on a contract between plaintiff and defendant Mathews Construction Company and the work done and materials furnished thereunder. The contract price to be paid for plaintiff's work and materials used for metal furring, lathing and corner beads, and plastering and cementing the five-story addition to the building was $14,790, of which plaintiff alleged $11,021.50 had been paid, leaving a balance of $3,768.50, which defendants owed but refused to pay. There was a separately stated cause of action for extra work and material amounting in value to $1,596.29. All of the defendants, except the Mathews Construction Company, were sued as claiming some ownership and interest in the real property involved.

By their answer defendants admitted that at all times in the complaint mentioned the Mathews Construction Company was a copartnership composed of C. J. and Lettie P. Mathews, but denied that said copartnership was at any time owner of the building or the land on which it was located. There was also an allegation that the copartnership was dissolved by the death of Lettie P. Mathews in November, 1915 (a time long subsequent to the filing of the complaint). The contract and its terms were admitted to be as pleaded, but there were elaborate pleadings to the effect that the work had not been done according to the contract and that the materials were deficient in amount and quantity. There was an allegation that Forum Investment Company, C. J. Mathews, R. A. Herold, and Frank J. Ruhstaller were at all pertinent times the owners of the property. It was admitted that extra work had been ordered, but defendants averred that this work was done in a crude, improper manner. It was also pleaded that by reason of changes in the original plans necessitating the extra work "plaintiff was relieved from the necessity of using material required by the original plans and specifications, of the value of about five hundred dollars ($500) which was to be credited upon said extra work."

By way of counterclaim, defendants alleged that at plaintiff's instance and because of his defective work they did extra work on the building to the value of $674.05; that by reason of the omission by plaintiff of materials required by the contract they were entitled to judgment for $4,346.37; and that by reason of the improper and crude workmanship employed by plaintiff in applying the plaster and cement to the building defendants had been damaged in the sum of $12,000. There was a cross-complaint based upon the alleged insufficiency of the quantities of materials used by James F. Smith, the improper preparation and application of materials, and the poor workmanship. Damages were demanded in the sum of $10,000.

The judgment was for plaintiff's entire demand and against defendants on the counterclaim and cross-complaint.

[1] Defendants contend that the judgment against the Mathews Construction Company was erroneous. The court found it to be true, as alleged in the answer, that the copartnership had been dissolved by the death of one of its members, which occurred subsequently to the execution of the contract and after the filing of plaintiff's liens. It is insisted that the court was powerless to render a judgment against a copartnership no longer existing. When the complaint was filed the Mathews Construction Company was an existing copartnership. It is true that by their answer defendants alleged the dissolution of the copartnership by death of one of the partners, but nevertheless counsel appeared for all of the defendants including the copartnership and defended for them as they had a right to do. Section 1585, Code Civ. Proc. They may not complain, therefore, at the form of the judgment.

The principal attack of appellants is directed against certain findings with reference to the manner of performance of the contract. It was found that the work was done in accordance with the plans and specifications; that the materials used were proper, and mixed in the specified proportions; and that the work was done in a good and workmanlike manner, as required by the contract, plans, and specifications, except as follows:

"Some of the plastered surfaces were not straight and true, and some of the angles were not worked plumb, the exact amount or number of which the evidence does not definitely disclose. This was caused by the act of the defendants in rushing the work and in requiring the plaintiff to place and apply second and third coats of plaster before previous coats of plaster were dry, and also from the fact that some of the lathing underlying said surface and said work was not laid on true and smooth by a previous contractor in charge thereof. That plaintiff notified defendants of such fact that such lathing was not so laid and defendants directed plaintiff to proceed with his work and to place the plaster upon such surfaces and upon such lathing so, as aforesaid, improperly laid on by such other and independent contractor.

"That the scratch coat was not carried to the floor, but to within less than five inches thereof, and that such space was later filled in with the second or brown coat. This departure from the terms of the contract was not willful or done with the purpose or intention to deceive or defraud the defendants, and it did not deceive them. It was done openly by the plaintiff, in good faith and in the belief that it was a performance of his contract, and was offered by him as a performance of the contract. It was in plain view of the defendants, who were constantly in and about the building, and they made no objection to this work, and it was at the time accepted by them as a performance of the contract. That the departures from the contract as herein stated were slight and unimportant and immaterial; that they were each and all known of by defendants, and that such defendants were not deceived, defrauded, or injured thereby."

[2-4] Appellants insist that the deviations from the strict letter of the contract (such, for example, as the failure in each room to carry the "scratch coat" clear to the floor at that part of the wall subsequently concealed by the baseboard) were intentional, willful violations of the agreement necessarily involving bad faith, and that the doctrine of substantial performance has no application. They also assert that such doctrine may only be invoked by pleading and where, as here, plaintiff alleged full performance and the court found that there were any deviations, however slight, from strict performance on the part of the lien claimant, the judgment must be against him.

In support of the point last stated, appellants cite such cases as Herdal v. Sheehy, 173 Cal. 163, 159 Pac. 422, and Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 24 Pac. 867, which hold, in effect, that where one seeks to recover for the value of work done or material furnished in the partial performance of a contract, full performance of which has been prevented by the other party to the agreement, he must plead the excuse for failure of full performance. Undoubtedly, if the omissions on the part of the plaintiff were material and substantial failures to complete his contract, the pleading was not sufficient to support a cause of action based upon the quantum meruit. But the court held that there was a substantial performance of the contract, and the real question is whether or not that ruling was justified. It is not true, as appellants contend, that any conscious deviation from the absolute terms of the agreement causes a failure of performance. As Mr. Justice Shaw said in Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 541, 556, 150 Pac. 769, 775:

"The definition of 'substantial performance' is difficult to give in general terms. It is usually a question to be determined in each case with reference to the existing facts and circumstances."

In the same opinion quotation is made from 2 Elliott on Contracts, § 1607, in which the learned text-writer uses the following language:

"A substantial performance must be established, in order to entitle the party claiming the benefit of the contract to recover; but this does not mean a literal compliance as to the details that are unimportant. There must be no willful or intentional departure, and the defects of performance must not pervade the whole, or be so essential as substantially to defeat the object which the parties intend to accomplish. Whether, in any case, such defects or omissions are substantial, or merely unimportant mistakes that have been or may be corrected, is generally a question of fact."

The contract itself was pleaded, and the complaint contained averments that the owners at all times were familiar with the work; and allegations amounting to a pleading of acceptance by them. The contract gave the architect power, in his discretion, to order any imperfect work re-executed and to demand that proper be substituted for improper material. Respondent contends, and we think correctly, that, by failure of appellants to demand any re-execution of the work or change in materials, the departures from the strict performance of the work according to the very letter of the specifications were waived, and that the case is governed by the rule announced in City Street Improvement Co. v. Marysville, 155 Cal. 419, 101 Pac. 308, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317; American-Hawaiian Engineering, etc., Co. v. Butler, 165 Cal. 497, 133 Pac. 280, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 44; Connell v. Higgins, supra; and similar cases. This seems to have been the view of the learned judge of the superior court whose opinion in this case, which covers all of the serious points of controversy, we quote as follows:

"The particulars in which substantial objection is made to the claim of plaintiff for payment for plastering done by him are:

"1. That the finish coat was not 'well trowelled to give a good, smooth, hard, straight, and uniform surface,' as required by the specifications. Mr. Weiland says that no such objection can properly be taken to the work, and I would dispose of it upon this ground alone. If the objection was otherwise good, it would fail in this case from the fact that the plaintiff was greatly rushed by the defendants in the performance of the work and from the further fact that, if any such defects existed, they were plainly apparent to the defendants and should have been called to the attention of the plaintiff while he was doing the work and when he could have readily and inexpensively corrected them.

"2. That the surfaces were not made 'straight, true and smooth, and all angles worked plumb' as required for the 'scratch coat,' and that the 'brown coat' was not 'floated on true and level.' It is true that the finished job shows beam surfaces out of level, corners not sharp, and angles not clean cut and true, in many places throughout the job. This I deem excused, from the fact that the work was hurried, that the plasterer was required by the defendants to place successive coats before prior ones were dry, and by the further fact that these uneven conditions were largely caused by the way in which the lathing was done by another contractor; the work done by plaintiff having to be placed on such irregular lathing. These imperfections, which are not substantial, were plainly in view of defendants while plaintiff was doing his work and should have then been called to his attention.

"3. That the contract provided that the 'scratch coat' should be 'properly scratched and to extend to the floor' and that it is admitted that it was not carried entirely to the floor, but only just below the top of the baseboard. It came within about five inches from the floor. This space was filled in by the 'brown coat,' and defendants afterwards placed the baseboards over this work, and entered upon the use of the building. It would seem that this omission was of no practical injury to defendants. Mr. Wieland stated that he did not 'deem it a matter of any importance.' Defendants, by their conduct, seem to have so regarded it at the time. I feel that I can justly announce a like conclusion. Counsel for defendants cites the omission in this particular as a willful departure from the contract, which because it was willful was substantial. I do not so view it. Plaintiff did the work in plain view of the defendants, and in that particular, I think, with entire good faith, offered it as a compliance with the contract. Defendants saw the work as offered and with every opportunity to object and demand a different execution made no objection and permitted plaintiff to go ahead and finish the work as he did. I think they have waived any objection they might have made on this score, and that they accepted the work as offered. With reference to the foregoing objections of defendant, it should be recalled that they had many representatives constantly on and about the work. Mr. Mathews, one of the owners of the building, was constructing it. Mr. Herold, the supervising architect, was also a co-owner. In addition they also employed a superintendent, Mr. Basler, who was in constant attendance on the work at all the times at which plaintiff was employed.

"The contract between the parties provided:

"'Improper Work. Should any of the work be, in the opinion of the architect, executed with improper materials or workmanship, the contractor will, when required by the architect, during the progress of the work forthwith re-execute the same and substitute proper materials and workmanship; and in case of default of the contractor in so doing within five days after being notified, the owner is to have full power to employ other persons to re-execute the work, and the cost thereof is to be borne by the contractor.'

"In view of this provision, the constant attendance of defendants upon the work, and the conspicuous character of the defects complained of and the ease with which they might have been remedied, such small imperfections should be considered as having been waived.

"4. It is claimed that the mixture as prepared and applied was deficient in plaster; that it contained too great a proportion of sand. This I have always regarded as practically the only issue in the case. During the trial the impression was made on me, and apparently on counsel for defendants, that the mixture was to be what is known as one and one-half to one for the 'scratch coat' and two to one for the 'brown coat,' and much argument has been had upon that assumption.

"This impression seems to have been entirely mistaken. The specifications do not directly provide the proportions of sand to plaster. What they do provide is this:

"The contractor must carefully observe all directions and precautions on the printed instructions from the manufacturers relating to the different materials used, and comply strictly with them in the execution of the work.'

"During the trial defendants introduced in evidence a circular of the manufacturers of the plaster used which purported to give the directions referred to in the specifications, and which Mr. Herold testified did give such directions. This was 'Defendants' Exhibit 9.' It provides, under the heading 'Proportion for Mixing':

"Scratch coat, * * * 12 shovels sand to sack of 100 lbs.'

"Brown coat, wire lath, 20 shovels sand to sack of 100 lbs.'

"These proportions at the trial were assumed to produce a 'two to one mixture.'

"Mr. Wieland produced a circular which contained different instructions, and testified that if that circular was the one applicable to this case, if it was followed that the plaster on the walls should give a composite analysis of 1.90 to 1. He analyzed many samples and found that they averaged about 2.26 to 1, which he said was distinctly a poorer mixture than 1.90 to 1. But the circular produced by him was not the one according to which the plaster was to have been mixed. It was to have been mixed according to the terms of the circular marked 'Defts. Ex. 9.' If mixed according to this formula, a composite sample of the plaster on the wall should have analyzed 2.5 to 1. This, of course, would be a poorer plaster than that which plaintiff actually applied, which was according to Mr. Wieland 2.26 to 1. So the plaster, instead of being poorer than required by the specifications, was considerably richer.

"With the settlement of this question, all my doubts in this case vanish. I have withheld decision and reopened the case because of a doubt as to whether the plastering not only in the richness of its proportions, but otherwise, was a good, practical, durable job. I feared that it was soft and crumbly, that it would not give good service and would at an early date have to be expensively renewed. I wanted to know, before requiring the defendants to pay for this work, that it was a good average commercial job from which they could get a long and valuable use. From Mr. Wieland's testimony, I am now satisfied on this point.

"After the fullest investigation, Mr. Wieland said it was much better than the average in quality and workmanship, that it was free from shrinkage cracks and it was well put on, that it was a substantial and durable job, that it was far above the average, and he concluded by saying that he felt conscientious in saying that the job was a good one. I adopt his experienced and disinterested views, and adjudge it to be such."

Without entering upon an extended discussion of the testimony on that subject, it is sufficient to say that it supports the findings against the counterclaim of defendants.

No other matters require analysis, as the specifications of alleged error in the rulings of the court were based upon the same theories of defendants that have been discussed above.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ROLLINS. (Cr. 2218.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 24, 1919.)

1. JURY ⇨108—COMPETENCY OF JURORS—CHALLENGES.

Under Pen. Code, § 1074, subd. 8, prosecuting attorney in homicide case may challenge jurors who would in no case agree to verdict carrying death penalty, but would concur in verdict which assessed imprisonment for life, despite section 190, which provides that every person guilty of murder in first degree shall suffer death, or confinement, at discretion of jury.

2. HOMICIDE ⇨354—MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE—PUNISHMENT.

Under Pen. Code, § 190, a verdict of guilt of murder in first degree without any express provision as to penalty requires imposition of death penalty.

3. JURY ⇨84—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CHALLENGE OF JURORS—RELIGIOUS WORSHIP.

Pen. Code, § 1074, subd. 8, prescribing grounds of challenge for implied bias, is not violative of Const. art. 1, § 4, which provides that no person shall be rendered incompetent as a juror on account of religious belief, law leaving matter of competency to legal sanctions, or, at least, to considerations independent of religious sentiments or convictions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Clarence Rollins was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. T. B. Warne, of Sonora, and J. B. Zimdars, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and J. Charles Jones, of Sacramento, for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree for the unlawful killing on July 9, 1918, of one Charles G. Allen, and sentenced to death. This is an appeal by him from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

No question of insufficiency of evidence is presented. Admittedly the evidence conclusively shows that defendant and a companion named Rogers, went to the house occupied by deceased, which was some two or three miles from Knight's Ferry, in pursuance of a plan to there commit the crime of robbery, and that there, in the perpetration of the robbery, they brutally killed the deceased.

[1, 2] The only point made on the appeal is that the trial court erred in allowing challenges interposed by the district attorney to several jurors under subdivision 8 of section 1074 of the Penal Code, which provides as follows:

"If the offense charged be punishable with death, the entertaining of such conscientious opinions as would preclude his finding the defendant guilty; in which case he must neither be permitted nor compelled to serve as a juror."

There were several jurors excused by the trial court on challenge by the district attorney on this ground. As to all of them it was clear from their answers to questions on their examination that in no case would they agree to a verdict of guilt carrying the death penalty. As to each of them it may be assumed that the examination showed that he or she would concur in a verdict of guilt which assessed the punishment at imprisonment for life. Our law providing that "every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the same" (section 190, Pen. Code), it is claimed that these jurors were not the subjects of challenge under subdivision 8, § 1074, Penal Code, the theory being that, inasmuch as his opinion would not preclude any of them from finding a verdict of guilty, provided the jury would concur in the exercise of the discretionary power to assess the penalty at imprisonment for life, such opinion would not "preclude his finding the defendant guilty." We do not find that this precise point in regard to the construction of subdivision 8 of section 1074 has ever before been expressly made, but certainly it is opposed to the general understanding of the meaning of the provision and the universal practice thereunder. It has heretofore always been thought that the provision means that, if the offense "be punishable by death," as is true of the offense of murder in the first degree notwithstanding that it is also punishable in the discretion of the jury in the particular case by imprisonment for life, the entertaining by a juror of such conscientious opinions relative to capital punishment as would preclude his rendering in any case a verdict carrying the death penalty brings him within its scope, and requires the allowance of a challenge interposed to his serving. See particularly People v. Ah Chung, 54 Cal. 398; People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 535, 66 Pac. 794; People v. Cebulla, 137 Cal. 314, 317, 70 Pac. 181. We have no doubt that this is the meaning and proper construction of the provision. The clear object of the provision is to accomplish the exclusion from the jury in such a case of any one whose conscientious opinion as to capital punishment would not permit him to concur in a verdict of guilty which entailed the death penalty—in other words, would not permit him to act as the law contemplates he should act, free to render any verdict that the circumstances of the case call for, regardless of the effect of such verdict. Murder in the first degree is punishable by death unless the jury sees fit to affirmatively assess the penalty at imprisonment for life. A verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, without any express provision as to penalty, requires the imposition of the death penalty. It has several times been held that the discretion given to the jury to provide for life imprisonment in such a case is not an arbitrary discretion to be exercised without regard to the circumstances of the particular case, but only where it appears to the jury that there is some circumstance that warrants or justifies the imposition of the lesser punishment. Of course, the conclusion of the jury on such a matter is final, but the provision under discussion contemplates that the state shall have jurors who are not so bound by conscientious opinions as to capital punishment that they will be unable to act as the circumstances of the case demand in view of the law.

[3] It is further claimed that subdivision 8 of section 1074 of the Penal Code, a section prescribing grounds of challenge for implied bias, is violative of section 4 of article 1 of our state Constitution, which, after providing that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be guaranteed in this state, provides:

"And no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this state."

This also appears to be a new contention in this state. No authority is cited in its support, and we see no merit in the claim. All that the provision quoted means is that a person called as witness or juror "is competent without any respect to his religious sentiments or convictions; the law leaving this matter of competency to legal sanctions, or, at least, to considerations independent of religious sentiments or convictions." Fuller v. Fuller, 17 Cal. 605, 612. In other words, he may not be debarred as a witness or juror because of his religious faith, and that element must be disregarded in determining his "competency." Section 1074, Penal Code, has nothing whatever to do with any question of "competency" of jurors, a matter covered by sections 198 and 199, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 1046, Penal Code. That section prescribes grounds of challenge for implied bias, matters going to the ability of the juror, regardless of his competency to act as a juror generally, to fairly and impartially try the particular case in accord with the law applicable thereto. Certainly the constitutional provision cannot be held to preclude legislation reasonably looking to the exclusion by challenge from a jury in any case of any person whose mind is in such condition from any cause whatever that he cannot try and determine the cause in accord with the law applicable thereto.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Rowan Hardin, of Sonora, U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and J. Charles Jones, of Sacramento, for the People.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment pronounced on a conviction of murder in the first degree, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The record is in all material respects the same as that in People v. Clarence Rollins (Cr. 2218) 179 Pac. 209, this day decided. The defendant and said Rollins were jointly engaged in the robbery of one Allen, and in the perpetration of that robbery killed Allen. The points made for reversal are the same as those made in that case. For the reasons stated in the opinion therein those points must be held to be without merit. Examination of the record discloses no ground for reversal.

1. EVIDENCE $\S$ 442(6) — PAROL EVIDENCE — INCOMPLETE CONTRACT.

Where a contract of sale was manifestly incomplete, oral evidence was admissible to show an express warranty of the goods, though it would have been inadmissible had the written contract been formal and complete on its face.

2. SALES $\S$ 287(6) — REJECTION OF MERCHANDISE—WAIVER.

A seller of goods, by repeated and persistent requests that buyers make further trials of goods, which they had stated did not conform to warranty as being unsuitable for their business, waived contract requirement that any rejection of merchandise be made within 10 days from receipt.

Action by the San Francisco Casing Company against Otto Mueller and another. From judgment for defendants on their cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. S. Norman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. E. Rode, of Oakland, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to recover a certain balance of an account for goods sold and delivered by plaintiff to the defendants. In the answer the sale and delivery of the goods is admitted, but under facts therein alleged the defendants deny liability, and in a cross-complaint they set forth a breach of warranty as to part of the goods, and demand an affirmative judgment in their favor. The trial court found in accordance with the allegations of the cross-complaint, and rendered a judgment in favor of the defendants.

[1] The particular item of the account which is the basis of this controversy arises from an order for sheep casings dated February 12, 1917. These casings were delivered March 28, 1917, and two days later the defendants in writing rejected them as unsatisfactory for the purpose for which they were bought. There is an abundance of evidence in the record that the casings were expressly warranted as suitable for defendants' business and sound and merchantable, and also that they did not comply with such warranty. Plaintiff claims that the contract for the sale of the sheep casings was in writing, and that oral evidence was inadmissible to show the express warranty. It does not seem to have made that objection in the trial court; nor does the rule here relied upon apply where, as here, the contract was manifestly incomplete. Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal.

251, 31 Pac. 109; Luitweiler Co. v. Ukiah Co., 16 Cal. App. 193, 116 Pac. 707, 712. That rule would be applicable, of course, where the transaction was evidenced by formal written contract complete on its face, as was the case in Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby Co., 153 Cal. 585, 594, 96 Pac. 319.

[2] Passing to the only other point urged by appellant, it appears that while the defendants immediately upon the receipt of the goods notified the plaintiff in effect that the casings were unsuitable for their business, and not in accordance with plaintiff's representations, still defendants did not finally reject them within the ten days specified for rejection of goods found unsatisfactory; and upon this fact appellant bases an argument that defendants did not act promptly or offer to return everything of value received by them. We think the answer to this position is that the evidence received by the court shows that plaintiff waived the provision of the contract requiring any rejection of merchandise to be made within ten days from its receipt, by repeated and persistent requests that the defendants make further trials. Under the circumstances of the case it appears that the defendants acted fairly, and took all necessary steps to entitle them to the relief demanded in the cross-complaint and granted by the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

RIDEOUT v. COVILLAUD et al. (Civ. 1900.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1919.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION $\S$ 115(1) — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to quiet title, evidence held sufficient to show acquisition of title by adverse possession for the requisite period within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 318, 323, 325, as to adverse possession based upon a written instrument.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION $\S$ 20 — "CULTIVATION" — "IMPROVEMENT" — "USUALLY CULTIVATED OR IMPROVED."

Although a vacant lot was not inclosed, a grading and filling of the lot, while not a "cultivation," was an "improvement" of the same within Code Civ. Proc. § 323, as to adverse possession based upon a written instrument; the requirement of the statute that the land be "usually cultivated or improved" meaning that it should be done in the manner usual in case of similar property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Cultivation; Improvement; Second Series, Usually Cultivated or Improved.]

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION — 117—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY TO SUPPORT.

Although there was no specific finding that a lot was possessed and occupied by plaintiff for 5 years, a finding that it was possessed and occupied for more than 20 years was sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff, under Code Civ. Proc. § 318, and the proviso to section 325, providing that one not seised or possessed of land shall bring suit within 5 years.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene G. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Phebe M. Rideout against Charles Covillaud, Mary Helen McLean, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants Mary Helen McLean and others appeal. Affirmed.

Kipp & Kipp, of Marysville, for appellants.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought to quiet title to one-half of a certain block of land in the city of Marysville.

In addition to the seven appealing defendants, a large number of persons and the city of Marysville were joined as defendants, some of whom appeared and filed disclaimers; the others, who were served with summons by publication, made no appearance and their defaults were duly entered.

The land in controversy was a portion of a Spanish land grant to John A. Sutter, which grant was confirmed by a patent issued to him by the United States. The property was platted in 1850 and divided into streets and lots. The appeal is concerned only with lot 4, there being no contest as to the remainder of the half block.

On January 18, 1850, John A. Sutter conveyed the land included within said grant to Charles Covillaud, Jose Manuel Ramirez, Theodore Sicard, and John Sampson, and, on February 19th of the same year, Theodore Sicard conveyed said land to Gabriel A. Swezy and Robert B. Buchanan. Other deeds introduced in evidence it will not be necessary to detail. Robert B. Buchanan died in 1855, his estate was administered, and, on the 2d of February, 1858, a final decree of distribution conveyed all his right, title, and interest in and to said lot 4 to his widow, Minerva E. Haun, and his daughter, Minna E. Buchanan, share and share alike. All the appellants except Mary Helen McLean are descendants of Robert B. Buchanan. The interest claimed by Mary Helen McLean came to her from her mother, Mary E. McLean, who acquired the interest in 1860.

The complaint was filed July 20, 1916. Plaintiff claims title by reason of the actual, exclusive, and adverse possession of herself and her predecessors in interest continuously for more than 20 years and the payment by her and her predecessors in interest of all taxes levied on the property during the 5 years preceding the filing of the complaint.

Plaintiff offered in evidence a tax deed, dated May 15, 1880, purporting to convey to J. H. Krause said lot 4. It was stated by counsel that the offer was "for the purpose of laying a foundation for color of title, to be afterwards supplemented by the actual occupation and possession and improvement of the property." Over objection of the defendants, the court admitted the deed for the purpose stated. It is not contended by plaintiff that this deed conveyed title. On May 20, 1880, J. H. Krause conveyed said lot to P. C. Slattery, who thereafter died and his interest descended to his widow, Mary Jane Slattery. The lot was conveyed by her to the city of Marysville, in January, 1902, and on February 20, 1904, the city of Marysville conveyed it to N. D. Rideout, who died in 1908, and his interest became vested in his widow, the plaintiff in this action.

The testimony showed that, from 1890 to 1898, inclusive, said lot 4 was assessed to P. C. Slattery, and the taxes marked "paid" on the assessment roll each and every year before they became delinquent. For the years 1899, 1900, and 1901, said lot was assessed to the estate of P. C. Slattery and the taxes similarly marked "paid." For the years 1902 and 1903 (during which time the lot was owned by the city of Marysville), there was no assessment. From 1904 to the date of the trial (February 27, 1917), the property was assessed in succession to N. D. Rideout, the estate of N. D. Rideout and Phebe M. Rideout, and the taxes were paid.

Lot 4 and the remainder of the half block (lots 1, 2, and 3) originally constituted a slough. In 1898 and 1899 the city of Marysville filled in the streets and alleys, leaving the half block practically a water hole, and the board of health later condemned the property as a nuisance. In 1901 the city filled lots 1, 2, and 3 with sand up to the grade of the streets. Lot 4 was used as a dump; brush, tree trimmings, and stable manure being deposited thereon. Mrs. Slattery partially filled the lot, and the city allowed her $85 or $100 for that work, and, in 1901, 1902, or 1903, the city filled the lot with sand to the depth of three or four feet, it was brought up to grade, and converted from a sump or cesspool into a residence lot. In 1914, while the lot belonged to Mrs. Rideout, there was further filling and grading of the half block at a cost of $2,669, the east end of lot 4 being the lowest portion. In 1916 and prior thereto, sidewalks were constructed along the whole of the half block on the west side, and there is a dirt sidewalk along the north line of lot 4. At the date of the trial the lot had not been completely filled in.

[1] To our minds it is very clear that nothing further than the reproduction of the foregoing statement is required to be said herein to show that the decree quieting plaintiff's title to the parcel of land in controversy is impreguably founded, and therefore beyond impeachment. While the plaintiff does not rely upon and has not shown a good record title, it is nevertheless unquestionably true, that from May 20, 1880, at which time one Krause, having previously obtained a purported but defective tax title to the lot, conveyed the property to P. C. Slattery, down to the time of the commencement of the action—July 20, 1916—the plaintiff and her predecessors in interest openly and notoriously held possession of the lot under color of title, during which period of time, except when the title was in the city of Marysville, they paid all the taxes thereon and improved the same. It is to be added that during that period of time, so far as the record discloses, none of the appealing defendants or their predecessors ever made any effort judicially to assert their title thereto, or, so far as we know, made any other claim to title until this action was brought.

Section 323 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, to constitute an adverse possession by any person claiming a title founded on a written instrument, land is deemed to have been possessed and occupied when it has been usually cultivated or improved.

[2] In view of the undisputed evidence, of which the above statement involves a correct epitome, it is mere supererogation to say that the plaintiff's case fully meets the requisites prescribed by said section of adverse possession founded on an instrument in writing. It is true that the lot was not shown to have been inclosed or "cultivated," but it is undisputed that it had been improved by the plaintiff and her predecessors, and this was sufficient under said section. Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 385, 108 Pac. 278, 279. In that case, it is said by Mr. Justice Sloss:

"The requirement of the statute that the land be 'usually cultivated or improved' means that it should be cultivated or improved in the manner or to the extent usual in the case of similar property. Allen v. McKay, 120 Cal. 332, 52 Pac. 828. If so improved, it is not necessary that it should be either cultivated or inclosed. Daniels v. Gualala M. Co., 77 Cal. 300, 19 Pac. 519."

Appellants, however, attack the finding that—

"At the date of the commencement of this action plaintiff by herself and her predecessors in interest had been, she ever since has been, and now is, in the actual, exclusive, and adverse possession of all of said real property herein described continuously for more than 20 years prior and up to the filing of the complaint in this action, claiming during all of said times to own the same in fee against the whole world."

[3] We think, as above stated, that there is no ground for successfully disputing the proposition that the evidence shows that for nearly 40 years the plaintiff and her predecessors in interest have been in unchallenged possession and occupancy of the property; but, conceding that the evidence does not support the finding of 20 years of possession and occupancy by the plaintiff and her predecessors, it cannot for a moment be doubted that such possession and occupancy were shown to have been had for over a period of 5 years, during which time none of the appealing defendants or their predecessors in interest or grantors made any claim of title or right of possession to the lot. While there is no specific finding that the lot was possessed and occupied by the plaintiff for a period of 5 years, the finding that it was so possessed and occupied for the period of more than 20 years is sufficient to support the judgment; there being, as stated, evidence clearly supporting a finding of five years' adverse possession. The lesser period is obviously included in the greater period specifically found.

Thus it is very clear that the evidence discloses the fulfillment of all the requisites of section 323 and of the proviso of section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure essential to the establishment of title to land by adverse possession based upon a written instrument.

It is further to be suggested that, so far as we are advised by the present record, the defendants, long prior to the commencement of this action, had lost their right of action to recover the property or the possession thereof by the bar of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 318; Beckett v. City of Petaluma, 171 Cal. 309, 153 Pac. 20), and in such case, of course, their claim of title as set up in their answer in resistance to the like claim of plaintiff is likewise legally nonenforceable.

The judgment is affirmed.

BIBB v. BIBB. (Civ. 2855.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 20, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 37(21)—“DESERTION”—REFUSAL TO FOLLOW HUSBAND TO NEW ABODE.

Under Civ. Code, § 103, providing that the husband may choose any reasonable place of living, and that if the wife does not conform thereto it is “desertion,” the husband’s right is not entirely arbitrary, but he must provide and establish a suitable home for his wife ere he can insist that she follow him.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Desertion.]

2. DIVORCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 37(21)—DESERTION.

It is only when the husband has established a new domicile which is a reasonable place of living and in good faith has offered the new abode to his wife, and she, without sufficient cause, has refused to comply with his selection, that a cause of action for desertion arises.

3. DIVORCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 37(21)—DESERTION—ANTICIPATORY BREACH.

Under Civ. Code, § 103, as to divorce for desertion because of wife’s failure to follow husband to new abode, it is not enough that, prior to his establishing the new domicile, she informs him she will not follow him.

4. DIVORCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 109—DESERTION—CHANGE OF ABODE BY HUSBAND.

Where husband seeks divorce because of wife’s refusal to follow him to a new abode, he must affirmatively show that the new domicile selected by him is a reasonable place of abode, since no presumption in that respect is indulged in his favor.

5. DIVORCE $\Leftrightarrow$ 133(1)—DESERTION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to support decree for divorce to husband based on wife’s desertion, in failing to follow to a new abode under Civ. Code, § 103.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Suit by Ida J. Bibb against Robert L. Bibb, in which defendant cross-complained. From decree for defendant and denial of new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

William Lewis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiff sued defendant for a divorce on the ground of desertion alleged to have commenced February 9, 1913. Defendant answered, and in a cross-complaint containing two counts charged, in the first count, desertion, and in the second certain acts of alleged cruelty. The court adjudged defendant entitled to a divorce upon the ground of desertion as charged in the first count of his cross-complaint. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied. She appeals from that order and likewise from the interlocutory decree adjudging defendant entitled to the divorce.

In his cross-complaint respondent charges appellant’s desertion as follows:

“On or about February, 1911, at the city of Los Angeles, * * * plaintiff willfully and voluntarily separated herself from the cross-complainant herein, with the intent to desert said cross-complainant, and said plaintiff did at that time, in the city and county of Los Angeles, refuse to remove from the then home of plaintiff and cross-complainant at New Jersey street, to the city of Hollywood, where this cross-complainant had provided a suitable home for said plaintiff, and said cross-complainant at said time informed the plaintiff that he had secured a position as the Hollywood representative of the Union Ice Company, and that the position required that he should reside in the city of Hollywood for convenience in attending to said work.”

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to support the decree adjudging respondent entitled to a divorce on account of the desertion thus charged against her in the cross-complaint.

Though the evidence is of an unsatisfactory and fragmentary character, particularly with respect to the vital facts essential to a cause of action for the desertion as charged in the cross-complaint, the controlling facts, stated most favorably to respondent, are substantially as follows: On January 1, 1911, he went to work for the Union Ice Company at its plant in Hollywood, a suburb of the city of Los Angeles, and now an integral part of that municipality. At that time he and his wife were living in Los Angeles at 1624 New Jersey street, Boyle Heights, whence, on April 12, 1911, she moved to 1705 East Sixty-Third street. When he took employment with the ice company he looked for a home in Hollywood. He testified, in substance, as follows:

“When I first went to Hollywood, I wanted her to go. I had my position there, and I looked for a house, and found a house, and I insisted that she go out there, and she refused to go; and she said we did not have enough money to keep house. She absolutely refused to live with me at that time, and she did two or three days after that. She absolutely refused to go to Hollywood, not only at that time—some time in February, 1911—but two or three other times. When we went to Sixty-Third street (April 12, 1911), I insisted several times that she go to Hollywood, and behave herself, and that I would give her a good home, and she refused it.” On February 9, 1913, a stormy interview ensued between the spouses, evoked by the arrival of respondent’s sister from the East. This, says respondent, was the straw that broke the camel’s back. He testified that that evening “she begged me not to leave her, and begged me to take her to Hollywood; that she would be good—but it was too late. I had offered to take her there lots of times before, and she would not go.”

It seems that, notwithstanding appellant's refusal to go with him to Hollywood, he, nevertheless, for an indefinite period immediately following the commencement of the desertion of which he complains, spent his nights with his wife, at the house occupied by her in Boyle Heights, and later, for an indefinite period, he spent his Saturday nights and Sundays with her. As to this phase of the case he testified, in substance, as follows:

“When I first went to Hollywood, I came home every day. When my wife left the house on New Jersey street, for the house on Sixty-Third street, I went out once a week. I would usually go out there Saturday nights after I got through with my work. I stayed with her during that time on account of the little girl”—referring to their adopted child. “I stopped going out there in February, 1913, but I had had nothing to do with her before. I did not have any relations with her for probably nearly a year. I don't believe I ever had any marital relations with Mrs. Bibb, or lived with her, after she left Boyle Heights. I don't remember.”

There are no findings of fact. The interlocutory decree recites that the parties waived written findings, and adjudges that—

“The defendant, Robert L. Bibb, is entitled to a divorce from the plaintiff, Ida J. Bibb, upon the ground of desertion.”

From this the only legitimate inference is that the court found against the charges of cruelty set forth in the second count of respondent's cross-complaint. So that the decree must find support, if any, in the charge of desertion, as alleged in the first count of respondent's cross-complaint, which is based upon section 103 of the Civil Code, whereby it is provided that—

“The husband may choose any reasonable place * * * of living, and if the wife does not conform thereto it is desertion.”

[1-4] Ordinarily the husband may choose the family domicile at pleasure. It is the wife's duty to follow his fortunes—“to go whither he goeth”—and abide in that place where it is most convenient for him to enjoy her society, and where he is able and willing to make provision for her support and that of his family. But his right to determine the family abode does not give him an entirely arbitrary power; it is not without its limitations. He is bound to provide and establish a suitable home for his wife, ere he can insist that she follow him. The law has limited his right to change the family abode. It is so limited that he can only “choose any reasonable place of living.” Civ. Code, § 103. It is when, and only when, he has so chosen and established the new domicile, and, in good faith has made offer of the new abode to her, and she, without a sufficient cause, has refused to comply with his selection, that a cause of action for desertion arises. Vosburg v. Vosburg, 136 Cal. 195, 68 Pac. 694. See, also, Hagle v. Hagle, 74 Cal. 608, 16 Pac. 518; Keesey v. Keesey, 160 Cal. 727, 117 Pac. 1054; Phelan v. Phelan, 35 Ill. App. 511, affirmed in 135 Ill. 445, 25 N. E. 751; King v. King, 122 La. 582, 47 South. 909; Heaton v. Heaton, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 218. It is not enough that, prior to his establishing the new domicile, she informs him she will not follow him. For, perchance, he may accede to her wishes and not make the change; or she, perhaps, when the new domicile shall have been actually chosen and established, may exercise a woman's privilege and change her mind. The law does not countenance a divorce for a mere disagreement as to whether a contemplated change shall or shall not be made. Her duty is to follow him if and when he actually moves to a new, but suitable, domicile. Until he moves she cannot follow. Nor is she in default until, having established a new domicile, he has offered it to her and requested her to follow him. Until such offer and request be made, and she thereby informed as to the location and character of the place chosen by the husband, she cannot know whether it is a “reasonable place of living.” Until she has been afforded a reasonable opportunity for knowing whether the abode chosen by the husband is a “reasonable place of living,” she is under no obligation to follow him. Says the court in the Vosburg Case:

“She was not guilty of desertion until he had made the choice, offered it to her, and she, without sufficient cause, had refused to comply with his selection.” 136 Cal. 204, 68 Pac. 697.

The husband, seeking a divorce from his wife because of her refusal to follow him to a new abode must show that the new domicile selected by him is a reasonable place of abode. No presumption in that regard can be indulged in his favor. It is incumbent upon him to show affirmatively, not only that he has chosen a particular abode and offered it to his wife, but that the domicile so chosen is a reasonable place for the family abode. By affirmative evidence, he must show its character and its suitability. Kenniston v. Kenniston, 6 Cal. App. 657, 92 Pac. 1037. Finally, if it be his intention to visit upon his wife the penalty of her failure to follow him to the new domicile, he should present to her, in plain and unequivocal terms, the alternative of a compliance with his wishes or a surrender of all her conjugal rights. Hardenbergh v. Hardenbergh, 14 Cal. 654. Unless such alternative be so presented to her, it cannot readily be ascertained whether or not she harbors an actual intent to desert him; and the actual intent to desert is as much an essential ingredient of the de-section as is the voluntary separation itself. Civ. Code, § 95; Hardenbergh v. Hardenbergh, supra. Were this not the rule, the marital relation—instituted for the good of society, and not to be dissolved save for the gravest causes—might easily be subject to dissolution by the husband's guile and crafty duplicity.

[5] Viewing the facts disclosed by the record in the light of these principles, we are constrained to hold that the trial court erred in granting a divorce to respondent. There is no evidence that he ever chose for himself and family an abode in Hollywood. True, he says he "looked for" and "found" a house in Hollywood. But there is no evidence that he ever bought or rented or even tentatively bargained for the house that he "found." On the contrary, he himself testifies that for some time after he went to Hollywood to work for the ice company he returned to and slept at his house in Boyle Heights, where his wife and adopted daughter lived; and later, after appellant with their adopted daughter moved to the Sixty-Third street house, he returned thereto every Saturday, remaining until the following Monday morning, and frequently he spent a night with his wife during the middle of the week. Doubtless it may be inferred from some of the facts in evidence that for some part of the period during which he claimed his wife was guilty of willful desertion he slept in Hollywood; but there is nothing to show that, while in Hollywood, he did not occupy a single bed in a single room suitable for his own use but wholly insufficient as a family abode for himself, wife, and adopted daughter. The evidence fails utterly to show that he ever actually established a matrimonial domicile in Hollywood, or that he ever there chose a house that he could rightfully expect his wife and daughter to occupy. There was no evidence as to the character of the house in Hollywood which he says he "found," though the burden is upon him to show that he had chosen a reasonably suitable place of abode. In the absence of evidence, no presumption can be indulged that the house which he says he "found" was a "reasonable place of living." There is no evidence that he ever offered her, as a home for the family, the house which he says he "found." She testifies they went out one afternoon to Hollywood and looked for a house, but could not find any that he felt he could afford to pay for. She also testifies that he never informed her that he had rented a place in Hollywood. Her testimony that he never so informed her is contradicted; at any rate, it is not contradicted by evidence printed in any of the briefs, though the appeal was taken under the so-called alternative method. There is no evidence whatever that he ever offered appellant any particular abode in Hollywood, and unless such an offer were made she could not possibly know whether or not the place "found" by him was a "reasonable place of living." Furthermore, assuming that for a year or more immediately prior to the action respondent had not cohabited with his wife, and conceding that during such year or more of conjugal abstinence she could be guilty of willful desertion for which he would have a cause of action for divorce, nevertheless, for an indeterminate but considerable time immediately subsequent to appellant's alleged declination to follow respondent to Hollywood, they continued their customary matrimonial cohabitation as man and wife at the old abode in Boyle Heights, where, for some time following her alleged refusal to go to Hollywood, the husband daily returned to their home and cohabited with her. By this equivocal conduct he failed to present to her, clearly and definitely, the alternative of a compliance with his will to move to Hollywood, or be deemed guilty of willful desertion.

Judgment and order reversed.

KRAMER v. BOARD OF POLICE COM'RS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 2276.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 20, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐184(4)—POLICE—VOLUNTARY RESIGNATION OF OFFICER.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 1569, 1570, defining such duress or menace as will avoid an agreement, resignation of police officer from police department of city and county of San Francisco held voluntary, and not induced by either duress or coercion, so that its acceptance by board of police commissioners worked a final severance of the officer's relation with the department.

2. MANDAMUS ⇐143(2)—REINSTATEMENT OF POLICE OFFICER—LACHES.

Petition of police officer for writ of mandate to compel reinstatement on ground that his resignation from department had been procured by duress not brought for nearly five years, affirmatively showing delays of two and three years on his part in moving police department to have resignation set aside, held barred by laches.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandate by John H. Kramer against the Board of Police Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco and others. From judgment directing issuance of the writ, defendants appeal. Reversed.

George Lull, City Atty., and Harry G. McKannay, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edward Lande and Harry Gottesfeld, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment directing the issuance of a writ of mandate requiring the defendants to reinstate the plaintiff and respondent herein as a police officer. The judgment followed an order overruling the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's amended petition for such writ, the defendants declining to answer.

The facts, as presented in the plaintiff's petition, are as follows: Prior to the month of August, 1906, the plaintiff was a regularly appointed and acting police officer of the city and county of San Francisco, but in that month, owing to conditions created by the earthquake and fire of that year, the board of police commissioners of said city and county suggested to certain members of the police department, the plaintiff being among the number, that they apply for leave of absence from the department without pay for the purpose of engaging temporarily in business, the object of this suggestion being to work a temporary reduction in the cost of maintaining the police department during the critical period following the earthquake and fire. Acting upon this suggestion, the plaintiff applied for a leave of absence for three months, which was granted him, and it was thereupon stated and represented to him that if he should engage in business and apply for additional leave of absence the said board of police commissioners would extend his leave for the further time of one year. The plaintiff thereupon purchased a business, paying therefor and for a stock of merchandise therein, a sum totaling $2,300, and then engaged in said business. Within the period of the plaintiff's three months' leave of absence, however, the board of police commissioners, through its acting president, directed the chief of police to forthwith order back to duty all police officers then absent on leaves of absence, and accordingly and within the period of his three months' leave of absence the plaintiff was ordered to return to duty forthwith. This order the plaintiff was unable to comply with without abandoning and neglecting his said business and losing the money he had invested therein, and he so informed the said chief of police, whereupon he was granted a suspension of the order for a time, during which he diligently attempted to dispose of his business, but was unable to do so. Shortly before January 1, 1907, the plaintiff was ordered by the chief of police, acting under the instruction of the police commissioners, to return to duty as a police officer on or before January 1, 1907, or resign from the police department. The plaintiff, protesting against this order on December 31, 1906, presented his resignation from the police department to the board of police commissioners, which board then and there adopted an order and resolution accepting the same.

Plaintiff asserts that his course in so doing was compelled by the fact that he could not dispose of his said business at that time without suffering great and irreparable loss, and that having been induced to seek a leave of absence and to engage in business upon the assurance of the board of police commissioners that his leave of absence would be extended for an additional year in the event of his engaging in such business, his resignation was thus not voluntary, but was induced by duress and coercion.

On November 27, 1908, the plaintiff applied for reinstatement as a police officer, setting forth in his application the foregoing facts. The board of police commissioners denied his said application without a hearing. On October 26, 1911, the plaintiff appeared before the board of police commissioners, and then and there demanded that his application, filed on November 27, 1908, should be heard, and that he be permitted to offer evidence in support thereof, and the said board of police commissioners did then consent to hear and did hear said application and the plaintiff's proofs in support thereof. At said hearing no proofs to the contrary were presented, but the said board of police commissioners, after hearing the plaintiff's said proofs, took the matter of his application and of his proofs supporting the same under advisement until on or about November 23, 1911, when said board denied said application upon the ground of plaintiff's laches in not demanding a hearing upon the same within three years from and after January 2, 1907, the date of acceptance of his resignation; and said board has ever since refused to further consider his said application on the merits, or to admit or restore plaintiff to his former position in the police department.

The trial court upon these averments ordered the writ of mandate to issue, and from such judgment or order this appeal has been taken.

[1] The main contention of the appellants is that the respondent's resignation from the police department was not induced by duress or coercion, but was voluntary, and hence that its acceptance severed finally the relation of the plaintiff to the police department.

We think this contention must be sustained. Conceding that upon the face of the averments of the plaintiff's petition he was treated unfairly by the action of the defendants in inducing him to believe that his leave of absence from the department would be extended for the additional period of one year, it cannot be said that the action of the board of police commissioners, in recalling him to duty before this latter period had expired was unlawful in view of the large discretion reposed in such bodies in respect to the proper management and conduct of the police department. In order for the action of the board of police commissioners in presenting to the plaintiff the alternative of either resigning from or returning to his post of duty in the police department to have savored of duress or coercion, such action must have been unlawful under the long accepted definitions of these terms. Bouvier's Law Dict., "Duress," "Coercion"; 14 Cyc. 1123, "Duress"; 11 Corpus Juris, 945, "Coercion." Our Civil Code, in defining such duress or menace as will avoid an agreement, embraces the element of unlawfulness in its definition of these terms. Civ. Code, §§ 1569, 1570.

In the case of State v. Ladeen, 104 Minn. 252, 116 N. W. 486, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1058, which involved a resignation from office, it was held that the coercion or duress which would render such resignation either void or voidable must be such as would exist where one by the unlawful conduct of another was induced to resign his office under circumstances which deprived him of his free will.

Measured by these definitions it must be concluded that the plaintiff's resignation from the police department was not induced by either duress or coercion, but that the same was voluntary, and hence, upon its acceptance by the board of police commissioners, worked a final severance of the relation of the plaintiff as a police officer with the police department of the city and county of San Francisco.

[2] But aside from these considerations the plaintiff's petition shows upon its face other and sufficient reasons why the writ which he sought should not have issued. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the plaintiff's resignation and the acceptance thereof by the board were for the reasons stated in said petition voidable, the plaintiff would have been bound, under well-settled principles, to take the necessary steps to avoid the same promptly upon the removal or cessation of the conditions out of which the duress or coercion claimed by him to have existed arose; in other words, as soon as the plaintiff had succeeded in disposing of the business in which, according to his petition, he had been induced to engage, he should have moved to have his resignation and its acceptance set aside; and since his petition affirmatively shows that he made no move in that direction for a period of nearly two years after his resignation had been presented and accepted, his petition should have shown reasons for his delay in action for a period far beyond the utmost limit of the leave of absence which he asserts himself to have been assured. His petition, however, is entirely silent upon this subject; and is not only so in so far as his first application for reinstatement is affected, but it is further devoid of any showing as to why, after the plaintiff's first application for reinstatement had been denied, without hearing, as he asserts, he waited a further period of nearly three years before applying for a hearing upon his said first application, for which further delay not only is there no reason shown in plaintiff's petition, but from the facts therein stated it affirmatively appears that whatever of duress or coercion had originally attended the presentation and acceptance of his resignation on January 2, 1907, such conditions had certainly ceased to exist when in November, 1908, he applied for reinstatement. His further delay until October, 1911, before taking any further action with relation to his application for reinstatement, is utterly unexplained. The affirmative record thus made by the plaintiff's own averments shows that a period lacking one month of being five years from the date of his alleged resignation from the police department intervened before the commencement of this proceeding, during the major portion of which time no impediment to its institution is shown to have existed. In addition to these deficiencies in the plaintiff's petition it may be further stated that no showing whatever is made that the position in the police department vacated by the plaintiff's resignation has not been long since filled, or that his reinstatement after so long a period has elapsed would not result either in ousting a successor, or in entailing the payment on the part of the municipality of two salaries for the same position. We think as to this latter point that upon the plaintiff's own affirmative showing, as well as by these deficiencies therein, he was debarred by laches from the remedy which he sought and obtained by the judgment and order for the issuance of the writ from which this appeal has been taken. Harby v. Board of Education, 2 Cal. App. 419, 83 Pac. 1081; Donovan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 32 Cal. App. 392, 163 Pac. 69.

AUENER v. NORMAN. (Civ. 2047.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 21, 1919.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION $\Leftrightarrow$ 21(2)—ADVICE OF COUNSEL — CONCEALMENT OF MATERIAL FACT.

Where defendant, in an action for malicious prosecution, concealed from his attorney a fact material to the question of plaintiff's probable guilt, a finding against his defense of advice of counsel was warranted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by August Auener against L. E. Norman. From a judgment for plaintiff and order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lamy & Putnam, of San Luis Obispo, for appellant.

A. B. Bigler, of Santa Maria, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action to recover damages for alleged malicious prosecution. The case was tried by the court without a jury.

It is alleged in the complaint that on or about the 26th day of June, 1914, within the county of Santa Barbara, said defendant caused a criminal complaint to be filed in the justice's court, charging plaintiff with the crime of forgery, which, according to the allegations of said criminal complaint, was that plaintiff did "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and fraudulently make and forge a certain telegram or telegraphic message," which "message" purports to have been signed by L. E. Norman, the defendant herein, and delivered to the Western Union Telegraph Company for transmission; that the same was uttered, published, passed, and sent by said company accordingly; all this with intent to prejudice, damage, and defraud the defendant herein, the complainant in that action; and, further, that this was done by the defendant here with malice, and without probable cause. That because of plaintiff's being arrested and imprisoned, and of the shock and nervous strain produced thereby, and the fact that the alleged facts and circumstances of said arrest and imprisonment had been published in certain newspapers and circulated accordingly, plaintiff's health and physical condition have been greatly impaired. Then follows a prayer for damages, actual and exemplary, and for attorney's fees.

The defendant, by his answer, admits the filing of the criminal complaint as aforesaid, the issuing of the warrant of arrest, the preliminary examination, and the dismissal of the proceeding; but denies that these things, or any of them, were done, or caused to be done, by him with malice, and without probable cause, and relies upon the following propositions as a complete defense here: (1) That he acted upon probable cause, (2) without malice, and (3) upon advice of an attorney.

The court found for the plaintiff, and assessed his actual damages at $500, and held that he was not entitled to any exemplary damages. Judgment was entered accordingly. There was a motion for a new trial, which was denied. This appeal is taken from both the judgment and said order.

The seventh, eighth, ninth, and twelfth findings of the trial court are challenged as not supported by the evidence. Finding No. 7 finds that the facts alleged were done maliciously, etc.; No. 8, that these were done without probable cause; No. 9, that plaintiff had been, and is now, paralyzed on the left side, etc., and that because of the actions of defendant, as aforesaid, plaintiff had "and does now suffer increased and greater physical pain and mental anguish, and as a result of said arrest and imprisonment plaintiff's health and physical condition have been greatly impaired"; and No. 12 is a finding that defendant did consult an attorney, who, after hearing defendant's statement of the case, advised him that there was probable cause to believe the plaintiff guilty of forgery; and finding further "that when defendant communicated with said J. F. Conkey (the attorney consulted by him) he did not state all the facts bearing on the case, of which he had knowledge, fairly or truthfully."

We have carefully examined the testimony as disclosed in the transcript. There was evidence on behalf of plaintiff showing that defendant had given plaintiff authority to use his name in ordering goods. This was denied by defendant.

Defendant says that he told his attorney all he knew about the case. His language is:

"I disclosed to him [Conkey] fairly and truthfully all the facts that were within my knowledge concerning the matter of the charge against Mr. Auener at that time, and before the filing of the criminal complaint."

On cross-examination, however, defendant testified that he did not remember telling his attorney "about signing for the express coming in my name, nor that I had gotten millinery out of parcels post at the post office addressed to me." This was a material fact, and appellant's failure to communicate it to his attorney justified the trial court in inferring actual malice and want of probable cause. There is other corroborative evidence. No other points raised need our consideration. We think, from an examination of the record presented to us, that there is ample evidence to support all of the findings here challenged.

The court having resolved the conflict in the evidence in favor of the plaintiff, it follows, as a matter of law, we think, that malice was present, and that defendant acted without probable cause.

The judgment and the order appealed from must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

AALWYN'S LAW INSTITUTE v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 2541.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 21, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 122(1) — PLEADING ORDINANCES.

In action to recover taxes paid, asserting the invalidity of certain ordinances, the court was justified in refusing the relief sought, where plaintiff did not comply with the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 459, that in pleading an ordinance must be set out in hæc verba or by reference to its title and the day of its passage; the complaint merely referring to such ordinances by number and asserting their adoption on a certain date.

2. JUDGMENT $\hookrightarrow$ 123(1)—DEFAULT—APPLICATION FOR JUDGMENT—RECOVERY OF TAX PAID.

Action to recover taxes paid, under Pol. Code, § 3819, while in the nature of an action for money had and received, is one based upon statute, and takes the place of the ordinary action of assumpsit for money had and received, and therefore does not come within the provisions of section 585, subd. 1, authorizing the clerk to enter judgment, but is controlled by subdivision 2, requiring upon default an application for the relief demanded, which implies more than a motion for judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Aalwyn's Law Institute against the City and County of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff was vacated and judgment rendered for defendant, and from the latter judgment and the order vacating the former judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 178 Pac. 966.

Arthur Crane, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George Lull, City Atty., of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to recover taxes paid under protest upon a tax levy alleged to be illegal and invalid. The action was commenced on May 27, 1911, and the amended complaint was filed January 8, 1915. A general demurrer to each cause of action was filed and overruled. Due notice of the order overruling the demurrer was given, and, defendant having failed to answer within the time allowed, its default was duly and regularly entered. Thereafter, upon request of plaintiff, the clerk of the court entered judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for the amount prayed for in the amended complaint. Notice of entry of judgment was thereupon duly served upon defendant. Defendant then moved to set aside the default and vacate the judgment. The judgment was vacated by the court, but the motion to set aside the default was denied. Thereafter the case was submitted upon the record. The court subsequently rendered judgment in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff appeals from this judgment, and also from the order vacating the former judgment entered by the clerk.

The questions presented upon this appeal are: First, whether or not the complaint states a cause of action upon which the court was bound to order judgment for plaintiff; and, second, whether or not the court erred in vacating the judgment entered by the clerk.

The litigation arose out of certain ordinances adopted by the city and county of San Francisco for the purpose of suspending chapter 1, article 3, section 11, of the charter of that city, which provisions contain a restriction upon the general grant of the taxing power to the municipality, known as the dollar limit, on the ground of "great necessity and emergency," as authorized by section 13 of the same article. Plaintiff alleged that the ordinance suspending the so-called dollar limit, and the ordinance levying the taxes thereafter, were void, for the reason that there was no great necessity or emergency for their passage. The allegations of the complaint simply refer to the ordinances as being numbered 1208 and 1209, and assert that they were adopted on the 22d day of June, 1910. It is further alleged that copies are attached to the complaint as Exhibits A and B, and made a part thereof. No such copies are so attached, nor is there any allegation in the complaint of either the words or substance of the ordinances, nor are they referred to by their titles.

[1] In pleading an ordinance it must be set out in hæc verba or by reference to its title and the day of its passage. Code Civ. Proc. § 459. This requisite plaintiff has failed to comply with. Without the ordinance or any evidence before it, the court was in no position to declare the legislation valid or invalid, and upon submission of the case upon the record it was justified in refusing the relief sought.

[2] Nor do we think that the court erred in setting aside the judgment entered by the clerk. While in the nature of an action for money had and received, the case is one based upon statute (Pol. Code, § 3819), and takes the place of the ordinary action of assumpsit for money had and received. The case does not therefore come within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 585, authorizing the clerk to enter judgment, but is clearly controlled by the second subdivision of that section, requiring upon default an application for the relief demanded, which implies more than a motion for judgment. This being so, the court was justified in vacating the clerk's judgment.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

TRABUCCO v. COLLINS et al. (Civ. 2496.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 21, 1919.)

1. NOVATION ⇨11—NECESSITY OF PLEADING.

Novation is new matter of defense or discharge, which must be specially pleaded.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨179(2)—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS.

Where trial court sustained objection to a certain question to plaintiff on cross-examination by defendants, as not being proper cross-examination, but stated that it might be matter of defense, which defendants could prove as part of their case, but defendants did not seek to avail themselves of this permission, they should not complain on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Frank Trabucco against M. J. Collins and Elizabeth Collins. From judgment for plaintiff, the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward J. Lynch, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Olin L. Berry, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendant Elizabeth Collins alone appeals. Her first contention is that plaintiff's own case proved a "novation," by which his claim against her was extinguished, to wit, the creation of an obligation on a promissory note, signed by defendant M. J. Collins alone, in place of an obligation of both defendants to repay money loaned by plaintiff. She relies upon the two documents introduced in evidence by plaintiff, the first being a receipt for $476 in favor of plaintiff, signed by both defendants; the second dated later, being a promissory note in favor of plaintiff for the amount sued for, signed by defendant M. J. Collins only.

The defense of novation was not pleaded in the original answer, which denied the loan, and all, or any, indebtedness. Neither was it pleaded in the answer as amended at the conclusion of the trial, and which alleged, as a further and separate defense, that the money was paid by plaintiff in accordance with an agreement for the purchase of a one-half interest in the marble business conducted by the defendants. The finding of the court was squarely against both defendants on each of the defenses.

[1] It is clear from the whole case that defendants did not rely upon a novation, but upon the alleged agreement set out in their answer. This, no doubt, is the reason they did not plead it. Novation "is held to be new matter of defense * * * or discharge, which must be specially pleaded." McGinn v. Wiley, 24 Cal. App. 312, 141 Pac. 53, and cases therein cited. Furthermore, the evidence in the case, if considered in the light of such defense, would not support an allegation, or finding, that novation had resulted. Appellant, by her own acts, prevented the full consummation of any intent on the part of the parties, if any such existed, to extinguish the old obligation. She refused to sign the note on which she relies for novation, although plaintiff many times endeavored to have her do so, and he never by any act or word released her from her liability in the premises.

[2] Appellant complains of two rulings of the trial court in sustaining objections to questions on cross-examination. Respondent had testified that he was not a partner in the marble business. On cross-examination he was asked whether or not he had guaranteed payment of an account against appellant's business, and whether or not he had bought certain materials from one Casarelo. While neither act would conclusively establish a partnership relation and might be considered immaterial, no harm would have resulted from overruling the objection and allowing the witness to answer. The trial court, however, held the matter not proper cross-examination, but stated that it might be matter of defense, which defendants could prove as part of their case. They did not seek to avail themselves of this permission, and should not now complain.

While there is a conflict in some material parts of the testimony, the evidence beyond question supports the finding of the trial court. The defendants, husband and wife, were jointly conducting a marble and terrazzo business. Plaintiff advanced the money to both for the use and benefit of the business (a part of the amount being his own unpaid wages). The larger portion of the money appears to have been given directly to the wife for use in the business.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HELLWIG et al. v. TITLE GUARANTY & SURETY CO. (Civ. 1923.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 21, 1919.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §34(1)—"LIABILITY CREATED BY STATUTE."

An action upon the official bond of a notary public is an action upon a "liability created by statute," within Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1, providing that such action must be brought within three years.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Liability Created By Law.]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §180(2) — STATUTE AS A BAR—PLEADING.

In action upon official bond of a notary public, where it appeared from the face of the complaint that the action was barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 1, the court should have sustained a demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; W. A. Beasley, Judge.

Action by R. Hellwig and another against the Title Guaranty & Surety Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

George F. Hatton, Hartley F. Peart, and Gus L. Baraty, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. A. Caldwell, of San Jose, for respondents.

HART, J. This is an action on a notary public's surety bond executed by the defendant, and grows out of an alleged false acknowledgment by the notary of the execution of a certain deed of trust.

It appears that one Frank L. Dreischmeyer was, on the 31st day of August, 1910, a duly appointed, qualified, and acting notary public, in and for the county of Santa Clara, and that the defendant had become and was on said date a surety on his official bond as such notary; that, on said 31st day of August, 1910, and while said bond was a valid, subsisting obligation and on file in the office of the county clerk of said county, said Dreischmeyer, in his official capacity as such notary public, purported to acknowledge the execution of a trust deed purporting to have been executed by one Marie F. Smith and others, conveying the legal title to certain lands situate in the county of Santa Clara, to the plaintiff, the same to be held, however, as security for the payment of a promissory note for $800, purporting to be executed by the said Marie F. Smith and one Temperance E. Smith in favor of the plaintiff, from whom the loan evidenced by said note was obtained. It further is made to appear from the complaint, as well as from the findings, that the name of Marie F. Smith as subscribed to said trust deed and the said promissory note was forged, and that said Dreischmeyer, at the time that he as a notary public pretended to acknowledge the execution of said trust deed, knew that the name of said Marie F. Smith was forged to the said deed.

The defendant, both by demurrer and, among other defenses, by answer, set up the bar of the statute of limitations as set forth in section 338, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court overruled the demurrer, and upon a trial of the issues tendered by the answer found in favor of and awarded judgment to the plaintiffs. This appeal here is from said judgment.

The contention of the appellant is that the action is barred by virtue of the provisions of the section and subdivision of the Code of Civil Procedure above mentioned, and there can be no doubt that the contention is well made.

[1] Section 338, supra, provides, among other things, that an action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture, must be brought within three years from the date of the accrual of the cause of action. That an action upon the official bond of a notary public is an action upon a liability created by statute, within the meaning of section 338, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, is no longer an open question in this state. It has been so expressly held in the cases of Norton v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 176 Cal. 212, 168 Pac. 16, and Peterson v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 35 Cal. App. 103, 169 Pac. 239. In the first-named case, Mr. Justice Melvin, speaking for the court, says:

"Respondent insists that while, ordinarily, a suit upon a bond of a public officer for breach of official duty is 'upon a liability created by statute,' and therefore is governed by the first subdivision of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, this is an action based upon the fraud of the public officer, and that therefore the fourth subdivision of the section, giving to plaintiff three years after the discovery of the fraud for the commencement of the action, is the only statute of limitations which may be applied in such a litigation. Both theories seem to be supported by adjudications in different jurisdictions, but in California, under the reasoning in County of Sonoma v. Hall, 132 Cal. 589, 62 Pac. 257, 312, 65 Pac. 12, 459, and the authorities cited therein, we are constrained to hold that, without regard to the form of the action, a surety sued upon the bond of a public officer may successfully plead the first subdivision of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure if the action shall have been commenced after the lapse of three years following, not the discovery, but the misfeasance or malfeasance itself."

[2] This action was instituted on the 19th day of December, 1913, and, as above shown, it appears upon the face of the complaint, as it also appears from the evidence, that the alleged wrongful act of Dreischmeyer, in falsely acknowledging as a notary public the purported execution of the trust deed by Marie F. Smith, was committed on the 31st day of August, 1910. Thus it will be noted that more than three years had elapsed between the date of Dreischmeyer's act of official malfeasance and the date of the commencement of this action. Obviously, therefore, the action was barred under the terms of the first subdivision of the section above referred to, and, that fact having been made to appear in the complaint itself, the court below should have sustained the demurrer to that pleading on that ground, or, having overruled the demurrer, should have dismissed the action upon the evidence which conclusively established the bar of the statute.

We may with no impropriety add that the respondents filed no brief herein, nor was the cause orally argued on their behalf when the same was called up for hearing at the last regular term of this court, and that, therefore, in view of the above-cited cases, which are directly in point here, we are in the dark respecting the theory upon which they could have maintained in the court below that the action was not barred by the above-mentioned section. However, it is clear from the cases above cited that the judgment cannot be sustained, and it is, therefore, reversed.

PLEADING  225(2) — AMENDMENT AFTER SUSTAINING DEMURRERS—DISCRETION.

Where complaint was not, as it purported to be, an action to quiet title, and there was misjoinder of causes of action, none of which were sufficiently stated to avoid demurrer, and also misjoinder of parties defendant, and defendants' fraudulent acts were alleged to have occurred so long ago they were barred by limitations, and claims were stated which plaintiffs' laches would have debarred them from asserting, trial court, in refusing to permit plaintiffs' further opportunity to amend after sustaining defendants' demurrers, did not abuse discretion under Code Civ. Proc. § 472.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

F. A. Kelly, of Susanville, for appellants.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants upon the entry of an order sustaining the defendants' several demurrers to the plaintiffs' amended complaint. The only serious contention which the appellants urge upon the argument of this appeal is that the trial court abused its discretion in not allowing the plaintiffs a further opportunity to amend their complaint.

The original complaint is not embraced in the record before us, nor are the demurrers to its sufficiency, but if the plaintiffs' first amended complaint and the demurrers of the several defendants—almost all of whom are lawyers—are to be taken as a sample of these earlier pleadings the plaintiffs must have been fully informed as to the deficiencies of their original pleading at the time they prepared and filed their first amended complaint. An examination of this latter pleading has satisfied us that it is subject to each and every one of the numerous objections which were urged against it by the several demurring parties; that it is not, as it purports to be, an action to quiet title; that there is a misjoinder of several causes of action, none of which are sufficiently stated to avoid general demurrer; that there is also a misjoinder of parties defendant; that the alleged fraudulent acts and conduct with which the defendants are charged not only fail to constitute a cause of action against all or perhaps any of them, but are all alleged to have occurred between the years 1906 and 1910, and hence are not only long since barred by the statutes of limitations pleaded by the several defendants, but are also upon their face stale claims which the plaintiffs' laches would long since have debarred them from asserting. The plaintiffs' averment that they did not discover the matter set forth in their complaint until the year 1916 cannot aid their pleadings, since it is clear that as to many of such matters they were either known to them several years prior to that date, or that they were sufficiently apprised thereof to put them upon inquiry. The plaintiffs state no reason why their alleged discovery of the facts constituting the gravamen of their complaint from six to ten years after their occurrence was not earlier made, and it is plain that no such reasons could be stated, since the facts themselves as set forth in this amended complaint are of such a nature that they must in the nature of things have become known to the plaintiffs at or about the time of the alleged happening of most of them. Under these conditions the trial court very properly determined that it would be impossible for the plaintiffs to state a cause of action by any further attempt at the amendment of their pleading, and hence ordered judgment for the defendants upon sustaining their several demurrers to the plaintiffs' hopelessly inadequate amended complaint. We find no abuse of the discretion with which the trial court was invested under section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure to permit or refuse to the plaintiffs the further privilege of amending their pleading.

No error appearing in the record before us, the judgment is affirmed.

JUDGMENT  392—MOTION TO VACATE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Refusal of the court to grant a motion to set aside a judgment based on contradictory affidavits relating to misconduct of movant's counsel held not an abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by J. George Scott against Henry Thomas. From a purported order denying defendant's motion to vacate and set aside a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Rush and C. B. Ladd, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward Winterer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an appeal taken from a purported order denying defendant's motion to vacate and set aside the judgment entered in favor of plaintiff. We have considered the whole record carefully. A statement of the facts, so far as material here, is as follows:

This action is one to quiet title to certain land. The trial of the case in the court below was set for July 20, 1915. Defendant admits that he knew this. Defendant, in his affidavit to support his motion, says that he employed a certain firm of attorneys to represent him in this action; that this firm did represent him, filing an answer, etc., and had charge of the case up to about July 10, 1914, at which time said firm notified him that because of other matters they would be compelled to withdraw from the case; that they did withdraw; and that because of such withdrawal he employed another attorney to represent him therein, who notified him that the case had been set for trial as stated above. The defendant, by said affidavit, says, among other things, that on the 20th day of July, 1915, he was ill and unable to be in court, but that he sent his sister, Louisa Thomas, with his attorney, that she might assist him "in securing the required adjournment"; that when his sister returned she informed him that matters were all right, and some time thereafter his attorney informed him that he would have 60 days in which to prepare the case, and that after said period this case would be set for trial; that on August 20, 1915, he discovered by inquiring that judgment had gone against him on July 20, 1915; that thereupon he immediately consulted and employed his present attorneys, and instructed them to take whatever steps might be necessary to protect his rights.

Another affidavit on the part of defendant was by his sister, corroborating all that is set forth in defendant's said affidavit, and, further, that she went to the courthouse with said attorney, and was present with him during the morning session; that she was informed by said attorney "that the case would go over until 2 o'clock, at which time it would be adjourned"; that prior to 2 o'clock she was informed by said attorney "that it was not necessary for her to be in the court, or in the courtroom, and that it was best that she should not be in said courtroom"; that she believed and relied upon such representations, and did not go into the courthouse, and hence did not know what took place there.

Witness W. M. Palmer, who was the said attorney, says "that on the 16th day of July, 1915, in Santa Monica, Cal., Miss Louisa Thomas and one John Tong came to affiant's residence and asked affiant if he was in a position to take charge of a certain case known as Scott v. Thomas, being the above-entitled action," that she represented herself as having authority from her brother, the defendant here, to employ an attorney for the defense of this action, and also stated that the law firm which formerly had charge of the matter had informed her that they would go no further with the case. Palmer further deposed that he told the said Louisa Thomas that it would be impossible on so short a notice to prepare a satisfactory defense, but that he would appear on the day of, the trial and move the court for a continuance, in order to enable him to do so; that he arranged with said Miss Thomas to meet him at the office of the former attorneys on the following day to arrange for a substitution of attorneys; that they there found that the member of said firm who had charge of the matter was out of the city; whereupon it was agreed that they meet again at the same place on July 19, 1915, which agreement was carried out, and substitution of attorneys effected, and the papers in said action delivered to said Palmer.

On July 20, 1915, the plaintiff here, with his attorney, said Louisa Thomas and said Palmer, were present in court when said cause was called. Palmer moved for a continuance of the case, and his motion was denied by the court. Thereupon the case was continued to 2 o'clock p. m. of said day. During the time intervening a conference was held between plaintiff and his attorney and said Miss Thomas and defendant's attorney, at which time matters in controversy were carefully canvassed, with a result that it was agreed between said Miss Thomas, as agent for said defendant, and the plaintiff here, that if the said defendant would pay to plaintiff, at or before 2 o'clock p. m. of that day, $100 in cash, said defendant might have the option to buy the premises described in the complaint for the amount due on the contract, with additional amount as costs, and that execution should be stayed on any judgment which might be rendered in the action for 45 days, and at that time, upon the payment of the balance due on the contract, the judgment was to be satisfied; this agreement to be void and of no effect unless said $100 was so paid. Plaintiff, at said conference and at all times, declined to consent to the continuance or postponement of the trial of the action, and insisted that the same should be tried at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said day. At the close of this conference Miss Thomas said she would go out and try to get the $100. She failed to do so.

At 2 o'clock p. m. on said date Palmer was again in court representing the defendant at the trial. He denied that he ever told Miss Thomas that the case would be adjourned or continued, or that he ever told her that it was best for her not to be in the courtroom. In short, he denied each and every averment contained in her affidavit as to continuances, etc., and stated affirmatively that he never had any conversation at all until after the trial with the defendant; that he at no time misstated any fact to Miss Thomas, or to the defendant herein; that he did not conceal from them, or either of them, any matter pertaining thereto, but, on the contrary, that Miss Thomas was fully informed by him as to all said matters.

By the affidavit of the plaintiff it appears that he was present in court on said day of trial, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and again at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He supports fully Palmer's testimony as to all that took place in the courtroom, and his version as to the conference referred to therein, and the result thereof. Plaintiff further deposed that said Palmer took part in the trial of the case by cross-examining plaintiff's witnesses.

On this state of facts, and after a full hearing, defendant's motion to vacate and set aside the judgment was denied. The motion was for an "order to vacate and set aside the judgment heretofore entered in this action," etc., and this was supported and opposed by the affidavits already referred to. The record contains no copy of the order appealed from, as required by statute, but does contain a copy of an "order denying motion for new trial."

Assuming—though there has been no suggestion of diminution of record—that the trial court did make an order denying a motion by appellant to set aside the judgment, still, under the facts as we have recited them, we see no error or abuse of discretion.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

JENSEN v. GOSS et al. (Civ. 2577.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 22, 1919. Rehearing Denied Feb. 20, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court March 20, 1919.)

1. SALES §82(1)—TIME OF THE ESSENCE.

In mercantile contracts, such as contracts for the manufacture and sale of goods and the like, it is generally held that the parties have intended to make time the essence of the contract.

2. SALES §99—RESCISSION—DEFAULTS.

Sellers were justified in rescinding contract under which hay, delivered by them, was to be paid for "on the 13th day of each month following delivery," where the buyer for some time was dilatory in making payments, and showed a clear intention not only to violate the provisions of the contract, but to withhold payments due until the delivery of more hay.

3. SALES —106 — RIGHT TO RESCIND — WAIVER.

Under a contract to deliver hay, for which payments were to be made monthly, sellers' rights to rescind were not waived, nor were they affected, by the fact that they did not stop delivery of hay immediately after failure of buyer to make his first payment as required, since they had the right to rely, for a reasonable length of time, upon the buyer's promise to pay.

4. SALES —406—BUYER IN DEFAULT.

Buyer cannot offset any damages for sellers' alleged breach in failing to deliver the quality of goods contracted for without showing performance on his own part of his own agreement.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Fred Jensen against Charles E. Goss and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Hankins & Hankins, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Frank J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for $231 for damages found to have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of the failure of defendants to deliver to him hay under a written contract dated June 1, 1916, by the terms of which the hay was to be paid for "on the 13th day of each month following delivery." The defense is that plaintiff refused to pay for the hay as required by the contract, thereby releasing defendants from further performance on their part.

The testimony of and in behalf of defendants is corroborated by the evidence and admissions of plaintiff while on the stand, and fails to support the findings of the trial court. Plaintiff never met his obligations to pay as required. On the 15th day of July, the first month following deliveries of hay, one of the defendants personally called on him and demanded payment of the "money due according to his contract." Defendant promised "that in a matter of a few days he would pay." He made no payment until the 28th of the month, when he paid $275 on account.

Defendants continued to deliver hay as required by the plaintiff, and the latter continued his dilatory payments. Statements of the account were regularly sent to him on the 13th of each month. Collectors of the defendants repeatedly called on him. Members of the firm (defendants) as repeatedly conversed with him on the telephone, demanding payment. This condition of affairs continued until October 3d, after which defendants delivered no more hay. At that time plaintiff owed them $920, on account of which he made three payments of $200 each, the last on December 12th.

On December 14th one of the defendants personally called on plaintiff and demanded payment of $320.22, the balance due. Plaintiff, admitting that he "would pay him, that he had some money then," refused to pay until defendants delivered two more carloads of hay. There was some conversation relative to the quality of the hay delivered by the defendants, but refusal to pay the balance due was not predicated on that ground. Defendant told him that he considered the contract canceled. The same day defendants' attorneys made demand for "immediate payment of the" balance due, and notified plaintiff that, unless such payment was made upon receipt of the demand and notice, defendants would, by reason of the breach of the contract by plaintiff in failing to make payments for said hay as provided therein, refuse to deliver any further amount of hay.

Plaintiff did not pay the balance until December 21st at which time, through his attorneys, he requested the defendants to deliver two carloads of hay. No hay being delivered, the plaintiff four or five days later went to the barn of defendants and personally demanded delivery of the hay, and was informed by them that the contract was at an end. After giving further orders to defendants for delivery of hay, no one of which was filled, plaintiff commenced this action.

[1, 2] In view of the evidence in the case, we have looked to respondent to sustain the findings and judgment of the trial court by weight of authority. This he has not done. None of the cases cited by him, so far as we are able to find, relate to a mercantile contract such as the one here under consideration. They have to do with purchase of real estate on the installment plan, forfeitures, and equitable rights or leasehold interests.

"In mercantile contracts, such as contracts for the manufacture and sale of goods and the like, it is generally held that the parties have intended to make time the essence of the contract." 13 Corpus Juris, 688, and cases cited.

The defendants were justified in rescinding the contract when plaintiff showed a clear intention to violate its provisions, and to withhold payments due until the delivery of more hay. Minaker v. California Canneries Co., 138 Cal. 239, 71 Pac. 110.

[3] The rights of defendants to rescind were not waived, nor were they affected, by the fact that they did not stop delivery of hay immediately after failure of plaintiff to make his first payment as required. They had the right to rely, for a reasonable length of time at least, upon the promise of plaintiff to pay. San Francisco Bridge Co. v. Dumbarton Land & Improvement Co., 119 Cal. 272, 51 Pac. 335.

[4] Had plaintiff rested his refusal to pay on the ground of a failure to deliver the quality of hay required by the contract, such position would not aid him in this action. He could not offset any damages for such alleged breach on the part of defendants without showing performance on his own part of his own agreement. Minaker v. California Canneries Co., supra.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment is reversed.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 20, 1919.)

MECHANICS' LIENS $\Leftrightarrow$ 132(4)—FILING CLAIM OF LIEN—TIME.

Where a notice of completion is filed under the Code provisions, time for filing a claim of lien may run from date of filing of notice of completion, and not necessarily from actual date of completion or acceptance or occupancy of building.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the Pioneer Paper Company against Lillian Hathaway, J. C. Coney, Lillian Coney, and the Long Beach Home Builders. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Schweitzer & Hutton and Albert A. Kidder, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank D. McClure, of Minneapolis, Minn., for respondents.

SLOANE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for defendants and from an order denying motion for new trial in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The only question involved in the appeal is as to whether or not the claim of lien was filed by plaintiff within the period of 30 days allowed it by law. The findings of fact of the trial court, the correctness of which are not disputed, support the claim of the plaintiff and entitle it to judgment.

The court found that the contract in question was completed, and the buildings occupied by the defendants, on the 7th day of August, 1913, and that notice by the owners of the completion of the contract was filed in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county on the 16th day of August, 1913, and that the claim of lien was filed on the 11th day of September, 1913, within 30 days of the date of the filing of the notice of completion, but more than 30 days after the actual completion, acceptance, and occupancy of the buildings in question.

In its conclusions of law the court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment by reason of the claim of lien having been filed more than 30 days after the completion of the buildings. This conclusion is erroneous, and not justified by the findings of fact.

This precise question, under the same building contract, in another action against the same defendants, has been determined by the Supreme Court of this state since this appeal was taken. Hughes Manufacturing Co. v. Lillian Hathaway et al., 174 Cal. 44, 161 Pac. 1159. It is there held that, where a notice of completion is filed under the Code provisions, the time for filing claim of lien may run from the date of the filing of the notice of completion, and not necessarily from the actual date of completion or acceptance or occupancy of the building.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the plaintiff in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Clinton Campbell against Frank J. Spare and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Oscar C. Mueller and Alfred Wright, both of Los Angeles (Wm. W. Lovett, Jr., of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

James, Smith & McCarthy, of Los Angeles, and Neil S. McCurdy, for respondent.

LENNON, J. In this action the plaintiff recovered a judgment in the sum of $2,329, found to be due to the plaintiff as the unpaid balance of rent reserved by the terms of a written lease entered into on January 29, 1913, between the plaintiff, as lessor, and the defendants Frank J. Spare and Anna E. Spare, his wife, as lessees. The demised premises consisted of a furnished apartment house in the city of Los Angeles known as the Campbellton, and the lease, which was to continue for a term of five years, prescribed as rental the sum of $875 a month, payable monthly in advance, from February 1, 1913, to and including January 31, 1914, and the sum of $700 a month, payable in advance, for the remainder of the term. The defendants T. L. Henderson, George J. Morgan, and F. Nutting were sureties on a bond in the sum of $2,500 conditioned for the faithful performance of the covenants of the lease. Substantially stated, the further facts of the case as revealed by the pleadings and proof are as follows:

The lessees took possession of the leased premises under the lease on the 1st day of February, 1913, and vacated them on August 10, 1914, without paying any rent for the months of June, July and August of that year. At the beginning of the term the lessees regularly made monthly payments of rent as provided in the lease up to and including the month of May, 1913, when they notified the plaintiff by letter addressed to him at Phoenix, Ariz., that they found "it utterly impossible to produce an income commensurate with the rent required by the terms of the lease," and were therefore "in the position of either continuing in the occupancy under the lease at a heavy loss * * * or surrendering possession," and the lessees, so the letter said, called the situation to the attention of the plaintiff, to the end that he might judge which he desired they should do. The letter assumed that the plaintiff appreciated the conditions which existed during that period of the year, and, following an assertion that the house was substantially vacant, concluded by saying:

"We feel that it is more than right for us to ask that you lower the rent to such a reasonable amount which will enable us to meet it promptly at the time it is due."

The plaintiff on May 29, 1913, replied by letter that he had written his wife to call on the lessees "and talk matters over regarding the Campbellton." Accordingly, plaintiff's wife, who was then residing in Los Angeles for the summer, called upon the lessees, and as the result of oral negotiations an arrangement was entered into whereby she was to occupy an apartment of the leased premises, and the lessees were to pay whatever they could from month to month over and above their living expenses and the cost of operating the apartments. On October 10, 1913, the lessees mailed plaintiff a check in the sum of $350, which the letter accompanying stated was "sent in full for September." On October 24, 1913, the plaintiff acknowledged the receipt of the check and requested the lessees to "render * * * a statement of the receipts and expenditures for the month of September." On January 2, 1914, plaintiff wrote to the lessees, calling attention to the fact that he had not received the rent due for the preceding month of December, and also to remind the lessees that the terms of the lease provided "that this rent shall be paid in advance on the 1st of each month, and I must insist upon the payments being made promptly as provided." On April 30, 1914, the lessees wrote plaintiff as follows:

"Los Angeles, Calif., April 30, 1914.

"Mr. Clinton Campbell, Phoenix, Arizona—Dear Sir: Referring to the rent proposition: It is impossible to state at this time what can be done in the future, but can say that since the 1st of April we have had several empties, and at this writing have nine vacant apartments, which reduce the rent income $320. You may think these are a great many vacancies for this time of the year, but I can assure you that most of the apartment houses are about half empty. Several of the new apartment houses are unable to get any one to lease them, and those that are running are obliged to reduce their rents, so that we have had to do likewise. "We have had several people looking within the last few days, and hope to land some of them.

"I had a real estate man here yesterday looking over the proposition, but it is all exchange and no cash, for land situated in the San Joaquin valley. I am still working on a sale of the property.

"Yours truly,

F. J. Spare."

The plaintiff did not reply to this last letter, and on May 5, 1914, the lessees again wrote plaintiff as follows:

"Los Angeles, 5/5/14.

"Mr. Clinton Campbell, Phoenix, Arizona—Dear Sir: Not having had a reply to my letter of April 30th regarding the rent proposition, I would like to know what concession you are willing to make from April 1st. The net income for April did not exceed $400, and for May the rent income is not likely to exceed $700, unless we are able to rent some of our vacant apartments. Owing to other apartment houses reducing the rents, we have also been obliged to do so, making our rent income less.

"Kindly let me hear from you by return mail.

"Yours truly,

F. J. Spare."

To this letter plaintiff replied as of May 7, 1914, acknowledging the receipt of it and the preceding letter, and declaring in effect that in so far as he was concerned neither letter seemed to need reply, and then proceeded to say:

"I presume, from your explanation about vacancies, reduced rents, etc., that you desire that I make a reduction in rentals; you will remember that your original contract calls for a rental of $700 per month, and in many ways I think that I have made all the concessions that I want to, and, as I have said before, I must insist upon your getting your account to date."

This last letter from the plaintiff, notwithstanding its tenor and text, was not acknowledged nor directly replied to by the lessees, and on June 14, 1914, the defendant F. J. Spare wrote plaintiff, inclosing a check for $100 "in full for May rent," and expressing the regret "that business is not better," which brought a reply from plaintiff dated July 8, 1914, acknowledging the receipt of the "check for $100 on April account," and stating that the inscription thereon "in full for May rent" was erased by plaintiff, because he did not care to commit himself to an acceptance of that amount "in full settlement for that month." In addition to these letters of the parties, there were offered and received in evidence numerous receipts of the plaintiff and checks of the lessees accepted by plaintiff, evidencing the payment of sums varying in amounts from $150 to $500, all of which—receipts and checks—by express inscription purport to have been made, given, and accepted as evidencing payment in full of the rent for the particular month specified in each instance, commencing with the month of May, 1913, and covering each of the following months, ending with and including the month of March, 1914.

The foregoing facts constitute primarily the basis of appellants' contention that the dealings of the parties with regard to the lease of the premises operated as a modification of the original terms of the lease relative to the payment of rent reserved thereunder, to the extent that the lease itself was abandoned and the lessees' occupancy of the premises thereby and thereafter transformed into a tenancy from month to month. The inception of this contention is found in the arrangement which was entered into in the first instance by plaintiff's wife and the lessees, which it is claimed contemplated creating, and fixed, a modification of the terms of the lease, which, though orally made subsequently, became, by the parties performing pursuant to its terms, an executed agreement, and therefore binding upon and enforceable against both parties, despite the fact that the lease itself provided that it should "not be changed, altered, or modified, except by writing indorsed hereon and signed by the parties hereto."

We find nothing in the evidence which would have compelled the trial court to find and conclude that the initial arrangement was sought, intended, and understood by the parties to be a permanent modification of the terms of the lease, or that it eventuated into anything more than a mere temporary abatement of the rent from month to month, which was acceded to from time to time in response to the urgent and insistent importunities of the lessees. Clearly, the correspondence of the parties, considered in its entirety, cannot be taken as decisively indicating that the initial agreement was at its inception intended to extend beyond and control the situation for any greater length of time than might be necessary to temporarily tide the lessees over the slack summer months. To the contrary, that correspondence, we think, tends to show that the lessees understood the initial arrangement to be nothing more than a temporary concession; otherwise, why should they, as late as April and May, 1914, writing plaintiff, say:

"Referring to the rent proposition. It is impossible to state at this time what can be done in the future. * * * What concessions are you willing to make from April 1st."

Then, again, there is the evidence of plaintiff's wife to the effect that at no time was there any discussion with her concerning a permanent reduction in the rent, and that she entered into the initial arrangement with the lessees "only because they said they were up against it; that the house was nearly empty, and wanted to know if we would do that for the summer months." The testimony of plaintiff's wife in the particular that the arrangement was only for the slack summer months is fortified in a measure by a letter of the lessee Anna Spare, dated November 20, 1913, to the plaintiff, wherein she said:

"I arranged with Mrs. Campbell before she left to endeavor to pay a monthly rent of $400 during the winter months commencing with October providing the business justified."

[1, 2] Aside from the fact that the truth of the statement contained in this letter concerning a new arrangement for a fixed rental for the winter months was flatly denied by the testimony of the plaintiff's wife, and was therefore a controverted fact in the case, the letter itself not only falls short of supporting, but in a measure tends to defeat, the contention that the initial arrangement was intended to extend beyond certain months, and contemplated the permanent substitution of a varying sum in payment of the rentals to be derived from the contingent profits of the business, in lieu of the sum certain fixed and reserved as rentals by the terms of the lease. Driscoll v. Myers, 34 Cal. App. 490, 168 Pac. 145. The fair inference, it seems to us, to be drawn from the dealings and conduct of the parties is that they were desirous and willing to meet and overcome an embarrassing financial situation through the medium of temporary concessions, which were not intended or accepted by the parties as permanently impairing or abrogating the original terms of the lease.

The case of Raymond v. Krauskopf, 87 Iowa, 602, 54 N. W. 432, so strongly relied upon to support appellants' contention, does not seem to us to be in point. That case was an action to recover rent originally reserved in a written lease of land, which required the lessee to farm the land in a farmerlike manner, to plant corn by the 20th of May, and to deliver to the lessor by the 25th day of the following November 16 bushels of corn per acre. The lessee cultivated the land as required, but the growing crops thereon having been damaged by storms, the parties entered into a parol agreement whereby the lessee was to replant the leased land to corn, farm it to the best of his ability, and then deliver to the lessor "in full of all demands for rent" one-half of the replanted corn. In keeping with the new agreement the lessee replanted the land to corn, farmed it during the remainder of the season, and, of the 350 bushels of corn ultimately harvested, delivered about 200 bushels to the lessor in payment of the rent. The appeal was from a judgment entered upon a directed verdict in favor of the lessor in the sum of $204, which evidently represented the difference between the value of the delivered and accepted 200 bushels of corn and that of 480 bushels, which the lessor claimed was due him under the provisions of the written lease. It will be noted that in that case no question of a periodical reduction in the payment of rent was, as here, involved, and that when disposing of the appeal the court evidently proceeded upon the theory that the evidence showed, as it doubtless did, that the oral negotiations of the parties had ripened into a fully executed contract, and the only question really decided was whether or not the oral agreement was supported by a good consideration. In discussing that question, the court, while distinguishing, in effect, approved the case of Wheeler v. Baker, 59 Iowa, 86, 12 N. W. 767, where it was held that the rental terms of a written lease for the entire term were not abrogated, nor was the lessor bound to accept for the full term the reduced rental of certain months, because of the fact that the lessor had ex mera gratia accepted the reduced rental for a portion of the time.

The case of Sinnige v. Oswald, 170 Cal. 55, 148 Pac. 203, seems to be decisive of the point presented here. Its facts are practically parallel, in their essential features with the facts of the present case, and it was there said:

"The finding that there was no change in the terms of the lease in the alleged particular of reducing the rent is sustained by the evidence. Concessions of the kind that were shown by the defendants, when supported by a consideration, are valid to the extent that a lower rent has been tendered and accepted as satisfaction in full of the instalments thus paid. They are not sufficient to establish a change in the written contract so as to affect the amount of future instalments of rent where no such change of terms has been made in writing."

The judgment is affirmed.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT — 417(7) — FINDINGS OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION — REVIEW.

Findings of fact by the Industrial Accident Commission on conflicting evidence are conclusive on the courts.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT — 361 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — RELATION — "EMPLOYÉ."

Where one carrier employed a watchman at a crossing and another company operating a parallel track paid one-half of salary of watchman, who acted for both companies, relation of employer and employé, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, existed between each railroad and watchman.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employé.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨365—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—JURISDICTION OF ACCIDENT COMMISSION.

Where interstate and intrastate carriers had parallel tracks, and each paid half of salary of a watchman at a crossing, and watchman was killed by a train of interstate carrier at a time when a train also came by for intrastate carrier, jurisdiction of state Industrial Accident Commission was not lost as to intrastate carrier by reason of federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665).

4. COMMERCE ⇨8(6) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY LAW.

Jurisdiction of Industrial Accident Commission of state is excluded by federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665) only as to such matters as are covered by the act.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨382 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—RELEASE.

Where watchman was killed while acting at a crossing for both an intrastate and an interstate carrier, and his wife executed a written release to interstate carrier in consideration of a certain amount, release, in so far as any claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act was concerned, was invalid as against the intrastate carrier, where it did not provide for payment of full compensation in accordance with provisions of act and was never approved by commission.

Robinson, who was killed as the result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment and arising out of his employment as a crossing watchman at the crossing of Shattuck avenue and Bancroft way, in the city of Berkeley.

The proceeding before the commission was against both petitioner and the Southern Pacific Company, upon the theory that they were both the employers of deceased. The findings of the commission substantially declare that on January 20, 1918, deceased "was in the service, other than as an independent contractor, jointly of defendants * * * as a flagman at a certain street crossing"; that his duties in said employment were to warn and signal indiscriminately the operators of the trains of both defendants as to vehicles and pedestrians at or approaching said street crossing and to warn and signal pedestrians and the drivers of vehicles as to the approach at said crossing of the trains of both defendants; "that at the said time and place, while engaged in rendering service for both of said defendants, the employé sustained an injury, to wit, he was struck accidentally by a passing train of said Southern Pacific Company while engaged in flagging; that such injury arose out of and in the course of "his joint employment by said defendants" and was proximately caused thereby; "that said injury proximately caused death on the 23d day of January, 1918," and "that the earnings of the employé in said employment at said time were $45 per month, one-half whereof was paid by each defendant." It was further found that the system of the Southern Pacific Company at said crossing was "at all times engaged indistinguishably in interstate and suburban traffic, and therefore as to said defendant the employé was engaged in interstate commerce," with the result that as to the Southern Pacific Company the commission was without jurisdiction. The award therefore was made solely against petitioner.

We construe these findings as sufficiently declaring that at the time of the accident deceased was in the employ of both defendants, that at the time of the accident he was actually engaged in rendering service for both of the defendants, and that his injury arose out of and in the course of said employment while rendering such service. They sufficiently show the relation of employer and employé within the meaning of the "Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act" (St. 1917, p. 831), which defines an employer as one "who has any person in service under any appointment or contract of hire, * * * express or implied, oral or written * * *" (section 7), and an employé as "every person in the service of an employer as defined by section seven hereof under any appointment or contract of hire, * * * express or implied, oral or written * * *" (section 8), as well as under the general law.

It is earnestly urged that the evidence received by the commission fails to furnish any support for a conclusion that the relation of employer and employé existed between petitioner and deceased, or that deceased was injured while engaged in any service for petitioner. The situation in this connection was as follows:

Both petitioner and the Southern Pacific Company operated suburban electric lines to and through parts of Berkeley; the interstate character of the Southern Pacific Company being based on the fact that interstate passengers and freight, as well as United States mail, were carried on its trains. At and near the place of the accident the tracks of both companies are along Shattuck avenue, a street running in a northerly and southerly direction. Each company has two tracks, and the four are parallel, the two Southern Pacific Company tracks being on the westerly side of the avenue, and there being about 15 feet between the two sets of tracks. These tracks run along Shattuck avenue, across its intersection with Bancroft way, and then on along Shattuck avenue northerly. Just across this intersection, on the northerly side, is a stopping place or station for both systems. The evidence shows very clearly that, acceding to a request of the Berkeley authorities made for the purpose of giving protection to pedestrians and vehicles passing over the tracks of the two companies at certain street crossings, including that of Shattuck avenue and Bancroft way, the two companies had entered into an oral understanding several years before under which the Southern Pacific Company was to place crossing watchmen at such crossings, and bill one-half the wages of such watchmen to petitioner. This arrangement had been faithfully complied with from the time it was made up to and including the time of the accident, and the Southern Pacific Company had each month rendered its bill to petitioner for one-half the wages of each man so employed, and petitioner had each month paid such bill. At the time of the accident and for some weeks prior thereto deceased was the crossing watchman so installed at the Shattuck avenue-Bancroft way crossing. While the two systems of railroad were absolutely separate and distinct, the duties of these watchmen were absolutely the same as to each, and they were so instructed. But they were directly selected and employed by the Southern Pacific Company, were carried on the pay roll of that company for all of their wages, were directly paid all of their wages by that company, were under the supervision of that company in the performance of their duties, and that company alone exercised directly the power of discharge, though it was admitted that such power would be exercised as to any watchman whose discharge was insisted on by petitioner.

The accident occurred about 5:57 p. m. on January 20, 1918. Trains of both companies going north arrived at the Shattuck avenue-Bancroft way station about the same time; petitioner's train being a little ahead of the other. Deceased was standing near the west rail of the track of the Southern Pacific Company, on which the train of that company approached, facing east, apparently in the discharge of his duties as crossing watchman, and apparently looking in the direction of petitioner's train. The evidence is not entirely in accord as to the relative position of the trains at the moment of the accident, but in view of the findings we must consider it in the light most favorable to the claimant. According to some of the evidence, the trains came in practically together, the head of petitioner's train being only about half a car length ahead going "into the station," and stopped at the same time in that relative position. Deceased was apparently standing too near the Southern Pacific Company track, and was struck by the first car, and thus received his injury.

[1] The evidence is in such condition as to fairly warrant a conclusion that at the time of the accident deceased was actually engaged in his duties as crossing watchman with reference to the two trains which were then arriving, and so was actually engaged, as found by the commission, in rendering service, in the course of his employment, for both of the defendants. It is true that there was other evidence tending to show that petitioner's train had arrived earlier than indicated by the evidence above referred to, and that the duties of deceased in connection therewith had ended before the accident, but, upon the whole case, that was a question of fact for the commission, and its finding is conclusive in so far as the courts are concerned.

[2] We are also of the opinion that, upon the facts we have stated, the commission correctly held that deceased was in the employ of both companies, and that therefore the relation of employer and employé existed between deceased and petitioner. This appears to us to necessarily be the result of the arrangement between the companies and their course of conduct thereunder. The deceased was engaged to perform his service for both companies, and was in reality paid his wages by the two companies, each paying one-half. That he was selected for this service by the Southern Pacific Company, was placed on its pay roll as its employé, was under its supervision, direction, and control, and was given his wages by it, was simply the result of the arrangement between the two companies as to the method by which the thing contemplated should be done. In all this, including the contract of employment, the Southern Pacific Company was acting on behalf of petitioner as well as itself, and in no respect as an independent contractor. We cannot see, looking at the substance of the transaction, why petitioner and deceased did not fully measure up to the definitions of employer and employé contained in our "Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act." That such is the situation under the general law to which it has been held "we must look" in determining such questions (see Employers' Liability, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Pac. 273) is fully sustained by such cases as Vary v. B. C. R. & M. R. Co., 42 Iowa, 246, and Atlanta Coast Lines R. Co. v. Tredway's Adm'x, 120 Va. 735, 93 S. E. 560. None of the cases cited by petitioner is in point upon such facts as we have in this case.

[3, 4] Although petitioner is not a common carrier by rail engaged in interstate commerce, it is claimed that, if deceased was at the time of the accident rendering service for both petitioner and the Southern Pacific Company, which was engaged in interstate commerce, his service as to the latter being of an interstate character, that character must attach to the whole of his service, and thus, in view of the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657-8665]) exclude the jurisdiction of the state commission, even as to the petitioner, which is not engaged in interstate commerce. This claim loses sight of the fact that the service as to each company, though confused in point of time of rendition, was absolutely separate and distinct in every other way. For one company he was doing one thing, and for the other company an entirely different and distinct thing, and his service for petitioner had no element of an interstate character. The claim further loses sight of the fact that the jurisdiction of the state commission is excluded by the federal Employers' Liability Law only as to such matters as are covered by the act, and necessarily the federal act cannot be held to affect the rights under the state law of an employé of a common carrier by railroad in no way engaged in interstate commerce, or the rights of his dependents in the event of his death, to obtain compensation under such state law on account of injuries or death occurring in the course of his employment by such carrier, and arising out of such employment.

[5] It is suggested, though not argued by petitioner in his briefs, that a release given by the claimant to the Southern Pacific Company had the effect of releasing petitioner. It appears that, prior to the commencement of this proceeding before the commission, the claimant, in consideration of $250 paid her by such company, executed a written release of the company from all claims and causes of action on account of the death of her husband. This amount was credited by the commission to petitioner in its final award, thereby reducing the full compensation of $1,539 by $250. The release did not "provide for the payment of full compensation in accordance with the provisions of" the act, and it was never "approved by the commission." In so far as any claim under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act is concerned, it was therefore invalid (section 27), and it is material only in considering any claim that may be asserted against the Southern Pacific Company under the federal Employers' Liability Law.

No written notice was served on petitioner within 30 days after the injury to Robinson stating name and address of person injured, etc., as required by section 15 of the Compensation Act. That section provides, however, "that the failure to give any such notice * * * shall not be a bar to recovery under this act if it is found as a fact in the proceedings for the collection of the claim that there was no intention to mislead or prejudice the employer in making his defense, and that he was not in fact so misled or prejudiced thereby." The commission so found in this proceeding. Section 19 (d) of the act provides that "prejudice to the employer by failure of the employé to give notice, as required by section fifteen" is an affirmative defense, and that "the burden of proof shall rest upon the employer to establish them." In the light of these provisions it certainly cannot be held that the finding of the commission is without sufficient support in the evidence.

What we have said disposes of all points in the briefs as to which discussion is necessary.

The award is affirmed.

In re SEILER'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 17, 1918.)

On motion for hearing in banc. Hearing denied.

For departmental opinion, see 176 Cal. 775, 170 Pac. 1138.

THE COURT. In denying the petition for a rehearing of this case in banc, the court deems it advisable to say that the declaration in the department opinion that the writing accompanying the deposit of money in the Bank of Italy was one creating a trust was not intended as a ruling that any trust created or attempted to be created by said writing is not open to attack in any other proceeding in which its efficacy may properly come before a court. This was a will contest, and appellant's counsel emphatically contended that the writing in question was on its face a will. It was in answer to this contention that the department opinion pronounced it to be on its face something quite different. The question of the sufficiency of the trust sought to be created was a matter not involved. The only question was whether or not the writing was testamentary, and the department correctly declared that it was not.

SAN PEDRO, L. A. & S. L. R. CO. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES (two cases).
(L. A. 4504, 4600.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\Leftrightarrow$ 1097(1) — SUBSEQUENT APPEAL—LAW OF THE CASE.

Where judgment was given for defendant on sustaining demurrer to the complaint, and reversed on appeal, and on second trial all the questions remained the same, the court on second appeal was bound by the conclusions expressed in the prior opinion, which constituted the law of the case.

2. COURTS $\Leftrightarrow$ 90(6)—PRECEDENTS.

Where two actions involving same facts and subject-matter were brought by one plaintiff against the one defendant, and in one of them, on appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer, the judgment was reversed, such judgment was not necessarily conclusive on appeal of the other case, if ruling was wrong; no property rights having been acquired on the faith of that ruling.

Melvin, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Two actions by the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company against the City of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff in each case, and defendant appeals. Judgment in the first case affirmed, and in the second reversed, with directions.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., Charles S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., and Jess E. Stephens, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. S. Halsted, W. F. Palmer, W. W. Peck, Fred E. Pettit, Jr., and James E. Kelby, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The above-entitled actions were brought to recover from the city of Los Angeles certain taxes paid under protest. In each, judgment went in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals. The facts of the two cases are substantially the same, and the appeals are submitted on a single set of briefs. The litigation in L. A. No. 4504 has, however, had a prior history, which requires a disposition of this case upon considerations other than those governing L. A. No. 4600.

[1] This is the second appeal in L. A. No. 4504. Judgment was originally given in favor of the defendant on the sustaining of its demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint, and on appeal that judgment was reversed by Department 2 of this court. San Pedro, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991. In accord with the direction of this court, the court below overruled the demurrer, and permitted the defendant to answer. Upon trial, it was found that all the averments of the plaintiff's complaint were true, and that certain allegations of the answer were true. There is, however, no claim that the allegations so set up by way of defense affect the determination of the legal questions involved, which remain precisely the same as those presented and decided upon the first appeal. We are therefore, in L. A. No. 4504, bound by the conclusions expressed in the opinion heretofore rendered. Where, upon successive appeals, no difference in the facts appears, this court has consistently followed the rule of "the law of the case," a rule founded on the simple principle that "this court has no appellate jurisdiction over its own judgments, and such judgment, therefore, constitutes an estoppel of record of the highest character, and is conclusive between the parties as to the matters adjudged." Klauber v. San Diego St. Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 107, 32 Pac. 876. The first of the judgments appealed from must accordingly be affirmed.

[2] On the appeal in L. A. No. 4600 we are, however, at liberty to consider the appellant's contention that the former decision of this court was erroneous, and that it should not be followed. That decision has, to be sure, the persuasive force attaching to any deliberate expression of the court. No property rights appear, however, to have been acquired on the faith of the ruling, and if, upon further consideration, we should feel satisfied that a wrong conclusion was reached, it is right and proper that we should so declare, to the end that the true rule, as we now see it, should be established and enforced.

The essential facts are stated in the opening paragraph of the opinion in the earlier case:

"Appellant is the tenant of certain lands under a lease from the city of Long Beach, which lease acquires validity through a ratifying act of the Legislature. It is, in legal contemplation, a lease by the state of certain of its tide and submerged lands. The city of Los Angeles assessed this leasehold and levied a tax thereon which by appellant [plaintiff] was paid under protest. In due time appellant [plaintiff] brought its action for the recovery of the tax."

The single question, as stated in the opinion to which we have referred, is "whether under the laws of this state it is contemplated that leasehold interests, such as this, may be taxed to the lessees." Considering this question, the department held, in effect, that while a leasehold is, "under certain circumstances and for certain purposes," property, it is not property within the meaning of our fiscal laws.

[That a leasehold interest is property is a proposition not open to dispute. "The thing of which there may be ownership is called 'property.'" Civ. Code, § 654. Interests in real property are called "estates." Civ. Code, § 701. They are classified by section 761 of the same Code as (1) estates of inheritance; (2) estates for life; (3) estates for years; (4) estates at will. The interest of the plaintiff under the lease from the state is an estate for years. There may be ownership of such estate. It is therefore property.

[Is it property for the purposes of taxation? Our Constitution declares (article 13, § 1): "All property in the state, except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. * * *" The section exempts property belonging to the state, and certain other kinds of property, not including interests like the one here involved. With respect to all property not so exempted, the provision of the Constitution that it shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law, is direct and mandatory. Const. art. 1, § 22. The provision for the taxation of all property not exempt is repeated in section 3607 of the Political Code.

[The constitutional provision is not self-executing. It imposes upon the Legislature the duty of providing a mode whereby to ascertain the value of the property to be taxed. McHenry v. Downer, 116 Cal. 20, 24, 47 Pac. 779, 45 L. R. A. 737. See De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463, 468, 56 Am. Dec. 352. If, then, the Legislature had not provided any mode for the assessment of leasehold estates, it might well be said, as was said in the former opinion, that such an estate is not "property for the purposes of taxation" under our fiscal laws. But there does not appear to be any such deficiency in our revenue laws. Section 3617 of the Political Code declares that the term "property" includes "all matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership," and that the term "real estate" includes "the possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to the possession of land." A leasehold estate carries a right to the possession of the land leased. Civ. Code, § 819. It is therefore real property within the above definition. Other sections of the Political Code provide for the listing of real property, the description and valuation thereof, and contain a complete scheme for the assessment of the property, and the levy and collection of the taxes. This scheme is as readily adaptable to an estate for years as to a freehold estate.

[It is true that the Code makes no specific provision for separate assessments of leasehold and reversion to the lessee and the owner of the fee, respectively. The usual procedure in this state, as elsewhere, has been to assess the entire value of the land to the owner of the reversion. Such assessment covers the value of the leasehold as well as of the reversionary interest, the sum of the two being comprised in the value of a complete ownership of the land. Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara, 155 Cal. 140, 99 Pac. 483, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211. The state thus receives the tax upon every interest in the land, and the requirement of the Constitution, and of section 3607 of the Political Code, is satisfied. Where, however, the state owns the reversion, its reversionary interest, like all property owned by it, is exempt from taxation. In such a case it cannot be said that the private property right of the lessee is taxed through the medium of the taxation of the interest of the owner. Still less can it properly be said that because the interest of the state is not taxable, the private owner of a leasehold interest should be exempt from paying taxes upon the property that is owned by him.

[An illuminating discussion of the question is found in Trimble v. Seattle, 231 U. S. 683, 34 Sup. Ct. 218, 58 L. Ed. 435, a case which was not called to the attention of the Department on the former appeal. The Supreme Court of Washington had upheld an assessment on certain leaseholds of tidelands owned by the state. The assessment of the leaseholds was authorized by statutes enacted after the execution of the leases by the state. A writ of error was granted to review the judgment of the state court. The plaintiff in error contended that the leases imported an obligation that the lessor should pay all taxes and assessments, and that the federal Constitution prohibited the impairment of this contract by a subsequent law. The Supreme Court of the United States held that no such obligation was included in the lease, saying:

"In ordinary cases the whole property is taxed and which party shall bear the burden is not a matter of public concern. But when the state makes the lease, the supposed obligation would be an obligation not to tax—a restriction of public import not lightly to be imposed [citing cases]. It is urged that to deny the state's obligation discriminates unconstitutionally against this class of lessees, since all others are free from the burden. But that is not true. Whether landlord or tenant shall pay a tax is a matter of private arrangement, and the practice one way or the other has no bearing on the matter. The argument from inequality really works the other way. If these leaseholds are not taxable, they are a favored class of property; for ordinarily leaseholds are taxed even if they are lumped and included in the value of the fee. When an interest in land, whether freehold or for years, is severed from the public domain and put into private hands, the natural implication is that it goes there with the ordinary incidents of private property and therefore is subject to being taxed."

[In Graciosa Oil Company v. Santa Barbara, supra, a separate assessment of a leasehold interest to the lessee was upheld. The case was discussed at some length in the opinion on the former appeal in the first of the cases before us, and it was pointed out that the lease in the Graciosa Case carried with it a right to take a part of the substance of the land itself. There is, no doubt, a distinction between the grant of such right and an "ordinary lease for usufructuary purposes," and it may be conceded that the decision in the Graciosa Case is not a controlling authority in favor of the appellant's contention here. On the other hand, that decision does not, as suggested by the former opinion dealing with the rights of the parties to the present appeals, support the respondent's position that its leasehold interest is not taxable. What was said in Graciosa Oil Company v. Santa Barbara regarding the mode of taxing property leased by one private individual to another had no reference to a case like this, where the lessor is a governmental agency whose property is exempt from taxation. The opinion fully recognizes that, in the usual case, the assessment to the owner of the fee includes the value of both the reversion and the leasehold interest, and that, under such conditions, both interests are assessed, and the mandate of the Constitution is followed.

[The principle that a possessory right in public land is private property, and that it may be assessed for purposes of taxation to the person in possession, although in point of law he may have no right as against the state or government owning the land, has long been settled in this state. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 646, 655; People v. Frisbie, 31 Cal. 146; People v. Cohen, 31 Cal. 210. The first two of these cases are referred to in the decision of the first appeal in San Pedro, etc., R. Co. v. Los Angeles, and they are sought to be distinguished upon the ground that the possession of the claimant was one designed to ripen into an ownership of the fee, under the land laws of the United States. But a careful examination will show that this ground of distinction is not tenable. In the Shearer Case the court pointed out that the occupant had not made the payment which was necessary to vest in him any legal or equitable right as against the government. He was, however, in possession, and his right as possessor was held to be property subject to taxation. The court said:

"[The possession itself of the public lands and the improvements thereon, whether by naked trespassers, or those who claim in addition a right of pre-emption, as to everybody except the United States, have always in California, and in most, if not all of the new states, been regarded as valuable property interests. The transfers of such possession and improvements have always been held to constitute a valuable consideration for a promise. The possessors often derive and enjoy large revenues from them. Contracts for such possession, and rights growing out of them, are constantly recognized, protected, and enforced by the courts, and, in this state, a very large share of the litigation in the courts maintained by means arising from taxation grows out of this very class of rights. * * * Such possession of the public lands, and the improvements put upon them, are therefore, recognized and protected as a valuable species of property in the possessor."

[It was further said that these possessions "exist wholly independent of pre-emption laws, without any pre-emption right or intention to claim such right, and always anterior to the existence of those rights. * * * And this property is property in the citizen or inhabitant having possession, and not in the United States. This property, so recognized and protected, in our judgment is clearly not exempt from taxation." Page 660. And accordingly it was held that such possessory rights should be assessed and that "the value of the possessory right should be put down and not the value of the land itself," as the basis of the assessment for taxation. A mandate was issued to the assessor to compel him to do so.

[This conclusion was reached regardless of whether the person in possession was intending to claim as pre-emptioner or homesteader, or whether his possession could ever have ripened into a fee. Nor was the decision in People v. Frisbie put upon any such theory. Each of these cases was decided upon the ground that possession of land, with or without right or expectation of right or title from the government, was a species of property in the possessor, and as such subject to taxation. The inability to tax the fee vested in the public is therefore no obstacle to the taxation of the possessory right, whatever its nature may be. If a bare possession by the sufferance of the real owner is subject to taxation where the estate of the real owner is exempt because the state or the United States is such real owner, it is impossible to uphold the proposition that the estate of one holding a valid estate for years under lease from the state is not subject to taxation. That estate is not included in any assessment to the landlord or owner of the estate in remainder.

[We do not agree with the suggestion made in the closing paragraph of the decision in 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N.

S.) 991, that a holding that the plaintiff's leasehold interest is subject to assessment and taxation would make void every assessment against the owner of land subject to a lease without an assessment against the lessee of the value of his leasehold. As has already been said, in the ordinary case the value of the leasehold is included in the value assessed to the owner of the fee. What the Constitution and the law require is that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value. And this is done when the whole value of the land is assessed to the owner of the fee. Section 3628 of the Political Code provides that no mistake in the name of the owner of real property shall render the assessment thereof invalid. The validity of the assessment would not, therefore, be affected by the fact that the values of the several estates in the land are united in a single assessment in the name of the owner of one of such interests.]

We conclude, therefore, that the department decision in San Pedro, etc., R. Co. v. Los Angeles, 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, should not be followed.

In L. A. No. 4504 the judgment is affirmed.

In L. A. No. 4600 the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment on the findings in favor of the defendant.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; WILBUR, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; LORIGAN, J.

MELVIN, J. I dissent from order of reversal in the case designated as L. A. No. 4600, and adhere to the views expressed in the opinion in San Pedro, etc., Co. v. Los Angeles, 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, which has been the declared law of this state upon this subject for more than four years. It seems to me highly probable that property rights have been acquired under the rule announced in that case and in reliance thereon. Moreover, I believe that the opinion delivered in Department and so long unquestioned is in accord with the better reason and the weight of authority.

SAN PEDRO, L. A. & S. L. R. CO. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 4600.)

1. TAXATION $\S$ 178 — "PROPERTY" — TIDE-LANDS LEASED FROM STATE — "ESTATE FOR YEARS."

Under Civ. Code, § 654, defining "property" as that of which there may be ownership, section 701, describing interests in real property as estates, and section 761, classifying estates as those of inheritance, for life, for years, and at will, the interest of one under lease of tide-lands from the state is an "estate for years," and is property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Estate for Years; Property.]

2. TAXATION $\S$ 49 — CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—TAXATION ACCORDING TO VALUE.

Const. art. 1, § 22, declaring that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, is direct and mandatory.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW $\S$ 29 — SELF-EXECUTING PROVISIONS — TAXATION ACCORDING TO VALUE.

Const. art. 1, § 22, and article 13, § 1, requiring all property to be taxed in proportion to its value, are not self-executing, but impose on the Legislature the duty of providing a mode to ascertain the value of the property to be taxed.

4. TAXATION $\S$ 64—NATURE OF PROPERTY—LEASEHOLD ESTATE—"REAL PROPERTY."

Under Pol. Code, § 3617, defining property as all things capable of private ownership, and Civ. Code, § 819, providing that a leasehold estate carries a right to possession of the land, a leasehold in tide and submerged lands from the state is "real property," for the purposes of taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Real Property.]

5. TAXATION $\S$ 338—MODE OF ASSESSMENT—FEE AND LEASEHOLD.

The requirement of Pol. Code, § 3607, that all property shall be taxed, is satisfied as to land in which there is a fee and a leasehold, by the taxation of the entire value of the fee; but if the state owns the fee, and the land is leased, the leasehold may be taxed apart from the fee.

6. TAXATION $\S$ 178 — PROPERTY SUBJECT—POSSESSORY RIGHT IN PUBLIC LAND — "PRIVATE PROPERTY."

A possessory right in public land is "private property," and may be assessed for purposes of taxation to the person in possession, although in point of law he may have no right as against the state, which owns the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Private Property.]

7. TAXATION $\S$ 338 — SEPARATE ASSESSMENT OF FEE AND LEASEHOLD.

A ruling that, when state-owned property is leased, the leasehold is subject to taxation, does not, in view of Pol. Code, § 3628, make void every levy of a tax against private-owned property which is leased, although there is no separate assessment against the leasehold.

8. TAXATION $\S$ 65—"IMPROVEMENT."

Where a lessee of tide and submerged land builds a stone retaining wall and fills in submerged land, by depositing thereon earth and sand, raising level of surface above line of high tide, fill so made is not an "improvement," within meaning of Pol. Code, § 3617, relating to taxation of improvements.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Improvement.]

9. TAXATION — 441 — ASSESSMENT — PARTIAL VALIDITY.

Where an assessor includes and blends in an assessment property not legally assessable, the entire assessment is void.

Melvin, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company against the City of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., C. S. Burnell, Asst. City Atty., and Jess E. Stephens, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. E. Bennett, Fred E. Pettit, Jr., and James E. Kelby, all of Los Angeles (A. S. Halsted and Dana T. Smith, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff is lessee of certain tidelands situated in the city of Los Angeles and belonging to the state. The city assessed this leasehold estate and levied a tax thereon, which plaintiff paid under protest and in due time brought this action to recover the same. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which the defendant appealed.

On a hearing heretofore had of the case, it was considered in connection with L. A. No. 4504, entitled San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake R. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 179 Pac. 390, which, as to the power of the municipality to assess a leasehold estate in such property for the purpose of levying a tax thereon, involved the same questions. The latter case, however, had been before the court on a former appeal prosecuted by the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the city upon sustaining its demurrer to the complaint, with the result that the judgment was reversed. See San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991. Upon going down of the remittitur the city was permitted to file an answer, and upon trial a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, from which the city appealed. The hearing of the two cases thus considered together resulted in an affirmance of L. A. No. 4504, based solely upon the ground that the former decision thereof, as reported in 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, constituted the law of the case. As to the case now under consideration, however, the court took a different view of the question involved, and reversed the judgment rendered against the city. Thereafter the petition of the city of Los Angeles, as appellant in L. A. No. 4504, for a rehearing, was denied, thus finally disposing of the subject of litigation involved therein. A like petition for a rehearing was presented by the plaintiff in L. A. No. 4600, being the case now under consideration, which was granted, upon the sole ground that the court had failed to consider the question as to the assessment made of certain alleged improvements upon the leasehold. By an order made, granting said rehearing, the court restricted further argument to the question alone of the validity of the assessment of the alleged improvements. See Minutes, September 11, 1918, 56 Cal. Dec. No. 2969.

The question to which the court on the former consideration of the case addressed itself and to which the chief argument of counsel was directed, was whether the laws of this state authorize the taxation of leasehold interests in the tidelands of the state. Upon this point, holding that municipalities have such power, we adopt the opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss, filed at the former hearing of the appeal, which is as follows:

[1] "That a leasehold interest is property is a proposition not open to dispute. 'The thing of which there may be ownership is called "property."' Civ. Code, § 654. Interests in real property are called 'estates,' Civ. Code, § 701. They are classified by section 761 of the same Code as (1) estates of inheritance; (2) estates for life; (3) estates for years; (4) estates at will. The interest of the plaintiff under the lease from the state is an estate for years. There may be ownership of such estate. It is therefore property.

[2] "Is it property for the purposes of taxation? Our Constitution declares (article 13, § 1) 'All property in the state, except as otherwise in this Constitution provided, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. * * *' The section exempts property belonging to the state, and certain other kinds of property, not including interests like the one here involved. With respect to all property not so exempted, the provision of the Constitution that it shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law, is direct and mandatory. Const. art. 1, § 22. The provision for the taxation of all property not exempt is repeated in section 3607 of the Political Code.

[3, 4] "The constitutional provision is not self-executing. It imposes upon the Legislature the duty of providing a mode whereby to ascertain the value of the property to be taxed. McHenry v. Downer, 116 Cal. 20, 24, 47 Pac. 779, 45 L. R. A. 737. See De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463, 468, 56 Am. Dec. 352. If, then, the Legislature had not provided any mode for the assessment of leasehold estates, it might well be said, as was said in the former opinion, that such an estate is not 'property for the purposes of taxation' under our fiscal laws. But there does not appear to be any such deficiency in our revenue laws. Section 3617 of the Political Code declares that the term 'property' includes 'all matters and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership,' and that the term 'real estate' includes 'the possession of, claim to, ownership of, or right to the possession of land.' A leasehold estate carries a right to the possession of the land leased. Civ. Code, § 819. It is therefore real property within the above definition. Other sections of the Political Code provide for the listing of real property, the description and valuation thereof, and contain a complete scheme for the assessment of the property, and the levy and collection of the taxes. This scheme is as readily adaptable to an estate for years as to a freehold estate.

[5] "It is true that the Code makes no specific provision for separate assessments of leasehold and reversion to the lessee and the owner of the fee, respectively. The usual procedure in this state, as elsewhere, has been to assess the entire value of the land to the owner of the reversion. Such assessment covers the value of the leasehold as well as of the reversionary interest, the sum of the two being comprised in the value of a complete ownership of the land. Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara, 155 Cal. 140, 99 Pac. 483, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 211. The state thus receives the tax upon every interest in the land, and the requirement of the Constitution, and of section 3607 of the Political Code, is satisfied. Where, however, the state owns the reversion, its reversionary interest, like all property owned by it, is exempt from taxation. In such a case it cannot be said that the private property right of the lessee is taxed through the medium of the taxation of the interest of the owner. Still less can it properly be said that because the interest of the state is not taxable, the private owner of a leasehold interest should be exempt from paying taxes upon the property that is owned by him.

"An illuminating discussion of the question is found in Trimble v. Seattle, 231 U. S. 683, 34 Sup. Ct. 218, 58 L. Ed. 435, a case which was not called to the attention of the Department on the former appeal. The Supreme Court of Washington had upheld an assessment on certain leaseholds of tidelands owned by the state. The assessment of the leaseholds was authorized by statutes enacted after the execution of the leases by the state. A writ of error was granted to review the judgment of the state court. The plaintiff in error contended that the leases imported an obligation that the lessor should pay all taxes and assessments, and that the federal Constitution prohibited the impairment of this contract by a subsequent law. The Supreme Court of the United States held that no such obligation was included in the lease, saying:

"In ordinary cases the whole property is taxed and which party shall bear the burden is not a matter of public concern. But when the states makes the lease, the supposed obligation would be an obligation not to tax—a restriction of public import not lightly to be imposed [citing cases]. It is urged that to deny the state's obligation discriminates unconstitutionally against this class of lessees, since all others are free from the burden. But that is not true.

Whether landlord or tenant shall pay a tax is a matter of private arrangement, and the practice one way or the other has no bearing on the matter. The argument from inequality really works the other way. If these leaseholds are not taxable, they are a favored class of property; for ordinarily leaseholds are taxed even if they are lumped and included in the value of the fee. When an interest in land, whether freehold or for years, is severed from the public domain and put into private hands, the natural implication is that it goes there with the ordinary incidents of private property and therefore is subject to being taxed."

"In Graciosa Oil Company v. Santa Barbara, supra, a separate assessment of a leasehold interest to the lessee was upheld. The case was discussed at some length in the opinion on the former appeal in the first of the cases before us, and it was pointed out that the lease in the Graciosa Case carried with it a right to take a part of the substance of the land itself. There is, no doubt, a distinction between the grant of such right and an 'ordinary lease for usufructuary purposes,' and it may be conceded that the decision in the Graciosa Case is not a controlling authority in favor of the appellant's contention here. On the other hand, that decision does not, as suggested by the former opinion dealing with the rights of the parties to the present appeals, support the respondent's position that its leasehold interest is not taxable. What was said in Graciosa Oil Company v. Santa Barbara regarding the mode of taxing property leased by one private individual to another had no reference to a case like this, where the lessor is a governmental agency whose property is exempt from taxation. The opinion fully recognizes that, in the usual case, the assessment to the owner of the fee includes the value of both the reversion and the leasehold interest, and that, under such conditions, both interests are assessed, and the mandate of the Constitution is followed.

[6] "The principle that a possessory right in public land is private property, and that it may be assessed for purposes of taxation to the person in possession, although in point of law he may have no right as against the state or government owning the land, has long been settled in this state. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 646, 655; People v. Frisbie, 31 Cal. 146; People v. Cohen, 31 Cal. 210. The first two of these cases are referred to in the decision of the first appeal in San Pedro, etc., R. Co. v. Los Angeles, and they are sought to be distinguished upon the ground that the possession of the claimant was one designed to ripen into an ownership of the fee, under the land laws of the United States. But a careful examination will show that this ground of distinction is not tenable. In the Shearer Case the court pointed out that the occupant had not made the payment which was necessary to vest in him any legal or equitable right as against the government. He was, however, in possession, and his right as possessor was held to be property subject to taxation. The court said: 'The possession itself of the public lands and the improvements thereon, whether by naked trespassers, or those who claim in addition a right of pre-emption, as to everybody except the United States, have always in California, and in most, if not all of the new states, been regarded as valuable property interests. The transfers of such possession and improvements have always been held to constitute a valuable consideration for a promise. The possessors often derive and enjoy large revenues from them. Contracts for such possession, and rights growing out of them, are constantly recognized, protected, and enforced by the courts, and, in this state, a very large share of the litigation in the courts maintained by means arising from taxation grows out of this very class of rights. * * * Such possession of the public lands, and the improvements put upon them, are therefore recognized and protected as a valuable species of property in the possessor.' It was further said that these possessions 'exist wholly independent of pre-emption laws, without any pre-emption right or intention to claim such right, and always anterior to the existence of those rights. * * * And this property is property in the citizen or inhabitant having possession, and not in the United States. This property, so recognized and protected, in our judgment is clearly not exempt from taxation.' Page 660. And accordingly it was held that such possessory rights should be assessed and that 'the value of the possessory right should be put down and not the value of the land itself,' as the basis of the assessment for taxation. A mandate was issued to the assessor to compel him to do so.

"This conclusion was reached regardless of whether the person in possession was intending to claim as pre-emptor or homesteader, or whether his possession could ever have ripened into a fee. Nor was the decision in People v. Frisbie put upon any such theory. Each of these cases was decided upon the ground that possession of land, with or without right or expectation of right or title from the government, was a species of property in the possessor, and as such subject to taxation. The inability to tax the fee vested in the public is therefore no obstacle to the taxation of the possessory right, whatever its nature may be. If a bare possession by the sufferance of the real owner is subject to taxation where the estate of the real owner is exempt because the state or the United States is such real owner, it is impossible to uphold the proposition that the estate of one holding a valid estate for years under lease from the state is not subject to taxation. That estate is not included in any assessment to the landlord or owner of the estate in remainder.

[7] "We do not agree with the suggestion made in the closing paragraph of the decision in 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, that a holding that the plaintiff's leasehold interest is subject to assessment and taxation would make void every assessment against the owner of land subject to a lease without an assessment against the lessee of the value of his leasehold. As has already been said, in the ordinary case the value of the leasehold is included in the value assessed to the owner of the fee. What the Constitution and the law require is that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value. And this is done when the whole value of the land is assessed to the owner of the fee. Section 3628 of the Political Code provides that no mistake in the name of the owner of real property shall render the assessment thereof invalid. The validity of the assessment would not, therefore, be affected by the fact that the values of the several estates in the land are united in a single assessment in the name of the owner of one of such interests."

Upon the views thus expressed, it follows that the decision in 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, must be deemed overruled.

[8] The improvements upon the leasehold were assessed at the sum of $92,850, upon which a tax of $1,151.35 was levied. As described in the assessment book, the property assessed was:

"Improvement on a tract of land leased from Long Beach city to S. P., L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., dated October 2, 1905, for 46 years, for land and water rights in 61.90 acres, being that part of fill lying south of Terminal Island and north of strip reserved by city, in section 18, T. 5 S., R. 13 W."

The court found, as alleged in the answer of defendant, that after the execution of said lease, but prior to the assessment, plaintiff constructed a breakwater of rocks upon said premises and along the southerly line thereof, and filled or caused to be filled with earth and sand the lands lying between the mainland and said breakwater, by dredging in such manner that all of the lands described in said lease were at the time of such assessment no longer submerged, but dry lands lying above the line of high water. It thus appears that the improvements consisted of a stone retaining wall or breakwater built of rock and the filling in of the submerged land by depositing thereon earth and sand to a depth or thickness sufficient to raise the level of the surface above the line of high tide. In its supplemental brief, counsel for the city, which is the appellant here, concede that respondent is correct in its contention that the fill so made upon the land is not an improvement within the meaning of section 3617, Political Code, which defines improvements as "all buildings, structures, fixtures, fences and improvements erected upon or affixed to the land, except telephone and telegraph lines." We are in full accord with this agreed view of the subject of the parties. The fill was not an "improvement erected or affixed to the land," but, when made, was a part of the realty; indeed, it was the land itself, the surface of which was changed by bringing it to a higher grade. Surely it could not be said the tenant would be entitled to remove this fill at the expiration of the lease by virtue of a provision contained therein to the effect that it might remove all improvements made. In the case of Kern Valley, etc., Co. v. County of Kern, 137 Cal. 511, 70 Pac. 476, the court had under consideration the question as to whether the embankments and levees constructed along the margin of a canal constituted an improvement within the meaning of section 3617, Political Code, or was a part of the canal. The court said:

"We do not think this definition [section 3617] can be said to include embankments or banks forming the margin of the canal, and it was therefore proper to include the levees as part of the canal."

So here, we think the fill was not an improvement within the meaning of the section, but when made constituted the realty itself, the fee of which was in the state, and hence not subject to assessment.

[9] While appellant concedes the fill is not subject to assessment, it insists that as an abstract proposition of law the breakwater constructed of rock is an improvement within the meaning of section 3617, and as such assessable for taxation. It is unnecessary to determine such question. The assessment was not merely for improvements upon the leasehold; hence we can indulge in no presumption that the assessor in making the assessment included therein only such property as was legally assessable. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles, 160 Cal. 124, 116 Pac. 564. It conclusively appears that the breakwater was not separately assessed, but included in the assessment with the fill with which unlawful assessment it is indivisible. Therefore, conceding the breakwater to be assessable, the assessment thereof, as shown by the record, is so blended with the assessment of the fill that it renders the entire assessment void. People of the State of California v. Central Pacific R. Co. [127 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150] and County of Santa Clara v. Southern Pacific Co., 118 U. S. 394, 6 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 118. "If the different parts, lawful and unlawful, are blended together in one indivisible assessment, it makes the entire assessment illegal." California v. Central Pacific R. Co., 127 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 1073, 32 L. Ed. 150. Indeed, appellant recognizes this fact and concedes "that the judgment should be sustained in so far as the assessment upon improvements is concerned."

The judgment, in so far as it declares the assessment upon the improvements void, is affirmed, and in so far as it in effect adjudges the assessment of the leasehold estate void, is reversed, and the trial court is directed to modify the judgment in accordance herewith.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; WILBUR, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.

MELVIN, J. I dissent from that part of the foregoing opinion which readopts the opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss filed at the former hearing of the appeals, and I adhere to the views expressed in the opinion in San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. Los Angeles, 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, which has been the declared law of this state upon this subject for more than four years. That property rights have been acquired under the rule announced in that case and in reliance thereon seems to me to be without the possibility of a doubt. Whether the state or its mandatories charge a lessee additional rental under the guise of a tax or merely by arbitrarily increasing the demand and still calling the exaction rent makes no difference, it seems to me. It is in either case a violation of the lessee's contract to enjoy land exempt from taxation for a certain stipulated payment. It cannot justly be said, therefore, it seems to me, that no property rights appear to have been acquired upon the faith of the ruling in the former appeal in L. A. No. 4504. The arguments which impel the application of the rule of "law of the case" in that appeal seem to me equally to apply to this. The Constitution and statutes as interpreted by this court form a part of every contract, and I cannot see how this court may now violate the obligation of one contract made and partly performed on the faith of an interpretation now held to be erroneous, while at the same time an exactly similar contract is pronounced inviolable because of "the law of the case."

One reason for the "rule of property" is the presumed dependence upon judicial decisions. In 11 Cyc. 755, the principle is thus stated:

"Where judicial decisions may fairly be presumed to have entered into the business transactions of a country and have been acted upon as a rule of contracts and property, it is the duty of the court, on the principle of stare decisis, to adhere to such decisions without regard to how it might be inclined to decide if the question were new. And this rule obtains, although the court may be of the belief that such decisions are founded upon an erroneous principle and are not sound, for when parties have acted upon such decisions as settled law and rights have been vested thereunder, their inherent correctness or incorrectness in the abstract are of less importance than that the rule of property so established should be constant and invariable. So such a rule controls as to decisions involving questions of constitutional law and the construction and operation of statutes."

The text is supported by a wealth of citation, including such cases as Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 53 Pac. 813, and Smith v. McDonald, 42 Cal. 484. That this rule should find application to the case here considered is emphasized when we remember that the lessee has spent large sums in the betterment of the property. It is a logical, indeed almost an inevitable, conclusion that the amount of these expenditures was governed, in some degree, by the supposed exemption in favor of the plaintiff.

In the opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss, approved by the majority of the Justices of this court, the following paragraph seems to me to be particularly erroneous:

"We do not agree with the suggestion made in the closing paragraph of the decision in 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, that a holding that the plaintiff's leasehold interest is subject to assessment and taxation would make void every assessment against the owner of land subject to a lease without an assessment against the lessee of the value of his leasehold. As has already been said, in the ordinary case the value of the leasehold is included in the value assessed to the owner of the fee. What the Constitution and the law require is that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value. And this is done when the whole value of the land is assessed to the owner of the fee. Section 3628 of the Political Code provides that no mistake in the name of the owner of real property shall render the assessment thereof invalid. The validity of the assessment would not, therefore, be affected by the fact that the values of the several estates in the land are united in a single assessment in the name of the owner of one of such interests."

This reasoning takes advantage of a statute intended only to cover cases of misnomer, and excuses that which, if the rest of the opinion is correct, is an absolute misassessment of property to the wrong owner, for the assessor knows in every case in which there is a landlord and a tenant that the leasehold and the reversion belong to different individuals. The opinion contains nothing which in my judgment logically overcomes the following portions of the opinion in 167 Cal. 425, 139 Pac. 1071, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, written by Mr. Justice Henshaw and cited above:

"No assessor has the right to assess and tax the leasehold interest, if it be taxable at all against the fee which belongs in the remainderman or reversioner, for our laws are just and mandatory to the effect that property shall be assessed against the true owner and in the name of the true owner. Pol. Code, §§ 3627, 3636. And if it be held that in general a leasehold is property having a taxable value within our fiscal statutes, it must necessarily follow that every assessment which 'includes the value of both the estate for years and of the remainder or reversion,' which is levied against the landlord, is void as being an assessment against property not his own. The foundation for the rule which ignores the leasehold and puts the assessment of the whole estate upon the landlord, is that the leasehold, while property for certain purposes, yet for fiscal purposes is not property at all; and as the tenant may not deny his landlord's title, so his possession is but the landlord's possession, and the value of that possession, whatever it may be, is therefore the property of the landlord and assessable against him. The tenant's right to possession is always in subordination to the landlord's paramount right, and in the eye of the law is no more separate property apart from the landlord's property than would be the landlord's permission to use a part of his land for a private right of way. The true reason, therefore, why, in general, leaseholds conveying the right to possession, with the usual usufructuary rights, are not assessable against the tenant, is that they are not, for fiscal purposes, regarded as property. * * * If, under these circumstances, we are to hold that this leasehold is property within the meaning of our fiscal laws, every leasehold must equally be declared to be properly subject to assessment and taxation. The immediate result of this would be to force a declaration that, in every case where a lease is in existence, the assessment against the owner for the full value of the property, without an assessment against the lessee of the value of his leasehold is void. Such a disturbance of our fiscal system is not to be contemplated, saving under the plain mandate of the Legislature, and no such mandate has as yet been pronounced."

And in the future assessors may not keep their official oaths if they continue to assess leasehold interests to the owners of the fees. They cannot plead mistake, and so take advantage of section 3628 of the Political Code, because they must know, as everybody knows, that commonly leaseholds and reversions belong to different individuals. I sincerely regret that in this later decision the majority of this court is thus disturbing our fiscal system.

PACIFIC WHARF & STORAGE CO. v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY (two cases).
(L. A. 4279, 4317.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1919.)

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk and Leslie R. Hewitt, Judges.

Two actions by the Pacific Wharf & Storage Company against the County of Los Angeles. Judgments for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Roy V. Reppy, Asst. County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Goodwin & Morgrave, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff in both actions is lessee of certain tidelands belonging to the state and situated in the county of Los Angeles, which assessed the leasehold and levied a tax thereon. Plaintiff paid the tax under protest, and in due time sued to recover the same. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant has appealed.

The sole question involved is whether a leasehold interest in tide and submerged lands owned by the state is subject to assessment and taxation under the revenue laws thereof. The subject is fully discussed, and answered in the affirmative, by what is said in the opinion this day filed in the case of San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake R. R. Co. v. City of Los Angeles (L. A. No. 4600), 179 Pac. 393, which involved a like question. Upon the authority thereof, the judgments in both cases are reversed.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J., and VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem., SLOSS and WILBUR, JJ., and RICHARDS, Judge pro tem., concur.

39 Cal. App. 11

* KERR v. REED et al. (Civ. 2607.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 29, 1918.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐97—CONTRACT OF SALE—FORFEITURE.

In view of Civ. Code, § 1439, a purchaser under contract of sale of land did not forfeit his contract by a mere failure to make final payment due, including execution of a mortgage and note.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐334(5)—CONTRACT OF SALE—BREACH BY VENDOR—ACTION FOR RETURN OF MONEY PAID.

Where vendor in contract of sale of land conveys land to a third person without vendee's consent, and under such circumstances that vendee's rights are not protected, vendee may abandon contract and recover money paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by John N. Kerr against David C. Reed and Juliet C. Reed. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Dwight D. Bell, of San Diego, for appellant.

Luce & Luce, of San Diego, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. On or about the 4th day of December, 1912, an agreement in writing was entered into between the defendants as vendors and the plaintiff as vendee, whereby the defendants agreed to sell and convey to the plaintiff certain real property in the city of San Diego. The purchase price was $25,000, of which $5,000 was paid upon the signing of the agreement. It was provided that—

The purchaser would pay the sum of $5,000 on or before one year from the date of the contract, "and the balance of $15,000 to be paid by note and mortgage, executed by the party of the second part or his assigns in favor of the parties of the first part, and to be secured by the property described herein. Said mortgage to become due three years from date hereof, and to be executed at the time of the second payment of this agreement, and to draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly. All deferred payments to draw 6 per cent. interest per annum, payable quarterly from date hereof."

The contract further provided as follows:

"And the party of the second part agrees to pay all state, municipal and county taxes and assessments of whatsoever nature which are or may become due on the premises above described after date hereof. Time is hereby declared to be of the essence of this contract, and should purchaser fail or neglect to make said deferred payments, or any of them, at the times and in the manner herein provided, then and in that event this receipt and contract shall at once become null and void, and the said parties of the first part shall be at once released from any and all obligations to make any conveyance hereunder, or to convey the property herein described to said purchaser. It being agreed that it is impossible to fix and determine the actual damage arising out of the failure of said purchaser to make said deferred payments, it is hereby agreed that all moneys paid upon the purchase price of said property shall be by the parties of the first part retained and held as and for liquidated damages arising and caused by the failure of the said purchaser to comply with the terms hereof. And the parties of the first part, on receiving such payment, at the time and in the manner above mentioned agree to execute and deliver to the party of the second part or his assigns, a good and sufficient deed conveying said property to said party of the second part or his lawful assigns, and to furnish a certificate of title from the Union Title & Trust Company, showing property free and clear of incumbrance from date of November 23, 1912."

In this action the plaintiff seeks to recover all moneys paid by him under said contract, being the $5,000 paid as above stated, and certain interest payments made prior to December 4, 1913, and certain other small sums which plaintiff claims that after December 4, 1913, he paid on account of interest. The complaint, after setting forth the terms of the contract by copy thereof, alleged that it was the understanding and intention of the parties that the plaintiff was to have possession and control of the premises described in the contract, and that immediately upon the execution and delivery of the contract the defendants delivered to and the plaintiff accepted possession and control of said premises; that afterwards, on or about the 15th day of June, 1914, or thereafter and prior to the commencement of this action, the property was sold by the defendants to one Horace B. Day. On or about July 14, 1914, the defendants conveyed the property in question to the said Horace B. Day, who recorded his deed at that time and who did not at that time know of the existence of said contract between the plaintiff and the defendants and did not know that plaintiff claimed or had any interest in or to the property. Said Horace B. Day took and received said property for value and in good faith. The defendants made said conveyance to Horace B. Day without reserving or protecting the plaintiff's rights under his contract. The said contract was never recorded. The foregoing statements of fact are contained in the complaint and are not denied by the answer, except that defendants deny that any payment on account of the contract was made on or after December 4, 1913.

Omitting a detailed statement of those allegations of the complaint which are denied by the answer, it suffices to say that the complaint alleges that the plaintiff remained in possession and control of the property described in the contract until on or about the 15th day of June, 1914, whereas the answer denies that plaintiff retained such possession or control after December 4, 1913. The complaint further alleges that, at all times except as in the complaint mentioned, the defendants and each of them treated said contract as in existence and in full force and effect, and that on or about the 15th day of June, 1914, the defendants and each of them refused longer to be governed by said contract or observe the conditions and obligations thereof to be by them observed and performed, and rescinded, repudiated, and abandoned the said contract by resuming possession and control of the land and premises mentioned in the contract, and by selling the same and conveying the same as before stated, and by the defendant D. C. Reed notifying this plaintiff that he, said plaintiff, no longer had any interest in and to said land and premises described in the contract; that the plaintiff accepted and acquiesced in the said rescission, and on or about the 30th day of July, 1914, the plaintiff demanded of the defendants the moneys he had paid under said contract, minus the reasonable value for the use and occupation of the premises and all rentals received by the plaintiff from said property during the time that he was in possession of the same, to wit, $5,600, and demanded the return of said contract from the defendants; with all of which demand the defendants refused to comply. On the contrary, the defendants by their answer deny that on or about the 15th day of June, 1914, the defendants refused longer to be governed by said contract or to observe the conditions or obligations thereof, but allege that the defendants assumed possession of the land mentioned in the contract on December 5, 1913; and allege that the said D. C. Reed notified the plaintiff immediately after he failed to make the deferred payment of December 4, 1913, that the plaintiff no longer had any interest in and to said land and premises.

The case came on for trial before the superior court without a jury. Oral and documentary evidence was introduced on behalf of the plaintiff. Plaintiff having rested, the defendants moved for judgment of nonsuit on the ground that upon the trial the plaintiff had failed to prove a sufficient case in this, that the action is brought for the recovery of a portion of the purchase money paid on a forfeited contract, that failure of payment has been shown on the contract December 4th, and that no waiver of the forfeiture has been shown by the evidence in the testimony. The motion was granted, and judgment of nonsuit was duly entered, from which judgment the plaintiff appeals. The plaintiff testified that on December 10, 1913, which was the first time that he saw defendant Reed after November 20, 1913, plaintiff told Reed that he had been unable to make the payment due on December 4th and would like to have some written agreement in regard to the forfeiture; that Reed told him not to worry, just to let it run along; that Reed did not then, or at any time prior to July, 1914, notify plaintiff that his contract was at an end, or was forfeited; that plaintiff told Reed that he could not make the interest payment as it was due, and Reed said "to do the best I could with it"; that in March, 1914, Reed told plaintiff that he had an opportunity to trade the property for certain bonds which Reed considered to have a stated value, and said "that at that price we could get our money out of it"; that Reed never offered to make a conveyance of the property to plaintiff.

[1, 2] The motion for nonsuit should have been denied. The contract rights of the plaintiff were not forfeited by his mere failure to make the final payment due from him on December 4, 1913. Civ. Code, § 1439; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 297, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126. The evidence is that the defendants never made any offer of performance of their obligations under the contract. The payment due from plaintiff on December 4, 1913, was not of an intermediate installment. It consisted of a certain sum of money, together with a note and mortgage. These together constituted the final payment then due. Concurrently with that final payment the property was to be conveyed to the vendee. On the performance of those concurrent acts, the contract would thereby be brought to an end. It follows, therefore (giving to the evidence the effect to which it was entitled on a motion for nonsuit), that, at the time when defendants made their conveyance to Horace B. Day, the contract rights of the plaintiff had not become forfeited.

The admitted facts in this case show not only that the defendants sold and conveyed the property to a third person during the time of existence of the plaintiff's contract and without the plaintiff's consent; they further show that such conveyance was made in disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, and under such circumstances that those rights were not protected. The facts bring the case within the rule stated in Brimmer v. Salisbury, 167 Cal. 522, 531, 140 Pac. 30, 34, where the point now under consideration was covered as follows:

"The gist of the matter then is this, that a vendee is entitled to rely upon the security of the vendor's title, whatever it may be, in the making of his installment payments. A vendor will not have breached his contract if he shall have conveyed the property subject to or under circumstances such as do protect the rights of his vendee. But where his conveyance has been in disregard of those rights, under such circumstances that those rights are not protected, then this is a breach of contract and a fraud on the vendee. Where a vendee contracts with one having none or an imperfect title, he contracts in the hope or expectation that the vendor may be able to perfect the title. Such is not the case where the vendor has title and thereafter parts with it. Of the essence of the contract is the security to the vendee, in his payments, of the title which the vendor has, and, if the vendor parts with that title to the impairment or destruction of that security, the vendee may be heard justly to complain, and it is of course no answer to say that the vendor thereafter may be able to go into the open market and repurchase the property. Common experience tells us that such an expectation is in its nature but a remote possibility and that such a vendor has not the slightest intention of so doing."

In Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, at page 10, 55 Pac. 713, at page 716, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, referring to the remedies which are open to the vendee upon a breach by the vendor of a covenant to convey, it is said that the vendee may treat the vendor's breach as an abandonment, and may himself abandon the contract "when, the contract having thus come to an end, he may sue at law to recover what he has paid, in an action for money had and received; for, the contract being at an end, the vendor holds money of the vendee to which he has no right, and to repay which, therefore, the law implies his promise." See, also, Pearson v. Brown, 27 Cal. App. 125, 148 Pac. 956. In the case at bar the admitted facts, together with the facts shown by the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, bring the plaintiff within the rule last above stated. The vendor having broken the contract, the vendee also abandoned it, and relies, as of right he may, upon his right to the return of money paid by him upon a consideration which has failed.

The judgment is reversed.

WHITE v. DEERING. (Civ. 1826.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 28, 1918.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⚡448
—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

A pleading setting up a claim against an estate for services "at an agreed price" changed by amendment to read "of the reasonable value" held not to change the cause of action from one on contract price to quantum meruit, since the remainder of the pleading states a cause of action either upon express or implied contract.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⚡227
(1)—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE—PLEADING.

A claim against an estate is not required to state the facts with all the precision and minuteness required in a complaint, and its sufficiency is not to be tested by the rules of pleading, and greater liberality should be allowed in amending such claims.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⚡221
(5) — CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE — VALUE OF SERVICES—EVIDENCE.

While there was no direct evidence as to value of the particular kind of services performed, yet it is apparent that it involved no special skill, and there was positive testimony as to reasonable value of unskilled labor, and the finding was for less than the amount claimed, it was supported by the evidence.

4. PLEADING ⚡237(7) — ALLEGATION OF TIME—AMENDMENT.

In an action upon a contract for work and labor, an allegation of time of performance is not controlling and not required to be proved literally, and it was not error to permit reasonable amendments.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⚡267
—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE—INTEREST.

A claim established against an estate by judgment will bear interest from the date of its presentation, although recovered upon quantum meruit, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, allowing interest on claims against estates, and section 1504, placing such claims on the same footing as if allowed by the executor and judge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Alexander White against Mabel C. Deering, as executrix of the last will and testament of Sophie P. Comstock, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, and Myrick & Deering, of San Francisco, for appellants.

C. E. McLaughlin and C. P. McLaughlin, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was to establish a claim against the estate of Sophie P. Comstock, deceased. The claim was properly presented, but was rejected by the executrix. Suit was thereupon brought in the superior court within the time required by the statute and plaintiff obtained judgment, from which the appeal has been taken.

The first item in the complaint was:

"To services rendered in carrying decedent from her room upstairs to lawn and from lawn to her room upstairs at an agreed price of $15 per month, $45."

This was also the exact language of the claim as presented to the executrix. The court permitted this averment of the complaint to be amended by striking out the words, "at an agreed price," and substituting therefor the words, "of the reasonable value."

[1] This action of the court is the occasion for the contention that the cause of action was changed, for the reason that the claim was based upon an express contract for an agreed price, while the amendment permitted recovery on quantum meruit. The basic and vital elements of the cause of action are the services performed and the amount due for said services. As to these elements, the two complaints are identical. Moreover, either the phrase "at an agreed price" or "of the reasonable value" may be eliminated from the original or the amended complaint, respectively, and what remains states a cause of action either upon an express or implied contract. Neither of these phrases is, therefore, material to the statement of a cause of action, and the substitution of one for the other does not change the essential aspect of the case, although, we may add that, if it did not appear in the complaint whether there was an express contract, a demurrer might lie for uncertainty. Indeed, the question has been carefully considered by the appellate courts of this state and a conclusion reached that is directly opposed to appellant's contention herein, and it should be sufficient as to the point to cite: Merchants' C. Agency v. Gopcevic, 23 Cal. App. 217, 137 Pac. 609; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Nellis v. Pacific Bank, 127 Cal. 166, 59 Pac. 830; Cowell v. Snyder, 171 Cal. 294, 152 Pac. 920; Glougie v. Glougie, 174 Cal. 126, 162 Pac. 118; Hicks v. Christeson, 174 Cal. 712, 164 Pac. 395; Doolittle v. McConnell, 174 Pac. 305; Mackroth v. Sladky, 27 Cal. App. 113, 148 Pac. 978; Turner v. Dahnken, 28 Cal. App. 311, 152 Pac. 308.

[2] In this connection, it must be remembered that a claim against an estate is not required to state the facts with all the precision and minuteness required in a complaint, and its sufficiency is not to be tested by the rules of pleading. Pollitz v. Wickersham, 150 Cal. 238, 88 Pac. 911. It would follow that even greater liberality should be shown in allowing amendments than in the ordinary class of cases, provided, of course, that the cause of action be not entirely changed and there be no prejudice to the substantial rights of those opposed in interest to the claimant.

[3] While there was no direct evidence as to the value of the particular kind of service performed, yet it is apparent that it involved no special skill, but was that of ordinary labor, and there was positive testimony as to the reasonable value of unskilled labor. The finding was for less than the amount so declared, and hence it is supported by the evidence.

[4] As to one item, there was an error in the date, and the court permitted an amendment correcting it. Such action of the court cannot be called in question. It is covered by the cases already cited, but we may add Beason v. Western Meat Co., 40 Utah, 398, 124 Pac. 335, wherein the court declared:

"The law is elementary that an allegation of time, under the circumstances of the case, is not controlling, and the party responsible for such an allegation is not bound to prove it literally, but may show the actual transaction, although it occurred at a time other than that alleged. Under such circumstances like those in this case, it is the transaction, rather than the time at which it occurred, that is the material thing."

The point is not worthy of more extended consideration.

There was a mistake, also, in the date of the fourth item. This was immaterial and it was proper to allow it to be corrected. The claim for this service recited, like the first item, that it was "at an agreed price," and the court permitted a similar amendment. This was not error, as we have already pointed out. To the foregoing citations we may add these, to which our attention is called in the brief of respondent: Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53; Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas Co., 164 Cal. 188, 128 Pac. 330.

[5] As to the claim of appellant that no interest should have been allowed, it is admitted by respondent that—

"The general rule in an action upon quantum meruit is that interest is not allowable until the date of judgment."

It is contended by the latter, however, that in an action to establish a claim against an estate the claim, when established, will bear interest from the date of its presentation, since the judgment relates back and takes effect as of that date. This is undoubtedly true. It may be added that, if the claim did not bear interest until the date of the judgment, it would place the claimant who was compelled to sue at a disadvantage with one whose claim is allowed by the executor, for in the latter case there is no doubt that interest is allowable from the time the claim is approved. Section 1494, Code Civ. Proc. It would also afford the executor a financial inducement to reject a proper claim. But the statute itself (section 1504, Code Civ. Proc.) contemplates that, when established by the court, the claim shall be upon the same footing as if allowed by the executor and judge. To be established "in the same manner as if it had been allowed by the executor or administrator and the judge," it must bear interest from the date when it should have been so allowed.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

VAN LOBEN SELS v. PRODUCERS' FRUIT CO. (TIN SAN, Intervener).
(Civ. 1795.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 7, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 139(1)—FARM — LEASE—TITLE TO CROP.

A farm lease, under which lessor was to be paid directly all proceeds of crops sold, held not to invest lessor with ownership of such proceeds, but only to give him right to handle money to secure payment of rent.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 252(1)—CROPS — PURCHASER FROM TENANT—LIABILITY.

Where one purchasing crops from a lessee had knowledge of a covenant in lease that all proceeds of crops sold were to be paid to lessor to secure payment of rent, he did not become liable to lessor by paying proceeds directly to lessee, unless lessee was indebted to lessor.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 136—LEASE—CONSTRUCTION.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 1647, 1656, a lease expressly providing that lessee should keep edges of all ditches, sloughs, roads, lines, or boundaries clean of weeds, etc., held not to require any extraordinary efforts on part of lessee to eradicate Johnson grass on other parts of farm, where there was Johnson grass growing on premises in prior years, although pernicious character of grass was not fully understood at time of execution of lease.

4. PARTIES — 42 — INTERVENTION — TIME.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 387, intervention made prior to trial of any issues of fact and before cause was set for trial, not materially delaying hearing, was made within time.

5. PARTIES — 40(2) — INTERVENTION — RIGHT.

In action by lessor against third person to recover money under provision in lease that proceeds of all farm produce sold were to be paid directly to lessor, defendant having notice of such provision, lessee had a right to intervene and claim ownership of money; object of provision being only to secure payment of rent.

6. INTEREST — 18(2)—UNSETTLED ACCOUNTS.

Interest should not be allowed on an unsettled account.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by P. J. Van Loben Sels against the Producers' Fruit Company, in which Tin San intervenes. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Shinn, C. L. Shinn, and G. Shinn, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, R. L. Shinn, and A. L. Hart, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

PLUMMER, Judge pro tem. On the 1st day of November, 1909, the plaintiff and intervener entered into an agreement of lease whereby the plaintiff leased to the intervener for a period of years 15 acres of reclaimed land situate in the county of Sacramento. A portion of the land was covered by an orchard, and all of it appears to have been susceptible of cultivation and the raising of grain and vegetables. The lease contained the following provisions, which were the subject of consideration by the trial court in this action, to wit: The lessee covenanted that he would annually, and at the proper seasons, in a husbandlike manner, properly prepare and render fit for cultivation all of said tract, etc., and tend and cultivate the same in a first-class, husbandlike manner, and harvest all crops, etc.; that he would keep all the edges of the ditches, sloughs, roads, or any other lines of boundaries of the land clean of weeds, brush, etc.; that the lessee might sell the crops raised on the leased premises, but that the returns for the same should be made directly to the lessor, upon receipt of which the lessor would place the said amounts to the credit of the account of the lessee; that in case of any violation of the conditions of the lease, the lessor at his option might terminate the same, and re-enter and take immediate possession of the premises, and all crops growing thereon should thereupon belong to the lessor. For the purpose of securing proper performance by the lessee of the conditions of the lease, it was further provided that the lessee mortgaged to the lessor all crops of every kind standing, growing, or being upon said premises, or that might during the term of the lease be planted or produced upon said premises, as security and indemnity to the lessor for the performance by the lessee of all and singular the covenants and conditions of the lease, and as security for all sums that might become due to the lessor as damages for the breach of any of the terms of the lease, or otherwise.

In accordance with the terms and provisions of said instrument the intervener took possession of the premises covered by the lease and continued in possession of the same until the month of November, 1914. It appears that during the years preceding 1914 the lessee marketed his crops through the agency of the defendant, and that the defendant made returns directly to the plaintiff in this action, but during the year 1914 made returns directly to Tin San, save and except that sufficient money was turned over to plaintiff to cover the amount specified as the rent to be paid annually under the terms of said lease.

At the conclusion of the cropping season the plaintiff made demand on the defendant for a return of all of the moneys received by it on account of the produce raised by Tin San on the leased premises, and marketed through the agency of the defendant. At about the same time, or before the then balance in the hands of the defendant, being the sum of $1,200, had been paid to Tin San, the intervenor, Tin San, also made demand upon the defendant for the money then in its hands, claiming that there was nothing due from him to the plaintiff, and that the money in the hands of the defendant, save and except the sum of $287, which the intervenor admitted was due and owing to the plaintiff, and which sum, upon the authorization of the intervenor, was by the defendant paid to the plaintiff, leaving in the hands of the defendant the sum of $913, belonged to him.

The plaintiff began an action for the recovery of all sums arising from the crop raised by the intervenor on the leased premises during the year 1914, and marketed through the agency of the defendant, and for an accounting, claiming that he was entitled to have the entire sum paid to him under the provisions of the lease, irrespective of his right to retain the same after its reception; that the ownership of the money was a matter between the plaintiff and Tin San, and that the plaintiff had a right to handle all of the proceeds and make return to Tin San of whatever the plaintiff considered to be due him after deducting all claims made thereon by the plaintiff.

The defendant made answer that plaintiff had informed the defendant that the sum of $1,200 only was the amount due from Tin San to the plaintiff; that the provision of the lease for making returns to the plaintiff was one only for security, and that it did not vest the ownership of the proceeds of the crop in the plaintiff. He brought the money into court and asked that Tin San be made a party to the action, and the ownership of the money determined.

Tin San thereupon filed a complaint in intervention, claiming that there was nothing due from him to the plaintiff, that the sum of $913 paid into court by the defendant belonged to him, and asked judgment therefor. Judgment went for defendant and intervenor, from which judgment plaintiff appeals.

While numerous points are raised, only two questions are really involved in this action and require consideration in the determination of this appeal. The first point made for reversal by the appellant is that under the terms of the lease he was entitled to all moneys received by the defendant on account of produce raised on said premises and sold through defendant's agency by the intervenor; that the provisions of the lease gave him an absolute right to, and an ownership in, said proceeds. Is this contention sound?

[1, 2] By the provisions of the lease it will be observed that the lessee had a right to sell all crops raised on the leased land, and that the return for the same should be made directly to the party of the first part. This is a covenant or condition inserted in the lease and assented to by the plaintiff and intervenor, to which the defendant was not a party, but of which the defendant appears to have had ample notice. However, this condition in the lease does not by its terms, nor by any reasonable construction that can be placed thereon, actually invest the plaintiff with the ownership of the proceeds arising from the sale of the produce raised on the leased premises. The most that can be said for it is that it gave the plaintiff a right to handle the money, and place the amount so received to the credit of the party of the second part named in the lease. The last provision in the lease may also be considered in connection with this contention to determine its meaning, to wit, that portion of the lease which mortgages the crops raised on the leased premises as security for the performance by the lessee of the conditions and covenants contained in the lease.

The conclusion seems to us unescapable that if the clause in the paragraph in the lease, providing that the returns of all sales should be made to the plaintiff, invested him with the ownership of such proceeds, the mortgaging paragraph of the lease has no place in the instrument, because, if the plaintiff or party of the first part in the lease retained ownership, there was nothing left for the party of the second part to mortgage. The two provisions of the lease must be read together, and when so read the making of the returns to the plaintiff, and the mortgaging by the intervenor to the plaintiff of all the crops raised on the premises, evidences only an intent to secure the plaintiff, and not to invest him with ownership in the proceeds. If this conclusion is correct, and the provisions of the lease were for the purpose of securing the plaintiff, and did not invest him with ownership, then, even though the defendant had knowledge of the terms of the lease, the plaintiff suffered no damage by reason of the failure of the defendant to pay over to plaintiff moneys which did not belong to him, unless it be shown that at such period the intervenor, Tin San, was indebted to plaintiff.

[3] This brings us to the second question tendered for consideration. Was the intervenor, Tin San, indebted to the plaintiff? The answer to this question involves the consideration of that portion of the lease as referred to herein, whereby it appears that the lessee agreed that at the proper season he would, in a husbandlike manner, properly prepare for and render fit for cultivation the leased premises, and tend and cultivate the same in the same manner, etc. Under this provision it is contended on the part of the appellant that it was incumbent upon Tin San to eradicate certain Johnson grass standing and growing upon the premises during the year 1914, and for the eradication of which the appellant made a charge considerably in excess of the amount remaining in the hands of the defendant. It may be stated that the plaintiff also made charges for rents, spraying material, and other accounts, aggregating the total sum of $2,029.56, judgment for which amount appellant claims he is entitled to against both the defendant and intervenor. A long series of accounts between the plaintiff and intervenor were submitted to the trial court, which accounts appear upon conflicting evidence to have been settled and determined by the trial court, and need not be considered, save and except as to the charge made for the eradication of the Johnson grass. If it was incumbent upon the intervenor to eradicate the Johnson grass, the judgment of the trial court should be reversed; if not incumbent upon him, then the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed. An examination of the transcript discloses abundant testimony, if believed by the trial court, to establish the fact that there was Johnson grass growing upon the leased premises as early as the year 1906; that it was in evidence during the years 1907, 1908, and 1909, prior to the month of November, when the intervenor took possession. Whether the pernicious character of the Johnson grass was then fully understood does not change the fact of the conditions existing at the time of the execution of the lease. The lease expressly provided that the lessee should keep the edges of all ditches, sloughs, roads, lines, or boundaries clean of weeds, brush, etc., which makes expressly applicable section 1656, Civil Code, which is:

"All things that in law or usage are considered as incidental to a contract, or as necessary to carry it into effect, are implied therefrom, unless some of them are expressly mentioned therein, when all other things of the same class are deemed to be excluded."

Also section 1647, Civil Code:

"A contract may be explained by reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates."

The contract between the plaintiff and the intervenor expressly mentions certain things which must be done in addition to the usual and ordinary cultivation of the premises. It does not appear from either the testimony or the findings of the court that the Johnson grass was in any of the places referred to by this provision of the lease, or that it entered into the contemplation of either the plaintiff or intervenor at the time of its execution; it does not appear, either from the testimony or from the findings of the court, that the intervenor, as lessee, failed or neglected to cultivate the demised premises in the manner usual or customary in the section of the country where the lands are situated; but it does appear that rather large and valuable crops were raised upon said premises during each and every year they were occupied by the lessee, including the year 1914. It does not appear that the plaintiff had made any special effort to eradicate the Johnson grass during the years 1907, 1908, and 1909, while it was known to be growing thereon, and before the intervenor took possession.

The lease between the plaintiff and the intervenor was executed by the plaintiff through the agency of his son, who testifies that the Johnson grass appeared in 1907, which fact must not be lost sight of in determining whether the lease required the lessee to use any extraordinary means in the eradication of the pest not theretofore resorted to by the owner and not specifically mentioned.

It seems to us that the trial court was correct in holding that the lease did not require any extraordinary efforts on the part of the lessee, and that any expense made by the owner in 1914 to completely eradicate the Johnson grass must be borne by himself.

[4, 5] The contention of appellant that this was not a proper case for intervention on the part of Tin San requires no consideration, further than to refer to section 387, Code of Civil Procedure. The intervention was made prior to the trial of any issues of fact, before the cause had been set for trial, and does not appear to have materially, if at all, delayed the hearing. The authorities are too numerous to be mentioned holding that an intervention so made is within time. The ownership of the money in dispute clearly gave the intervenor a right to appear in the action, and the trial court properly so held.

[6] Interest upon the unsettled account between the plaintiff and the intervenor was properly denied. All the other items in the account appear to have been determined by the court upon conflicting testimony, and do not seem to us to require further consideration.

Being of the opinion that the plaintiff suffered no damage by reason of the failure of the defendant to turn over the money involved in this action by reason of the ownership thereof being vested in the intervenor, and that the trial court correctly construed the various provisions of the lease, the judgment of the lower court should be and the same is hereby affirmed.

39 Cal. App. 502

KNIGHT v. BENTEL et al. (Civ. 2872.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 29, 1919.)

1. SALES ⚡397—ACTION TO RECOVER PURCHASE MONEY—EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover money paid for an automobile on the ground that car tendered was not a new one, as contracted for, evidence held sufficient to support findings for plaintiff.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡204(7)—REVIEW—NECESSITY OF OBJECTION BELOW.

Objections to evidence because questions called for conclusions of witnesses cannot be reviewed, where not made in the trial court.

3. SALES ⚡38(1)—CONTRACT FOR SALE OF AUTOMOBILE—FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Seller's statement that a second contract, which he induced buyer to sign, was similar to a prior contract except as to matter of payments when the latter was a lease contract and the former was not, and seller's representation that the second hand car delivered was a new one, held to constitute fraud and deceit.

4. EVIDENCE ⚡590—CREDIBILITY—INTERESTED PARTY.

Where the testimony of defendant's agent was unsatisfactory, evasive, elusive, and apparently not genuine and in conflict with the positive testimony of plaintiff, the court was justified in resolving the conflict in plaintiff's favor in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, relating to witnesses, and section 2061 relating to instruction of juries as to effect and value of evidence.

5. SALES ⚡38(3)—CONTRACT—FRAUD.

The rule that fraud in a sale contract cannot be predicated on a statement of the law applicable to facts equally well known to both parties or upon mere expressions of opinion does not apply to seller's statement that the car sold is a new one or that a dissimilar contract is a similar contract, which are matters of fact.

6. EVIDENCE ⚡68—PRESUMPTIONS—NECESSARY CONSEQUENCES OF ACTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, as to presumptions, the court is not bound by seller's testimony that he "did not intend to deceive," where his actions indicate otherwise.

7. SALES ⚡126(1)—DELIVERY OF GOODS—ACCEPTANCE.

Where plaintiff in the evening accepted an automobile upon plaintiff's false representations as to contract and as to the car being new, and, without opportunity to examine, drove the car some distance, and upon discovery of the fraud on the next morning immediately drove back and returned the car and demanded return of the money, the right to rescission was not waived by using the car after knowledge of the fraud, under Civ. Code, §§ 1689, 3406, and 1691.

8. INTEREST ⚡46(1)—TIME AND COMPUTATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Civ. Code, § 1917, the law awards interest on money only from the time it falls due, which, in case of claim for money paid under sale contract rescinded by the buyer for fraud, is the date of notice of the rescission or demand for repayment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Ellen Stuart Bentley Vance against George R. Bentele and others, in which F. A. Knight, as administrator, was substituted for the plaintiff upon her decease. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

H. C. Millsap, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

F. A. Knight, of Long Beach, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action by Ellen Stuart Bentley, who, since the institution of the action, has died, and which action is now being prosecuted by F. A. Knight, who, by proper order heretofore made and entered, has been substituted as plaintiff in place and stead of said Ellen Stuart Bentley, against the defendants herein. From the record in the case it appears that on January 24, 1914, the said Ellen Stuart Bentley signed an agreement with the defendants whereby she agreed to buy from the defendants a Mercer automobile, for the total price of $3,150, payable $850 at the time of the signing of the contract (payment of which was acknowledged therein), $750 on delivery of the car (which car was to be delivered March 17, 1914), and the balance of the purchase price to be paid in three equal monthly installments. A clause was added to the agreement whereby the defendants were to sell for the plaintiff a Metallurgique car, which the said Ellen Stuart Bentley then owned, as a condition of the contract.

Some time between the signing of the agreement and the 13th day of May, 1914, the defendants sold Mrs. Bentley's Metallurgique automobile for $1,250, which they credited on her contract for the Mercer car as of May 14, 1914. The Mercer car was not delivered on March 17th, nor was any car delivered to her by the defendants herein until May 13, 1914. On May 13, 1914, Mrs. Bentley went to the place of business of the defendants, about dusk, was taken for a short ride in the machine to see how it ran, and, without close examination of the car, accepted the same. The car had no seat on the running board, as provided for in said agreement, and was not of the color called for—"which could be seen at a glance"—but a memorandum was given the said Mrs. Bentley by defendants whereby they, the defendants, agreed that these changes were to be made later. The next morning, upon a closer examination of the car, Mrs. Bentley discovered that it was a secondhand car and had been used and run a great deal. She immediately, on the same day, to wit, May 14, 1914, drove the car back to defendants' place of business, told defendants she refused to accept the car, and demanded the return of her money. Defendants refused to comply with this demand, but told her that they would order a new car. She refused to buy a new car from them, and left the Mercer with the defendants.

Upon making these discoveries, Mrs. Bentley served a notice of rescission of the contract, signed by her, and sued for the return of her money. When the answer of defendants to that suit was filed, they set up an entirely different contract as having been executed by the plaintiff on the day the car was delivered to her, to wit, May 13, 1914. She then demanded an inspection of the original of said document, and claims to have then ascertained, for the first time, that when the car was delivered to her she had signed an entirely different document, which was a "lease" of the automobile. She then remembered the circumstances of having signed the document, and claims that her signature thereto was obtained by a fraud and a trick of the defendants. Mrs. Bentley then dismissed her first suit and served a new notice of rescission of the first agreement and the second document just referred to, and filed her complaint in this action. It is in four counts: The first for money had and received; the second based on failure of consideration; the third based upon partial failure of consideration; and the fourth for the recovery of the money and the revocation of the lease, upon the ground that her signature to the lease was obtained by fraud and trick perpetrated by the defendants. No copy of either of said instruments was given by defendants to plaintiff. Judgment was given for the plaintiff for the recovery of her money, and defendants have appealed to this court for a reversal of that judgment.

It was stipulated at the trial that the defendants had been paid by the said Mrs. Bentley the sum of $2,600, on the following dates: October 27, 1913, $100; January 24, 1914, $750; May 14, 1914 (proceeds from the sale of the Metallurgique car), $1,250; and May 14, 1914, $500.

[1] Defendants challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the trial court. We are satisfied from a careful examination of the record in this case that the evidence abundantly supports the findings of the court. The witness Ruddle is the representative of the defendants with whom Mrs. Bentley had almost all of her business dealings in connection with the purchase, etc., of the car in question. There is no dispute as to the fact that the contract, plaintiff's Exhibit 1, was signed by Mrs. Bentley on January 24, 1914, and that by the terms of that agreement the said Mercer car was to be delivered on or about March 17th of the same year. This was not done. But when Mrs. Bentley heard, some time in May, 1914, that the car had arrived, she went to the place of business of the defendants, which, according to the record, was on May 13, 1914, and about noon of that day. At that time she was told that the car was not ready for delivery; that they were putting on some wire wheels, etc., and agreed to have it ready for delivery at about 4 o'clock that afternoon. It was not ready for delivery, however, until about 5:30 or 6 o'clock. After looking the car over from the outside, without making anything that might be considered an "examination" of it, she was taken out, as has already been set forth herein, for a short ride. She then paid $500 in cash and took the car with her to Long Beach that night. Before this took place, however, there was some talk about payments, and the witness Ruddle said he would arrange it to suit her, and, as she understood it, and as shown by the evidence, the contract of January 24th was modified only as to the amounts of payments and the time when the balance due on the car should be paid. Mrs. Bentley says that Mr. Ruddle said to her:

"Mrs. Bentley, here is a similar contract to the one which you signed previously, only it will make the payments easier for you, and according to your request."

Mrs. Bentley further says that she looked over and read that portion of the same as to payments and accepted Mr. Ruddle's word that it was a "similar contract," and, in answer to a question from the court as to whether she relied on anything else besides that, answered that she did not. In view of the record here, we feel that the attorney for Mrs. Bentley in this case, when writing to defendants under date of May 15, 1914, was correct when he said that their "methods of dealing with Mrs. Bentley in this matter have been so outrageously unbusinesslike and unfair."

There is no conflict in the evidence that Mrs. Bentley was buying a new car, nor is there any conflict in the evidence that the defendants represented to her that they were selling her a new car, and that the car delivered to her on May 13, 1914, was such a car. We are of the opinion that it will not be seriously contended by defendants and appellants here that a car with the "enamel on self-starting lever worn off; dent in bottom of radiator, cut by shock absorber; front of dash dented in, and paint on same knocked off from raising and lowering hood; molding around top of doors and dash showed weatherworn; paint and varnish off the same; right front fender had been bent clear across; where back fender was attached to running board was split, and showed it was an old break, rusted, and had appearance of having been done some time; tool box lid dented up from inside by loose objects carried in the same; water manifold on motor rust-eaten, indicating age; magneto shaft on motor pitted by rust; front axle showed signs of having been heated to straighten; one of the steering knuckles showed signs of having been heated and straightened; there was about a one-sixteenth inch play in the front spindle; hub cap had been dented in and straightened out; spark and gasoline control levers above steering wheel were battered up, showing they had been removed from car; very rotten job of painting, black paint spattered on car from striping; stripes did not lap each other; varnish on car was so green it would leave the imprint of hands where touched; radiator was loose on car"—can be properly designated a "new car." The quoted portion of the foregoing statement is taken verbatim from the evidence in the record, and it stands without contradiction.

It also appears in the record, without conflict, from the testimony of the witness Tisdale, that he (Tisdale) found Mr. Bentel, one of the defendants, "in his office, and asked him when the car would be ready for delivery, and he said, 'I would like to have a day or two longer on the car,' and said there were several things he wanted to have fixed about the car before he delivered it; and asked me if I thought Mrs. Bentley would be willing to let him have this extra time, and I told him I did not think she would. Then he said he would have the work rushed through, and that Mrs. Bentley could have the car at 4 o'clock p. m. the same day, and that any time she brought the car back they would equip it according to specifications. The mechanics at that time were putting wire wheels on the car, and the wheel racks for the spare rims." It is obvious, therefore, that not only was it known to Ruddle, the representative of defendants, but that also one of the partners himself knew the condition of the car to be as already hereinbefore set forth.

It also appears from the evidence that the next day, after discovering said defects in the car, Mrs. Bentley, together with her chauffeur, Tisdale, took the car back to defendants and left it with them. From the record the following significant facts appear:

"Mr. Ruddle and Mrs. Bentley, and myself, after we got to Los Angeles, went over to see Mr. Bentel, and there the following conversation took place: Mrs. Bentley told Mr. Bentel that there was the car; and he asked her what the trouble was, and she proceeded to show him the defects of said car. Mr. Bentel said that these were due to the severe test that the factory had put the car to; and Mrs. Bentley said she did not think a reputable company like the Mercer Company would allow such defects to get by their inspectors; and also told him the car showed signs of being used pretty hard, and that she refused to accept the car under any conditions whatever. Then Mr. Bentel offered to wire the factory for a new car, and for one that would come up to the specifications. Mrs. Bentley refused this offer, saying, 'You have been dishonest with me about this car, and I am not going to give you a chance to be with another.' She asked Mr. Bentel to refund her money she had paid on the car. Mr. Bentel refused to refund the money, but told her that he would put the car in the show window and try to sell it for her, and if he could he would return the $2,600. Mrs. Bentley told him it was defendants' car, and that they had not lived up to their contract, and that she did not want anything more to do with it, excepting to get her money she had paid on it. Mrs. Bentley told Mr. Bentel that she would give him ten days to refund the money, and if he did not do so she would have to enter a suit against him for it."

We might say in passing that said statement made by Mr. Bentel (the quotation just made) remains in the record without contradiction. The statement that the defects above set forth were "due to the severe test that the factory had put the car to" in our opinion is hardly worthy of serious consideration. Had there been any conflict in the evidence, the statement being so unreasonable, the court would have been, we think, justified in disregarding it entirely.

[2] As to alleged errors of law occurring on the trial, we content ourselves with the general statement that, assuming, for the present purpose, without so holding, all of the specifications of error to be well taken, on the face of the record they show that the defendants were not prejudiced thereby. Whatever point might have been made at the time was cured by evidence furnished on cross-examination. Hill v. McCoy, 1 Cal. App. 159, 81 Pac. 1015; Kellam v. Brode, 1 Cal. App. 315, 82 Pac. 213; Bergtholdt v. Porter, 114 Cal. 681, 46 Pac. 738. The point that rulings of the court, to which exceptions 2, 3, and 4 were reserved, were error, because the questions called for mere conclusions of the witness, and not for a statement of fact, is not well taken, because this objection was not advanced in the trial court and appears in this court for the first time. Watrous v. Cunningham, 71 Cal. 30, 11 Pac. 811; People v. McCauley, 45 Cal. 146; People v. Bishop, 134 Cal. 682, 66 Pac. 976.

[3] The witness Ruddle knew about the contract of January 24, 1914; also, of the so-called lease dated May 12, 1914, and of the memorandum given to Mrs. Bentley. If therefore the making of the statement that plaintiff's Exhibit 2 was "similar to the contract" theretofore, and on January 24, 1914, made, except as to the matter of payments, the delivery of the car with the defects already referred to, and telling Mrs. Bentley that it was a new car—and many other statements and acts not necessary to refer to further—do not constitute fraud and deceit, then we are unable to know what kind of case it would be necessary to present in order to establish that fact.

[4] The defendants' case relied almost entirely upon the testimony of the witness Ruddle. Where there was any conflict between his testimony and that of plaintiff's, upon any material point, we are of the opinion, from an examination of the record in this case, that the court was justified in resolving the conflict in favor of the plaintiff. The testimony of the witness Ruddle was very unsatisfactory. It was evasive and elusive and does not have the earmarks of the genuine ring about it. Sections 1847 and 2061, Code Civ. Proc.

[5] There is no doubt at all that, as appellants argue:

"Where the parties to a contract for the sale of personal property do not occupy confidential relations to each other, one of them cannot predicate fraud on the statement of the other as to the law applicable to facts equally well known to both of them, nor upon statements which are but expressions of opinion."

The cases cited by appellants support that contention. But these do not apply to the case at bar. It can hardly be said that the statement that the car here referred to was a new car is one of opinion, or that plaintiff's Exhibit 2 was a "similar contract" to the one signed January 24, 1914, excepting as to payments—particularly in view of the testimony of Ruddle in that respect. In the first case cited (Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 119 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140), the court says:

"Rheingans, therefore, had no inducement, or right, to rely on the statements of Smith, except as to facts of which Rheingans was ignorant, and which he had reason to believe Smith knew, and except, possibly, as to the law based on facts of which he had reason to believe Smith's knowledge was greater than his own."

This applies with great force to the facts in the case at bar.

[6] The appellants contend that there was no intention on the part of defendants to deceive. If the court is bound by the defendant's testimony that he "did not intend to deceive," then the cases cited would apply. But under the facts in this case we think they are not in point. Section 1963, Code Civ. Proc. Here the actions of the defendants speak so much louder than what they said to Mrs. Bentley, that equity will not listen to their present contention.

[7] Appellants contend that there was no claim made in the pleadings, and no evidence offered on the trial, that plaintiff's Exhibit 1 was induced by fraud; and further that, even though the court found that Exhibit 2 was obtained from Mrs. Bentley by fraud of defendants, and the cancellation and rescission of the same actually had, that this did not authorize the court in granting judgment for plaintiff. Appellants urge, in support of this claim: (1) That Mrs. Bentley examined the car; (2) that defendants in no way prevented her from making as full and complete an examination of the car as she desired; (3) that after examining same she found that the car did not comply with the contract; and (4) that after such examination, and with full knowledge of noncompliance with the contract, she accepted and used the car. There is no merit in this contention. The answer to it is that she took the car to Long Beach, relying upon what the defendants said and agreed to do, as set forth in plaintiff's Exhibit 3. At that time no examination, which can rightfully be called such, had been made. The next morning, which was the first opportunity Mrs. Bentley had to make an examination, an examination was made, and the result was the discovery that defendants had perpetrated a colossal fraud upon her, viz., that the consideration had failed, partially, if not altogether; and she did, immediately upon such discovery, what any sensible person would do under the circumstances—returned the car and demanded the return of her money. Section 1689, Civ. Code; Marriner v. Denison, 78 Cal. 202, 20 Pac. 386. No further authorities are considered necessary to support our contention here.

It is further urged by appellants that Mrs. Bentley had waived her right to rescission by using the car after ascertaining that it failed to meet the requirements of the contract. That is a correct statement of the law, but it does not apply here. There is nothing to the point. The car was returned immediately—the same day that the discovery was made. This satisfies the statute. As to rescission, the record here shows that the requirements of the sections of the Civil Code have been fully complied with. Civ. Code, §§ 3406 and 1691; United Motor Co. v. Callander, 30 Cal. App. 41, 157 Pac. 561.

[8] Appellants contend that the allowance by the court to plaintiff of interest on payments made by Mrs. Bentley from the date upon which said payments were made is error. This point is well taken. Hayt v. Bentel, 164 Cal. 680, 130 Pac. 432. The law awards interest on money only from the time it falls due, unless otherwise specifically provided for. Civ. Code, 1917. "Until rescission, or demand for repayment, nothing was due, and interest was not allowable." Hellman v. Merz, 112 Cal. 661, 44 Pac. 1079. The record here discloses the fact that notice of rescission was given May 14, 1914. It follows, therefore, that any interest allowed for any period on any portion of the money paid before that time was not legally a permissible charge.

We believe that the record in this case justifies us in holding that had the trial court arrived at any other judgment than one in favor of the plaintiff, as herein stated, it would have presented one of those inexcusable miscarriages of justice which tend to bring courts into disrepute, and to shake men's faith in the administration of the law. In our opinion, with the single exception noted, the findings are fully supported by the evidence; and there are no other errors of law appearing in the record needing our consideration.

The cause is remanded, with direction to the trial court to modify the judgment by deducting from the amount recovered all sums shown by the findings to have been allowed as interest for any period prior to the 14th day of May, 1914, the date of notice of rescission; and, as so modified, the judgment shall stand affirmed.

It is so ordered.

GADDIS v. GRANT. (Civ. 1942.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 23, 1919.)

1. MORTGAGES ⇨446—COMPLAINT—UNCERTAINTY AS TO AMOUNT OF PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST.

Complaint to recover amount due on promissory note, with interest, and to foreclose mortgage given to secure note, held not demurrable for uncertainty as to amount claimed for interest and for principal, though too much was claimed for interest, and too little for principal; aggregate amount being correct.

2. PLEADING ⇨193(1)—DEMURRER—GROUNDS—BILL OF PARTICULARS.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 454, requiring a party to furnish a copy of an "account" alleged, when demanded in writing by the adverse party, payments made upon promissory note, and items constituting balance due, are merely items of an account, which defendant can demand, and a demurrer for uncertainty does not lie.

3. PLEADING ⇨238(4)—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT—LEAVE—ABSENCE OF DEFENDANT.

Defendant in an action on a note cannot complain that in his absence the court permitted plaintiff to amend his complaint to correct a clerical error in stating the items of principal and interest, leaving unchanged the aggregate amount.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1040(10)—REVERSAL FOR HARMLESS ERROR—OVERRULING DEMURRER.

A judgment right on the merits will not be reversed for error in overruling demurrer to the complaint for ambiguity or uncertainty, where defendant was not misled to his prejudice, and the apparent ambiguity or uncertainty consists of a statement of useless and surplus matters, and the cause of action is fairly apparent from the complaint.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨918(1)—PRESUMPTIONS FAVORING REGULARITY—SERVICE OF AMENDED COMPLAINT.

Nothing appearing to the contrary, it must be presumed on appeal that defendant was served with a copy of the amended complaint, since every intentment is in favor of the regularity of the proceedings and the validity of the judgment.

6. PLEADING ⇨238(2)—AMENDMENT TO CONFORM WITH PROOF—NOTICE AND SERVICE.

Where amendment is made to conform to proof, it is not necessary that notice be given, and not necessary that amendment be served.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1041(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT.

Amendment of complaint on a note to correct an erroneous statement of the relative amounts of principal and interest due, leaving the aggregate amount unchanged, was harmless to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by T. B. Gaddis against William Grant. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Zimdars and Wm. H. Bryan, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Rowan Hardin, of Sonora, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the amount due on a promissory note and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure the payment of the same. Defendant filed a demurrer to the complaint on the grounds:

"That the said complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action," and "that said complaint is uncertain in this: That it does not appear therefrom how much money has been paid, either on account of principal or interest on said promissory note, or in what manner or how the amount of interest stated to be now due and owing on said note is calculated, or how such an amount can be due or payable."

The demurrer was overruled, and, after answer filed by defendant, the cause came on regularly for trial. There was no appearance by or on behalf of appellant at said trial, and, after the evidence on behalf of plaintiff was submitted, the court permitted him to file an amendment to his complaint to correct a clerical error in paragraph 5 thereof as to the respective items of principal and interest, changing the former from $5,500 to $6,000, and the latter from $1,274.20 to $774.20, but leaving the aggregate amount the same. The court thereupon rendered judgment for plaintiff as prayed for, and appellant has appealed from said judgment upon the judgment roll alone. He makes two points: First, that the court erred in overruling his demurrer for uncertainty; and, second, that the court should not have permitted the "filing of the amendment to the complaint without notice to defendant or service upon him." There is no merit whatever in either point, and it is quite apparent that this appeal should never have been taken.

[1, 2] There was no uncertainty as to the amount claimed and alleged for interest and for principal in said paragraph 5 of the complaint, but it did appear from the whole of the pleadings that too much was claimed for interest and too little for principal. The aggregate amount, though, as we have seen, was correct. This shows that the mistake was entirely without prejudice. Besides, the specific allegation as to principal and to interest was entirely unnecessary. It was sufficient to aver that the whole amount was owing and unpaid. The payments made upon a promissory note and the items constituting the balance due are but items of an account, which, if the defendant wants, he can demand in the form of a bill of particulars; but a demurrer for uncertainty is not the remedy. Code Civ. Proc. § 454; Long Beach, etc., v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 401, 67 Pac. 499; Jensen v. Dorr, 159 Cal. 742, 116 Pac. 553.

[3] It may be added that, if appellant had seriously considered his point as possessing any merit, he would, no doubt, have appeared at the trial and shown that the said mistake was made in estimating the amount of the interest. However, the correction was made, notwithstanding he voluntarily absented himself, and he has no cause for complaint because it was made in his absence.

[4] The contention is too trifling for further comment; but, even if the court had committed an error in overruling the demurrer, it would be disregarded under the well-settled rule. A judgment which is right upon the merits will not be reversed for harmless error in overruling a demurrer to the complaint for ambiguity or uncertainty, where the defendant was not misled to his prejudice, and the apparent ambiguity or uncertainty consists of a statement of useless and surplus matters, and the cause of action is fairly apparent from the complaint. Alexander v. Central L. & M. Co., 104 Cal. 532, 38 Pac. 410; Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 Pac. 936; Preston v. Central Cal., etc., Irr. Co., 11 Cal. App. 190, 104 Pac. 462; Krieger v. Feeny, 14 Cal. App. 538, 112 Pac. 901.

[5] There are several answers to the second contention of appellant. In the first place, it must be presumed that he was served with a copy of the amended complaint, since the contrary does not appear. On appeal, of course, every intendment is in favor of the regularity of the proceedings and of the validity of the judgment. If appellant desired to have his contention treated seriously, he should have presented an appropriate record by means of a bill of exceptions. The precise question has been adjudicated adversely to his contention in Livermore v. Webb, 56 Cal. 489; Riverside County v. Stockman, 124 Cal. 222, 56 Pac. 1027; Canadian, etc., Co. v. Clarita, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 672, 74 Pac. 301; Segerstrom v. Scott, 16 Cal. App. 256, 116 Pac. 690.

[6] Besides, where an amendment is made to make the pleadings conform to the proof, it is not necessary that notice thereof be given and not necessary that such amendment be served. Hedstrom v. Union Trust Co., 7 Cal. App. 278, 94 Pac. 386; Ramboz v. Stansbury, 13 Cal. App. 649, 110 Pac. 472.

[7] Manifestly, it is true, also, that the amendment was to correct a clerical error; that it did not affect in the least the cause of action; and that it could not possibly have prejudiced appellant. Blankenship v. Whaley, 142 Cal. 566, 76 Pac. 235; Myers v. Holton, 9 Cal. App. 114, 98 Pac. 197.

In fact, as we have stated, the amendment was in reference to an entirely immaterial matter, and the mistake might have been disregarded, since the judgment was for the proper amount.

It is seldom that an appeal is presented with less of merit to recommend it.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇄201—WRONGFUL REMOVAL OF IMPROVEMENTS—REMEDY.

By purchaser's wrongful severance from the premises of improvements, consisting of house, barn, and windmill, they became personal property, for which an action of claim and delivery by the vendor would lie.

3. REPLEVIN ⇄8(5) — REMOVAL OF IMPROVEMENTS BY VENDEE.

By violating his contract in removing from the premises improvements, consisting of a house, barn, and windmill, the purchaser forfeited his right to the further possession thereof, giving the vendor the right to immediate possession, supporting an action of claim and delivery; and rescission by the vendor, or declaring forfeited the right of the vendee to the further possession of such property, as real property, was not required as a condition precedent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by the Chowchilla Colonization Company and others against H. H. Thompson and others. From judgment for plaintiff, the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for appellant.

F. A. Fee, of Madera, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. On the 30th day of October, 1913, the plaintiff, Chowchilla Colonization Company, a corporation, and the defendant H. H. Thompson, entered into a written contract for the sale of real estate, which contract contained the following provision:

"All buildings and improvements now on said land, other than those belonging to present occupants, if any, or that shall hereafter be placed thereon by any party, shall become a part of the realty and shall not be removed therefrom, but shall be and remain the property of said vendor until this contract shall be fully performed and completed by said vendee."

At the time of the execution of said contract there were no improvements of any kind upon said premises. On said day said defendant paid to plaintiff, Chowchilla Colonization Company, as a part of the consideration for the purchase price of said property described in the contract, the sum of $1,020. The payments of $817.80 falling due on the 11th day of September, 1914, 1915, and 1916, and the interest thereon, were never paid.

In the following months of December and January, defendant Thompson constructed upon said premises a dwelling house, barn, and windmill as described in the complaint herein, and leveled and checked said premises and erected a pumping plant and the necessary wells to irrigate said tract of land, and in the month of January, 1914, said defendant moved upon the premises. His intention at that time was to remain permanently on the place and make his home thereon.

The complaint in the action alleges:

"That on the 17th day of March, 1917, and while the plaintiffs were the owners of said above described property, together with said dwelling house, barn, and windmill thereon situate, the said defendants entered upon said above described premises and unlawfully, wrongfully, maliciously, and without right or authority so to do, and against the will and wish of said plaintiffs, severed from said lot one (1) and removed from off the same the said two-story frame dwelling house, said frame barn, and said windmill, and ever since said 17th day of March, 1917, the said defendants have been in the unlawful and wrongful possession of said property and do now unlawfully and wrongfully detain the same to the damage and injury of plaintiffs in the sum of $1,500, the value of said property, so taken and removed as aforesaid."

The prayer of the complaint was for the possession of said house, barn, and windmill, and, in case delivery thereof could not be made, then for the value thereof and for damages in the sum of $1,000.

The findings of the court were in favor of plaintiffs, and the judgment was for the recovery of the possession of said buildings, or, in case delivery could not be had, then for their value, in the sum of $600; no additional allowance being made specifically for damages.

There is really no dispute as to the facts; the only question being as to whether the plaintiffs have pursued the appropriate remedy. The said provision of the contract, which we have quoted above, is entirely free from uncertainty, and effect should be given to it unless it can be successfully claimed that it is in violation of some provision of the statute or in contravention of public policy. No authority, however, has been cited by appellant to the effect that such provision is not enforceable, and we could with propriety dismiss that consideration without further comment. It may not be improper to recall, however, the general rule, independent of any contract made by the parties, as follows:

"Articles annexed or structures erected by a vendee of land who is in possession by virtue of his contract of purchase, but who has not yet obtained title to the premises, cannot be removed by him without the consent of the vendor, the presumption being, from his interest under his contract and expectation of acquiring absolute title that he intended the articles or structures to become a part of the land." Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, vol. 13, p. 672.

It is equally well settled that the parties themselves may agree as to the character and ownership of the property. The principle has been set forth as follows:

"It is a well-settled rule of law that parties themselves may, by express agreement, fix upon chattels annexed to realty whatever character they may have agreed upon. Property which the law regards as fixtures may be by them considered as personalty, and that which is considered in law as personalty they may regard as a fixture. Whatever may be their agreement, courts will enforce it." Fratt v. Whittier, 58 Cal. 132, 133 (41 Am. Rep. 251).

Furthermore:

"If the contract contains a special provision that, on default of purchaser, the vendor shall be entitled to the improvements made by the purchaser, full effect will be given to such provision, both in law and in equity." 39 Cyc. 1402.

[1] The two facts, therefore, may be deemed settled: First, that said provision constitutes a valid contract and enforceable; and, second, the appellant violated it by removing said buildings from said premises. Indeed, it is admitted that he so violated his contract and that he removed them surreptitiously and at night. The only pretense of a defense to the action is, in effect, that the contract of purchase had not been rescinded by the vendor, nor had said vendor exercised its option to declare the right of appellant to the further possession of the real property forfeited. It is therefore claimed that at the time said defendant was in the rightful possession of the land by the acquiescence of the owner, although the former was in default in the payment of the installments due under said contract. Hence it is argued that the owner was not entitled to the immediate possession of the land, or of the buildings, since they were a part of the land. It is contended that the conclusion follows that the action of claim and delivery will not lie, since there is lacking an important element—the right to the immediate possession of the property.

[2, 3] We are satisfied, however, that the claim is without merit as applied to this particular case. The buildings, it must be remembered, had been separated and removed from the land, and were on the public highway at the time the action was brought. They constituted personal property, and while, technically speaking, the appellant may have been entitled to continue in possession of the land until the contract was rescinded by the owner, yet he had clearly forfeited his right to the further possession of said improvements by virtue of his violation of his agreement to permit said improvements to remain upon and to follow the ownership of said land. It appears plain, therefore, that the right to possession of the land and the right to possession of the improvements were entirely distinct and separate after said buildings were removed. It would be a strange and unjust construction of said provision in the contract to hold that appellant could violate it by removing said buildings, and continue rightfully in possession thereof, simply for the reason that, although for years in default in his payments, no action had been taken to terminate his interest in said real property. We could go further, and say that his removal of said buildings, under such circumstances, in violation of his contract, virtually amounted to an abandonment of the premises, and thereby operated as a rescission upon his part of the contract of sale. The court would have been justified in so finding, and that he had thereby waived any right to further possession of said real property. However, it is not necessary to go that far in upholding the judgment of the court, as it seems entirely clear that, by violating his contract in removing them from the land, he lost and forfeited any right to the further possession of said buildings. The right to the possession would then belong to the vendor as an incident of its ownership to said improvements under the terms of said contract.

In the opening brief of appellant only one decision is cited to uphold his contention, and that is the case of Miller v. Waddingham, 91 Cal. 377, 27 Pac. 750, 13 L. R. A. 680. It is to be observed, however, in that case, that there was no agreement whatever in reference to the improvements. Therein the erection of the buildings formed no part of the consideration for the purchase of the land, and it appeared that the vendee had in no respect failed to comply with the requirements of the contract. In that case a writ of injunction was sought, and it is clear that no sufficient showing was made to warrant the issuance of such writ. In his closing brief appellant cites two other cases in support of his contention, to wit, the case of People's Savings Bank, etc., v. Jones, 114 Cal. 422, 46 Pac. 278, and Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; but neither of these cases involved a situation similar to that before us. In the former, the general principle as announced cannot be questioned, that "to sustain an action of claim and delivery, the plaintiff must have the right to the * * * exclusive possession of the property sought to be recovered at the time of the commencement of the action, and an after-acquired interest will not support the action."

It is to be observed that there was no agreement therein as to said improvements, and they were placed upon the land after the execution of a mortgage upon said premises. The mortgage had been foreclosed, but the time for redemption had not expired. The judgment debtor was therefore in lawful possession of the land, and by removing the buildings he did not violate any contract. The case is entirely distinct from this, although it may be added that, in so far as it holds that the question whether the said improvements constituted fixtures was immaterial, the decision is clearly in conflict with Sands v. Pfeiffer, 10 Cal. 259, wherein it was held, through Mr. Justice Field that—

"A mortgagor, after a sale of the mortgaged premises under a decree in a suit to foreclose the mortgage, has the right to the use and possession of the mortgaged premises until the execution of the sheriff's deed, but he possesses no right to despoil the property of its fixtures. The deed of the sheriff takes effect by relation at the date of the mortgage and passes fixtures subsequently annexed by the mortgagor. By the wrongful severance from the premises, the fixtures become personal property, for the recovery of which an action of replevin will lie by the purchaser after he obtains the sheriff's deed."

Boone v. Templeman, supra, contained no such provision as is found in the contract before us. The action therein was for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, which made time of the essence of the contract. The complaint set forth the undisturbed possession of the premises, part payment, and the offer of full payment before the institution of the action for the execution of a deed, and further stated full and sufficient facts excusing plaintiff's delay, and showing that the vendor had waived his right to demand a forfeiture by the vendee, and the court held that the complaint constituted a cause of action. It is perfectly apparent that, according to the allegations of the complaint, the vendor in that case waived the default of the vendee in failing to make his payments according to the terms of the contract, and the decision was just and equitable, in view of the willingness of the vendee to pay the whole consideration for the property. The question involved is entirely different, as we view it, from the one before us. It may be added that no claim is made herein that the vendee is willing or able to pay the consideration for said real property, nor does it appear that the decision of the lower court is in any manner unjust or inequitable.

In fact, as before indicated, it is a reasonable inference that the vendee has repudiated the contract and abandoned the premises, and has no intention whatever of carrying out his agreement. In fact, a portion of the answer of defendant Thompson in another case brought against him by the plaintiffs was introduced in evidence, in which he averred that he had rescinded said contract and offered to restore everything of value he had received under it. Such, also, is a fair inference from his conduct and from his testimony in this case.

As to any further action by plaintiffs against said defendant under said contract, we are not concerned herein, although we must assume that the court will not permit them to recover more than is just.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem.; HART, J.

HEROLD v. P. H. MATHEWS PAINT HOUSE. (Civ. 2568.)

2. NEGLIGENCE §32(1) — LICENSEES ON PREMISES—DUTY OF CARE.

3. NEGLIGENCE §136(15) — LICENSE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action by plaintiff employé for death of his wife, who fell into an elevator shaft while on defendant's premises to see plaintiff on business purely personal to themselves, question of defendant's negligence held for the jury.

4. NEGLIGENCE §136(26) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action by plaintiff employé for death of his wife, who fell into an elevator shaft while on defendant's premises to see plaintiff on business purely personal to themselves, held, that wife was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Henry Herold against the P. H. Mathews Paint House. From a judgment entered on a verdict directed for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Bradner W. Lee, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action wherein the plaintiff seeks to recover damages on account of the death of his wife, Bertha C. Herold, through injuries alleged to have been caused by negligence of the defendant. By direction of the court the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment rendered on that verdict.

The defendant was in possession of a four-story building, upon the fourth floor of which it maintained a factory. The ground floor was used partly as a warehouse and partly as a retail store. In that part used as a warehouse, which was the rear part of the first floor, there was an elevator running from the basement to the fourth floor. This was a freight elevator, and was moved from floor to floor as the business of the defendant required. It was also customarily used by the employes of the defendant and by such other persons as were permitted to have access to the upper floors. The elevator well was guarded by a gate. In order to bring the elevator to the floor, it was necessary to raise the gate. There was sufficient light so that one could see clearly after one's eyes became accustomed to the light; but a person coming from the bright street, and going back to the portion of the store where the elevator was, would have to remain from three to five minutes before his eyes would become accustomed to the light. The defendant had near its elevator well a drop light, which was burning while defendant's stock clerk was at work, and which was usually turned off during the noon hour. This light, when burning, did not assist any person coming suddenly from the street into the storeroom; as to such person the light made a blur, as does a light in a fog, so that a person coming from the street would have to remain until his eyes became accustomed to the light. The only practical way by which a person could go from the storeroom of defendant's building to the fourth floor was by the elevator. The plaintiff was superintendent of defendant's paint factory, and his place of employment was on the fourth floor.

Pursuant to an arrangement made between the deceased and her husband, she came to see him at the defendant's place of business shortly after noon of the day of the accident. The object of her visit had no relation to the business of the defendant.

Mr. P. H. Mathews was president and general manager of defendant company. James Stone was manager of the store; that is, he was in charge of selling goods on that floor, and customarily gave orders to the other employes in the store, and sometimes in the factory and warehouse, about such things as he wanted to have done. If Mr. Stone was absent, his place was taken by William Brady, another employe of defendant. E. L. Boehme was an employe subordinate to Stone. On several occasions, prior to the day of the accident, Mrs. Herold had visited the plaintiff at the same place of business. On one of those occasions Mr. Stone took her up in the elevator, and on one or two other occasions he instructed other employes to take her up. Mr. Mathews had seen her in the store on one occasion, but it does not appear that he knew that she was taken up in the elevator. No other officer of the company knew that she had ever visited that place of business. Customers of the defendant were not usually taken up to the factory, although that was done on rare occasions.

When Mrs. Herold came into the store on the day of the accident, Mr. Mathews and Mr. Stone were absent. Mr. Brady and Mr. Boehme were in the store. Mrs. Herold asked Brady if she could see Mr. Herold. Brady answered in the affirmative, and told Boehme to take her up in the elevator. The electric light near the elevator was not burning at that time. She followed Boehme back toward the elevator. Boehme threw up the gate, and reached in and pulled on the cable, which was used to raise and lower the elevator. The elevator at that time was at a floor above. Boehme did not tell Mrs. Herold that the elevator was not there—that it was not at the level of the floor. Just as he reached for the rope, she stepped past him through the doorway and fell to the basement.

From the foregoing, which are the principal facts of the case, it must be determined whether or not the court was justified in directing a verdict in favor of the defendant. The defendant joined issue on the main allegations of the complaint relating to the transaction, and also pleaded affirmatively that Mrs. Herold was guilty of contributory negligence.

It is contended by appellant that at the time and place when his wife fell into the elevator shaft she was an invited guest of the defendant, and not there merely by license, and that whether she be regarded as a person present by invitation, or only as a licensee of defendant, yet at all events, since she was on the part of the premises to which defendant's employes had directed her to go, the plaintiff may recover for any damages resulting from her death by the active negligence, or an overt act of negligence, of the defendant, though it might be held the same was neither willful nor wanton. Respondent, on the other hand, contends that the deceased was a mere licensee upon the premises of the defendant, to whom defendant owed no other duty than refraining from inflicting wanton or intentional injury; that Mr. Brady, in granting deceased's request for permission to see her husband, and in requesting Boehme to take her in the elevator, did not impliedly or expressly invite her, either for himself or for his employer, to use the elevator, or enter the defendant's premises; that Brady did not have express, or any other, authority from the defendant to extend invitations on behalf of the defendant to strangers to use the premises of the defendant for business purely personal to themselves; that the defendant owed no duty to her, except to refrain from inflicting on her wanton or willful injury.

[1] For the purposes of the discussion we shall assume, without deciding, that throughout the transaction in question the relation between Mrs. Herold and the defendant was only that of licensee and licensor. We think that, under the facts shown by the evidence, Mr. Brady represented the defendant as the person in charge of the premises, and that his authority extended at least so far that he had the right to admit Mrs. Herold to the premises for the purpose which brought her there. In view of the fact that she could not go to her husband without using the elevator, and in view of the uses to which the elevator was put whenever visitors were allowed access to the upper floors, we think that Brady was also authorized to place Mrs. Herold in charge of another employe for the purpose of taking her up in the elevator.

[2] We readily concede that a mere licensee cannot recover, where the injuries are caused solely by reason of the unsafe condition of the premises, and without any active or overt act of negligence committed against him by the occupant or owner of the premises. That rule, however, does not apply to a case where the licensee is upon the premises of a defendant, and is injured by an overt act of negligence committed against him by the defendant. Where the injury results from such an act, the licensor is responsible. The rule was clearly stated by the First District Court of Appeal in Lucas v. Walker, 22 Cal. App. 296, 134 Pac. 374. A rehearing in that case was asked for, but was denied by the Supreme Court. In that decision (22 Cal. App. at page 302, 134 Pac. 379), the court quoted with approval from the case of Pomponio v. New York, etc., R. Co., 66 Conn. 528, 34 Atl. 491, 32 L. R. A. 530, 50 Am. St. Rep. 124, as follows:

"But, while this is so, it is also true that the landowner must not himself, by what has been called 'his own active negligence,' injure either the licensee or the party invited, while they are upon his land. This is a duty due to both equally. Towards both, in this respect, he is bound to exercise the same amount of care. Both are upon his premises, not as wrongdoers, but by his permission, and, in respect to the duty in question, we know of no good reason why the nature and extent of it should not be the same in cases of license as in cases of invitation."

[3] In the case at bar, upon the evidence presented, we think that the plaintiff was entitled to have the question of defendant's negligence determined by the verdict of the jury, under instructions given in harmony with the rule above stated. Under that evidence the court was in error when it determined, as matter of law, that the acts of Brady and Boehme, taken together with the failure to give warning to Mrs. Herold, did not constitute negligence of an active or overt character, within the meaning of the rule above stated, and that the defendant could not be held responsible therefor. We do not agree that Boehme's failure to warn the deceased of possible danger was merely passive negligence upon his part. Although passive or negative in itself, it may reasonably be considered as part of the overt act of raising the gate, which the jury might have found, under the evidence, was done in such manner as to constitute an implied suggestion to Mrs. Herold that she might safely enter upon the elevator.

Respondent contends that the court must necessarily have concluded from the evidence that Mrs. Herold was guilty of contributory negligence directly and proximately causing the accident, and that the case is governed by the rule announced in Kauffman v. Machin Shirt Co., 167 Cal. 506, 140 Pac. 15. In that action the plaintiff sued for damages for the death of her son, caused by a fall down an elevator shaft. While acting as messenger for his employers to deliver a package to a lessee of the fourth floor of the building, the boy entered the elevator and transported himself to the fourth floor. This was in accordance with the practice of the defendant, who permitted and expected messengers and employes of customers having business in the building to use the elevator. On reaching the fourth floor, the boy found the door to the elevator shaft open and unfastened. He pushed it open about a foot, stepped into the hall, walked to the establishment of the Machin Shirt Company, and returned to the door of the elevator shaft, not more than one minute after he had emerged from the elevator. To all appearances the door and the platform were in the same condition that he had left them; but some one had moved the elevator to another floor. Believing that no change had occurred, the boy stepped into the shaft and fell. The court held that the accident was caused by his contributory negligence. There was no statement that he looked, or that, if he had looked, there was any physical reason why he could not have seen that the elevator had been moved. In the absence of any such showing, the court assumed that to look was to see, and that, if he had looked, he must have noticed the danger. The rule was applied that, while ordinarily the question of negligence is one largely of fact for the consideration of the jury, yet that where the standard of conduct required of persons under given circumstances has been plainly neglected by the person seeking relief, it then becomes a question of law.

[4] Admitting all that was determined in that decision, it does not, as matter of law, appear from the facts in the present case that Mrs. Herold was guilty of contributory negligence. Conceding, for the purposes of the argument, that she was only a licensee, the evidence shows that she was not left alone and on her own responsibility to find her way. The jury might well have found from the evidence that the acts of the defendant's employes constituted a representation to her that it was safe to enter the elevator, and might have found, also, that the condition with respect to light at that time and place was such that she might have looked with reasonable care, and yet might not have seen the danger.

We think that the allegations of the complaint were sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that under the evidence the court was not justified in ordering the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant. The judgment is reversed.

MOORE et al. v. COOKS', WAITERS' &
WAITRESSES' UNION NO. 402 et al.
(Civ. 2064.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 30, 1919.)

1. NUISANCE $\S$ 3(1)—PICKETING BY TRADE UNION—"PRIVATE NUISANCE."

Picketing of plaintiffs' restaurant by defendant unions held an illegal interference with plaintiffs' rights and as to them a "private nuisance."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Private Nuisance.]

2. CONSPIRACY $\S$ 3—PICKETING.

Picketing of plaintiffs' restaurant by unions to induce plaintiffs to unionize the restaurant, by compelling the women employes to pay their dues to defendants' union, held a "conspiracy."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conspiracy.]

3. TORTS $\S$ 10—PICKETING.

Defendant unions held to have no right to maintain "peaceful picketing" in front of plaintiffs' restaurant, to apprise the public that plaintiffs were operating their business in a manner deemed "unfair" by organized labor.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Suit by H. J. Moore and G. S. Moore, partners under the name of Moore's Restaurant, against the Cooks', Waiters' & Waitresses' Union No. 402 and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henning & McGee, of San Diego, for appellants.

Hoff & Chatterson, of San Diego, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of San Diego county to enjoin the defendants from picketing the place of business of the plaintiffs. There is no question as to the facts in the case. The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone. The matter comes to this court squarely upon the law.

It was admitted by the defendants upon the trial, and the court found, that the defendant unions established a picket of plaintiffs' business and maintained a picket patrol in front of their restaurant from the 25th day of February, 1915, until the service of the restraining order in this case on December 7, 1915. The picketing, as the court found, was, in the language of the findings, as follows:

"That the said defendant unions did thereupon establish a boycott of the plaintiffs' business, and place a picket patrol in front of plaintiffs' said place of business on or about the 25th day of February, 1915, during certain hours of each day, until the service of the restraining order in this action, to wit, on December 7, 1915. That said picket, from the 25th day of February, 1915, until early in October, 1915, wore a badge consisting of a white ribbon with the word 'Picket' printed in large black letters, and after said — day of October, the letters were discarded and the badge consisted simply of a plain white ribbon pinned upon her clothing at or near her shoulder and running across her breast; and that at all times said picketing was maintained under conditions of publicity and public notoriety calculated and intended to give notice, and did give notice, to persons passing said place of business, or intending to patronize the same, that said place of business was under boycott, and that its patronage was opposed by organized labor. That there was but one picket at a time, and the patrol was changed twice; the second picket being a man during one day, and the other two pickets being women. That said picket patrol was maintained practically continuously from the said 25th day of February until the 7th day of December, there being an interruption of but two or three days during that time, and was maintained at the noon hours between 11 and 2 o'clock in the day, and between 5 and 7 in the evening, which were the hours of the day when the greatest number of meals were served by the plaintiffs to their customers."

[1] Ours is not a government of liberty under license, but under law. We have the right to do as we please only so long and so far as our so doing does not interfere with the rights of others. When we level up the ravines of low impulses, humble the mountains of pride, straighten the crooked places of deceit, and smooth the rough places of anger and malice and all uncharitableness, it will become so obvious that the conceded acts of defendants were an illegal interference of plaintiffs' rights, that it needs no argument to convince any God-fearing, liberty-loving, home-defending, and humanity-helping individual in this enlightened day of that fact. Such conduct, as disclosed by the record here, we think not only constituted an illegal interference with plaintiffs' rights, but became, and was, as to them, a private nuisance.

[2] The fact that the purpose for which the defendants maintained pickets, as was done here, viz. to induce plaintiffs to unionize said restaurant by compelling the women employes to pay their dues to said union, and to discharge the nonunion cook and employ a union cook in his place, does not justify maintaining a patrol in front of plaintiffs' premises as a means of carrying out their scheme, which is nothing short of a conspiracy—as the court found the fact in the case at bar to be. The admitted facts in the case, we think, disclose "a combination to do injurious acts expressly directed to another, by way of intimidation or constraint, either of himself or of persons employed or seeking to be employed by him," and "is outside of allowable competition, and is unlawful" (Vegehlahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443), and against such "the law will protect the victim and punish the movers of any such combination" (Crump v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 927, 6 S. E. 620, 10 Am. St. Rep. 895). We yield to no court or individual in claiming for and defending to the utmost all the legal rights of trades unions and organized labor generally, but "there is no sanctity in any of these that elevates them above the law, or which confers upon them, or any of them, rights not enjoyed by any other individual or association." Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 103 Pac. 324. Justice is not, and cannot be, justice, if weighed in unequal balances. The test is, not how members of the union act toward one another, but rather how do they act toward the nonunion man?

Peaceful picketing! There is no such thing, if the term is intended to apply to the facts as they are shown to be by the record in the case at bar. We are in full accord with the doctrine enunciated in the case of Atchinson v. Gee (C. C.) 139 Fed. 582, where it is held that "there is and can be no such thing as peaceful picketing, any more than there can be chaste vulgarity, or peaceful mobbing, or lawful lynching." After an exhaustive examination of the decisions of this and other jurisdictions, we are of the opinion that the doctrine laid down by the appellate tribunals of this state is supported by the weight of authority throughout the union; but, regardless of that fact, the point involved in this case has been so often decided, and that adversely to the contentions of appellants here—as is evidenced by the following decisions: Goldberg v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145, 9 Ann. Cas. 1219; Parkinson v. Building Trades Council, 154 Cal. 581, 98 Pac. 1027, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550; Pearce v. Stablemen's Union, supra; Berger v. Superior Court, 175 Cal. 719, 167 Pac. 143—that it would be useless to cite further authorities. In the Berger Case the Supreme Court supported the same doctrine, but refused to support the conclusion of the trial court adjudging the petitioner therein guilty of contempt, when the record did not disclose anywhere "that the person charged is one of the persons or classes enjoined, or acting as the agent or servant of or in * * * combination with them, but only that he had actual knowledge of the terms of the injunction by reason of the service of a copy thereof upon him." That this is a correct statement of the law we think is not debatable.

The court further found "that during the time of said picketing the said pickets patrolled the sidewalk in front of the plaintiffs' place of business the entire width of the restaurant, and near the outer edge of the said sidewalk," and as a conclusion of law held that "the picketing of the plaintiffs' place of business, with instructions to walk up and down the pavement in front thereof, and the patrol of said picket in accordance with said instructions upon the sidewalk in front of plaintiffs' place of business, was and is unlawful, illegal, and a trespass and illegal injury to the property rights of the plaintiffs, and an illegal restraint of trade."

[3] From what has been said here, it follows that, as appellants contend, "the only question involved in the present appeal is the right of organized labor to maintain a 'peaceful picketing' in front of plaintiffs' place of business, so that all members and friends of labor unions may know that plaintiffs are operating their business in a manner that organized labor believe to be 'unfair.'" The entire contention of defendants here is that they have a legal right so to do. We are convinced, from an examination of the record presented to us, that under the law they have no such right, and that the court acted within its jurisdiction in granting the injunction herein.

Judgment affirmed.

39 Cal. App. 440

YUBA MFG. CO. v. STONE. (Civ. 1949.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 23, 1919.)

1. EVIDENCE ⇨434(11) — REPRESENTATION INDUCING EXECUTION OF CONTRACT—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Representation of seller's agent with reference to capacity of tractor or what it would do in the matter of driving rice threshers amounted to no more, although claimed to have been fraudulently made, than an assurance or warranty that tractor would do a certain amount of work, and, being ignored in written contract which warranted tractor to be in good working order and free from latent defects, evidence thereof was not admissible on the theory that it proved fraud inducing execution of contract and avoiding the whole thereof.

2. SALES ⇨260 — "EXPRESS WARRANTY" — WHAT CONSTITUTES.

An "express warranty" means simply an undertaking or covenant that the thing which is the subject of the contract is or is not of a certain quality or capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Express Warranty.]

3. PLEADING ⚡8(15)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS.

The quality, as a warranty, of representation of seller's agent with reference to capacity of tractor or what it would do in the matter of driving rice threshers, would not be changed by alleging that it was fraudulently made.

4. EVIDENCE ⚡441(8) — PAROL EVIDENCE — WARRANTIES NOT SHOWN BY WRITING.

Where the parties have reduced their agreement of sale to writing, they are conclusively presumed to have exhibited therein all the covenants and conditions as to the quality and capacity of the thing sold which are binding upon the vendor.

5. EVIDENCE ⚡434(8)—FRAUD — RELATION TO MATTER IN CONTRACT.

To show fraud that might vitiate the apparent contract of the parties, the fraud must relate to and be connected with the agreement which is the basis of the action.

6. TRIAL ⚡388(2)—FINDINGS—NECESSITY.

Where fraudulent representation set up by defendant buyer as grounds for rescission was immaterial so that cross-complaint failed to state a cause of action but did state a defense based upon plaintiff's breach of warranty in written contract, the only material issues were of legal cognizance, and there was no necessity for specific findings by the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by the Yuba Manufacturing Company against Edward Stone. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. A. Wetmore and M. T. Brittan, both of Marysville, for appellant.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the sum of $2,244.10 upon a promissory note and book account, the complaint being in two counts.

The pleadings in the case show that plaintiff sold to defendant a tractor, known as a Yuba "Ball Tread," on or about the 12th day of March, 1915, for the total sum of $3,055, and that the tractor was purchased under a written contract, which is set forth in defendant's answer and cross-complaint.

The promissory note sued upon was one of several notes given in payment of the purchase price of the tractor, and the book account was for supplies furnished for said tractor and labor performed thereon by the plaintiff. The answer and cross-complaint of defendant admits the execution of the notes but attempts to set up a defense and cause of action against plaintiff, first, for breach of the warranty contained in said contract, and, secondly, for rescission of the contract and for damages on account of fraudulent representations made by plaintiff to defendant for the purpose of inducing, and which did induce, him to purchase said tractor.

The cause was tried before a jury and a verdict rendered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $2,070, and the appeal is taken from the judgment on a bill of exceptions.

The transcript does not purport to show the entire evidence, but the record is sufficient to present the points relied upon by appellant for a reversal.
